"Only the cake an' jelly an' canned peaches an' stuff, an' those stupid ol' quilts an things," said the girl with spirit. "Those women are all 's mad as wet hens because the quilt with red stars got the blue ribbon over the one with yellow moons on it, an' they pretty near come to a scrap over those two big fruit-cakes. One of 'em's got white roses made out o' tissue paper round the edge, an' the other's got a bride on top made out of sugar, with a real veil an' bouquet. It's awful cute."

"A bride made out of sugar must be pretty sweet," said David, smacking his lips and smiling down into the pretty foolish face at his side. "But I know somebody that'll be a heap sweeter—when she's a bride."

"Oh, Mis-ter Whitcomb!" breathed the girl, the pink brightening in her round cheeks. "But, of course, you meant — her. She is awful good-lookin'."

"No; I didn't mean—her," said David, laughing outright. "I meant you, Jennie."

The girl looked down and bit her lips in pretty confusion. Then she sighed.

"I shan't never be a bride, I guess," she said mournfully.

"Why not? I'd like to know."

"Because—I— If we're goin' out o' here, I guess we'd better be movin'. Folks is lookin' at us."

"I have no objections," David said coolly. "Let 'em look."

"It was that insurance man that's stayin' t' the Eagle," whispered the girl. "I don't like him a bit. He was right behind us; but he's over there now, lookin' at those sofa-pillows."

"You mean Todd? Oh, Todd's all right. He's a good fellow."

"I don't like him snoopin' 'round just the same. He's got eyes like a gimblet; 'n' he looks at you like he was tryin' t' find out what you had for breakfas'. Gus says he's a tight-wad, too. He don't spen' nothin', 'xcept you or somebody treats him."

"He's welcome to all he gets out of me," drawled David. "Do you like your ice-cream mixed or straight, Jennie?"

"I guess maybe you'll think I'm kind o' funny, but I like those little round pancakes folded around like a cornucopia with v'nilla ice-cream inside. They're awful good."

"All right; we'll partake of cornucopias, to begin with. Perhaps we'll work around to the other kinds after the races."

"Oh, are there goin' to be races?" asked Jennie, nibbling prettily at the edges of the cone sparsely filled with vanilla ice-cream, which the scarlet-faced man who presided over the gasoline stove and its adjacent can of cold stuff, handed her with a wipe of his sticky fingers on a long-suffering apron-front.

"Get onto Gus, will you?" she whispered, as she bridled, laughed, blushed and giggled by turns, under the baleful light of Mr. Bamber's pale green eyes. "I 'xpect he'll kill me jus' the minute he gets a chance. Gus hates you, did you know it, Mr. Whitcomb?"

"Hates me? Why should he? I'm sure I've given the fellow tips enough," David said arrogantly.

All the light went out of the girl's blue eyes.

"You've given me 'tips,' as you call them, too," she said soberly. "Do you want to know what I've done with 'em? I jus' hated to take money from you; but I didn't know what else t' do, so I——"

"Well, what did you do with the munificent sums I've bestowed on you from time to time?" inquired David good-humoredly. "I'd really like to know."

The girl had finished her ice-cream, leathery receptacle and all. She began pulling on her white cotton gloves.

"Let's go outside, where Gus can't see us, an' I'll show you," she whispered.

"We'll go up to the grand-stand,"

A Great "Queen"

Horse Story

"KATE and QUEEN"

By Prof. Jesse Beery
King of Horse Trainers

Equals the famous "Black Beauty" in human interest—surpasses it in practicability. "Kate" a victim of poor handling is vividly contrasted with "Queen" who was more fortunate. You sympathize with one—rejoice with the other—even as you sigh for the slum waif and laugh with the child of fortune.

Prof. Beery has skillfully woven into this intensely interesting and true story, many valuable suggestions for handling horses—a result of a lifetime's experience.

Special Offer to Horsemen

Prof. Beery desires that every horse owner, trainer, breeder—everyone interested in horses—should read this great story. To make it possible, for a short time he offers every interested horseman a copy, worth $1.00, for the remarkably low price of

25c Postpaid

If you have even a passing interest in horses—if you own, train or breed them, you will gather from it a fund of knowledge worth many times the small price. Send for a copy today. Enclose stamps or coin.

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER

David proposed. "One of my horses is going to race," he added magnificently, "and you shall bet on him. Would you like to? I'll pay, of course, if you lose."

"Isn't betting kind o' wicked?" asked the girl innocently. "The Meth'dist minister said it was. Me an' Gus went t' church an' heard a sermon las' Sunday night."

"Nothing would be wicked for you," decided David, "except to throw yourself away on that greasy little cad, Bamber. Promise me you won't, Jennie. You're about ten times too pretty for such a chap."

"I told you I wasn't goin' t' marry him b'fore," murmured the girl. "I—I couldn't."

She pulled off her white cotton glove and spread her short-fingered, blunt little hand for his inspection.

"There!" she whispered, "I didn't never 'xpect you'd see it. But that's what I've bought with all the money you've give me for makin' your toast the way you like it an' your coffee an' all. I'm goin' t' keep it always, t' remember you by."

David glanced carelessly at the pink little hand with its close-clipped, shallow nails and stubbed finger-tips.

"Do you mean—that?" he asked, touching the trumpery little ring with its circle of blue stones, which glittered on the third finger.

"Yes," breathed the girl. "You—you ain't—mad, are you? I—wanted somethin' t' keep always, t' put me in mind o' you, when—I can't do things f'r you no more; I love t' do things f'r you, an' I don't s'pose I'll always have the chance, after—after she——"

David felt a sudden moisture in his eyes. There was something touching, lovely, pathetic about this innocent, unasking love. He felt a little proud of his own understanding of it. Almost unavoidably, too, there came to his remembrance Barbara's proud refusal to wear the costly ring he had urged upon her acceptance.

"I am not angry, dear little girl," he said gently. "But I wish the keepsake was better, more worth while."

"One of the stones did come out," confessed the girl, "but I had it put back in; 'n' I'm only goin' t' wear it f'r best."

David's hand was fumbling in his pocket.

"I bought a ring for—a certain young lady," he said bitterly, "and she didn't like it—or me—well enough to wear it. I wonder what you'd think of a ring like that?"

He thrust the white velvet case into her hands with a carelessly magnificent gesture of disdain.

"Do you mean for me to—to look at it?" asked the girl uncertainly.

"Yes, of course; look at it and tell me what you think about it."

The girl's face was a study as the sunshine leaped in a burst of dazzling colors from the imbedded gem.

"Oh!" she cried passionately. "Oh—my!"

"Do you like it?" asked David morosely. "Do you think it's pretty enough for a girl to wear?"

"Pretty enough? Oh—I——"

She snapped the case shut.

"Take it, please. I—I'm sorry you showed it to me."

"Why?"

"Because—I shan't like this—this cheap thing any more. It—isn't fit to remember you by. It—isn't like you, the same's this one is."

His face flushed. He bent toward her eagerly.

"Give me the little blue ring, Jennie; I'd like to keep it—just to remind me that there is a woman in the world who loved to do things for me—that's what you said, and I shan't forget it in a hurry."

She pulled the ring from her hand with a listless gesture.

"You c'n have it, if you want it," she said.

She swallowed hard, her childish lips trembling piteously.

"I shan't care 'bout it no more."

"Try the other one on and see if it fits," said David. "I've been carrying it about in my pocket for a couple of months. She wouldn't have it, and I swore I wouldn't offer it to her again. Take it, and wear it—or sell it; I don't care what you do with it."

The girl trembled, her round blue eyes on his face.

"Honestly and truly, do you mean it?" she whispered. "I'm almost afraid; it—it's so—lovely!"

"Put it on," ordered David, frowning.

He was thinking confusedly of Barbara, of her coldness, her capriciousness, her bad temper, as he chose to term her rather pitiful attempts to curb his own lawlessness. It suddenly appeared to David that he had been abused, made light of, almost insulted, of late. What other construction could he put upon Barbara's behavior that very afternoon? He still loved her, of course; but her treatment of him certainly merited this tardy reprisal.

The Best in Its Line

I want to thank you for the beautiful Bible Dictionary premium. It was beyond my expectations. We consider each department of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the best in its line, and sincerely hope it may continue to improve for many years to come. M. A. H.

Anamosa, Ia.

For Your Protection
These Standard Marks

Our business for fifty years has been the making of solid gold and gold-filled watch cases—not the works of a watch, but the case. Our trade-marks stamped in a watch case have always meant absolute integrity in assay and bullion value.

When you buy a gold watch from a reliable jeweler the chances are that you get one of our cases. If not, then you probably pay the price of our case and get something else.

That is the thing you want to find out.

When a jeweler points to the words stamped inside a case "Guaranteed for 25 years" or "20 years," remember that a guarantee means nothing of itself. Your guide is the integrity of the maker back of the case. Some day there will be a law regulating meaningless guarantees. At present there is nothing to prevent an irresponsible maker from guaranteeing for a period of years a watch case made of base metal and washed with gold.

Every Good jeweler knows our marks and the quality of our cases. They are made for ladies' and men's watches—plain, engine-turned, engraved or enameled. All sizes, all patterns.

Modern Methods of Advertisers

DO YOU answer the advertisements in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD? If you have never done so, try it once, and you will be amazed at the care taken by advertisers to conserve the interests of their customers. You will also probably notice that their method of address is along the line of retaining you as a long-time customer.

The modern advertiser is as anxious to retain your trade as is the merchant in your own town. Advertisers realize that their business after all depends upon satisfied customers, and they therefore make the greatest effort to please new customers. We have known of many cases where advertisers have gone far out of the way to satisfy a customer where a misunderstanding has arisen, merely with the idea that the long-run attitude is the best after all.

No advertiser who expects to remain a long time in business can afford to be satisfied with transient trade. Some of our advertisers were in business long before many of our subscribers were born, and expect their firm names to continue long after our present subscribers shall have passed away.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement. This guarantee does not apply to investment advertisements.

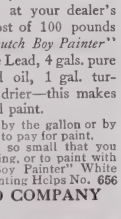
A second short flax crop keeps linseed oil up, but the increase in price in pure white lead paint is not so great as you may fear.

Get at your dealer's the cost of 100 pounds of "Dutch Boy Painter" White Lead, 4 gals. pure linseed oil, 1 gal. turpentine, 1 pint turpentine drier—this makes 8 gallons of old-fashioned paint.



Compare this cost, either by the gallon or by the job, with what you used to pay for paint.

Questions and Answers

M. B. L., Union Falls, N. Y. Have been reading Robinson Crusoe, and wish you to tell me whether you know anything late about the situation of the place on the Pacific?

Crusoe's Island, which Defoe describes in his famous book, is said to be Juan Fernandez, one of a group of three volcanic islets in the Pacific Ocean, about 380 miles west of Valparaiso, Chile. It has a few German and Chilian inhabitants. The original of Crusoe was Alexander Selkirk, a sailor, who was marooned on the island some two hundred years ago. It is out of the line of ocean travel.

Reader, Pen Argyl, Pa. Would it not be a wise plan to print the Scriptures or a portion thereof—for instance, the Four Gospels, or the New Testament—in large clear type, such as juvenile story books and readers are printed in? We have, of course, simplified descriptions of Bible characters, but would not a volume printed as before stated be a great help to that end?

There are already published many excellent books on the Scriptures for the use of the young. The Child's Bible is one which is in language within the comprehension of the child. The Story Bible, by Margaret Sangster, published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is another which we can recommend as especially suited to the juvenile mind. You can procure it for $1.

Reader. What is the origin of the name of the city of Quebec, Can.?

Some etymologists claim that the word Quebec arose from the expression of welcome, kepek, used by the original occupants of this site in greeting Jacques Cartier. Others have traced the origin to the exclamation Quel bec (What a cape!) of the Norman sailors, on their first glimpse of the rocky promontory. It is found in the writings of Champlain. "We came to anchor at Quebec, which means in the language of the Micmac Indians straits or narrowing of a river." Charlevoix writes: "Above the Island of Orleans the river narrows all at once to such an extent that in front of Quebec it is not more than a mile wide." According to Rev. J. M. Bellenger, an old missionary to whom the Micmac language was familiar, "Quebec" came from the word Kebeque, which the Indian guides called "the narrowing of the water, formed by two tongues of land protruding into the river." The Abenaquis Indians named it Quelibec, which means "that which is closed."

R. C. A., Loveland, Col. We would not advise you to argue on religious questions with one whose mind is apparently made up in advance and who distorts Scripture in support of his position. The best Bible scholars hold the view that future probation cannot be sustained by Scriptural proof. In the passage John 12: 32, it was meant to convey that wherever the cross was lifted up, Christ the Saviour, who died for the sins of the world, would draw all men unto him. There is nothing in the Gospels or the Epistles on which to base belief in future probation.

P. B., Arlington, Ind. 1. If one has done another an injury and repents, should he give proof of his repentance by asking forgiveness of the offended one?

Yes. It is well to confess our faults in this manner. How could we expect some offended friend to forgive us, unless we first apologized and expressed our regret? How can we expect our Father's forgiveness if we ourselves do not show true contrition and take the necessary steps to right the wrong? There are, however, some faults that are better confessed to God alone, and the revealing of which could do little if any good to others. But such a confession must be followed by works meet for repentance; that is, by a sincere effort, with God's help, to live a clean and blameless life thereafter.

Subscriber, Chester County, Pa. Is the day which we celebrate as Christmas (December 25) the real anniversary of the birth of Christ, or did his birth occur at some other time of the year?

The exact day and the month of Jesus' birth cannot be ascertained from the New Testament, nor from any other authentic source. In the early years of the Church the day believed to be that of the Nativity was marked by special observance (like a Sabbath Day) among Christian communities, but the wider celebration began about the second century A.D. during the reign of the Emperor Commodus. The Christmas festival proper, as we know it, is of even later origin. Some writers have pronounced it a transformation of the old heathen Saturnalia, which occurred in the winter months and which was replaced by the cycle of Christian holidays.

W. W. G., Viola, Kan. Why has not the question of the use of the Bible and moral instruction in the public schools been appealed to the United States Supreme Court?

Because it is regarded as a State question, to be decided by the State courts. The subject was thoroughly reviewed in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a year ago, during the controversy in Illinois.

I H C Cream Harvesters

Look over the I H C separators they are using every day. Then consider these facts:—

The wearing out of parts and many other cream separator troubles are largely due to dust and milk getting into the gears. I H C Cream Harvesters are the only separators with dust and milk proof gears which are easily accessible. A glance at an I H C will show you this great feature. I H C Cream Harvesters are protected against wear at all points by phosphor bronze bushings—not cast iron or brass bushings. I H C Cream Harvesters are constructed with larger spindles, shafts and bearings than any other separator. The I H C bowl is free from slots or minute crevices, which make it remarkably easy to clean. There are many other advantages which any I H C owner or the local dealer will point out and prove to you. I H C Cream Harvesters are made in two styles—Dairymaid—a chain drive machine, and Bluebell—a gear drive separator—each in four sizes. In justice to yourself, see an I H C owner or the local dealer before you decide on any separator. If you prefer, write for catalogues and all information.

D. C. W., Wytheville, Va. 1. Have we a right to believe that October, 1914, is the year and month for the millennium to dawn, and are the "times of the Gentiles" fulfilled then? 2. Do we know that the Scriptures are all fulfilled up to this time?

The subject of prophecy is one concerning which many books have been written, yet few, if any, of them are satisfactory. Various distinguished Bible scholars in former years have predicted the beginning of the millennium for dates which have long since passed, and have interpreted various prophecies as being fulfilled. That many have been fulfilled, is beyond question. Others have yet to come. Christ himself said, speaking of the end of the age, that "of that day and hour no man knoweth, not even the Son, but the Father" (Matt. 24: 36). See also Acts 1: 7.

Mrs. J. C. W., Safe Harbor, Pa. By whom was the Book of Ruth written?

Date and authorship are uncertain, although the Talmud attributes the book to Samuel. It is supposed to have been written about the time David's house was established on the throne.

C. L. D., Oxford, N. H. Was Jonah a real prophet or only an imaginary personage?

He was an actual person, the son of Amittai, and the fifth in order of the minor Hebrew prophets. He is recognized in history as the same person who is spoken of in II. Kings 14: 25. His birthplace was Gath-hepher, in the tribe of Zebulun, and he lived and prophesied about 820 B.C., in the reign of Jeroboam II.

B. K., Rittman, O. I would like to become a Christian, but there is Scripture which seems to make it appear that salvation is not for all.

Christ himself said: "Whosoever will, may come." His salvation is freely offered to all who will believe, and who walk in his footsteps and strive, with God's help, to follow him. There are many passages which assure us of the universality of the Gospel offer. It is for all people (Luke 2: 10, 11, 31, 32); every creature (Mark 16: 15; Col. 1: 23; Luke 6: 47; 12: 8). See also Acts 2: 21; Rom. 10, 13; John 6: 35, and other related passages.

M. C. C., Denver, Col. Can you tell me the hymn that was sung which is mentioned in Matt. 26: 30?

It is supposed to have been the latter part of the Hallel, a series of Psalms which were usually sung or chanted by the Jews on the night of the Passover, including parts of Psalms 113, 114 and 118.

W. B. C., Washington, D. C. You say, "A resolve is not equivalent to conversion." How, then, can it be true that any one who will, can become a Christian?

To resolve is one thing; to carry out that resolution, even if one should slip and slide in the effort, is another. The resolve must be followed in good faith, but with God's help, by sincere effort. Thus, one may resolve to do a certain act, yet, because it demands self-denial and even self-abasement, it may never be done. When a sinner accepts Christ in faith as his Saviour, his own will, which has carried him to the point of acceptance, finds reenforcement in the Divine will and his prayer becomes "not my will, but thy will; not my way but thy way." Conversion, the turning-point, may be reached in a moment; progress in the Christian life may occupy months and even years. In some cases which we have known, the transformation seemed almost instantaneous and miraculous; yet the mere observer can tell little of the struggle that may be going on within. Paul himself had a besetting sin, which he constantly fought; he called himself the chief of sinners and his life, though one of the most glorious in a spiritual sense, was a long battle to the end. It makes no difference, however, whether the fight be long or short. He in whom we trust will not allow us to fall utterly. He will give us victory in the end, if we only trust in him.

C. H. H., Hampton, Ia. 1. Explain Luke 22: 44. Some think Christ did not sweat drops of blood. 2. Is there such a thing as a law of opposites, such as heaven and hell, right and wrong? 3. Why use the goat and sheep to represent final judgment?

1. The passage says: "His sweat was, as it were, great drops of blood," meaning that they were wrung from him in agony. There are said to be well-authenticated cases of diapedesis, or "bloody sweat," recorded in the medical books. 2. There is law both in the natural and spiritual world. Man, through conscience, is gifted with the power to distinguish between right and wrong, good and evil. We cannot say how far such a law has its equivalent. 3. The scapegoat, under the Mosaic dispensation, was chosen as the burden-bearer of the people's sins and driven to the wilderness, while the lamb was offered as a temple sacrifice. This distinction between goats and sheep is carried all through the Scriptures to typify impurity and innocence.

Miscellaneous

Subscriber, Nebraska. If you send address, your questions will be personally answered.

Will J. R. C., Pleasant Hill, Mo., send name and address to M. Lester, 34 Battle Avenue, White Plains, N. Y.?

J. N., Saratoga, N. Y. The use of the X sign is simply a contraction. It is not employed by any reverent person.

Reader, Wacousta, Mich. There are many places which offer the advantages you desire. South Carolina, Florida and Virginia may be mentioned. We cannot advise in detail, but you must be cautious in making your selection, both as to location and title.

R. G. E., New Stanton, Pa. Your letter, or that part of it which refers to Church division, is dealt with in our Editorial Forum of February 15. We heartily agree with you in your characterization of the Church's indifferent attitude on the liquor question.

TO THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

I have received your Calendar and the portrait of Dr. Klopsch, for whom I held the highest regards for his love to poor children and for suffering humanity, and hope that Mont-Lawn may be a monument to perpetuate his name as long as time lasts. Yours truly,

JOHN NEWMAN.

A Notable S. S. Collection

Many churches and Sunday Schools are doing excellent work for the China sufferers. The Sabbath School Bode of Paterson, N. J., from various Sunday Schools and societies in the Christian Reformed Church in America has collected the sum of $122.54. The Bode asks only a penny from each child, but often receives much more. The publisher calls his plan a "Cents Collect" for China.

Answered Prayers

C. R. B., Quebec, testifies to the heavenly Father's kindness in answering prayer.

N. L. C., Stafford, Kan. "The good God answered my prayers."

A. S. C., Augusta, Me. "I firmly believe in prayer; mine has been heard."

E. W. B., Sherrard, Ill. "I wish to acknowledge many blessings received through prayer."

E. McE., Bowling Green, Ky. "Praise be to the heavenly Father! My prayer was heard."

E. E. S., Florida. "Love God and trust in him; he will aid you. My prayers were rewarded."

Constant Reader, Soldier, Kan. "I asked for the healing of a loved one and his sufferings have subsided."

(Mrs.) E. G. H., Nashville, Ark. "A loved one has been restored to us. Praise be to our heavenly Father!"

Mrs. D. E., Conconully, Wash. "In three instances God has granted my requests. Praise to his holy name!"

(Mrs.) A. M. K., Greenspring, O. "One very dear to me was sick, but I prayed, and she has been restored to perfect health."

E. B., Gouverneur, N. Y. "My husband was sick, I prayed and he recovered; I am thankful."

S. K. P., Elmira, N. Y. "I was in great trouble and anxiety, but my heavenly Father heard my prayer and relieved me."

N. M. R., Trenton, Mo. "I was threatened with the return of a grievous bodily ailment, but through prayer it has been averted."

Subscriber, Ashland, Pa. "Not only has God answered my prayers for spiritual good, but he has also materially assisted me."

Mrs. A. B. R., Dickey, N. D. "I was at the point of death, but I put faith in God and prayed to him and he has restored my health."

Mrs. R., W. Carrollton, O. "I have been restored to health and I want to thank my heavenly Father for his goodness. Praise his name!"

DEAR CHRISTIAN HERALD:

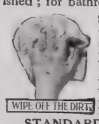
I think the Children's Paradise endowed as a perpetual monument to its founder would be the wish of Dr. Klopsch. What a grand monument it would be for him! Yours truly,

MRS. ABIGAIL LOVEJOY.

SANITAS

THE WASHABLE WALL COVERING

Start early—now—to plan your decorating for this Spring.



If you wait until later you won't be able to give the time and thought you should to selecting the best wall coverings and the most effective decorative schemes. Haste never gets the best results.

By all means get samples of Sanitas no matter what kind of an interior you plan to decorate, or redecorate.

Sanitas reproductions of the finest wall papers and wall covering fabrics are really handsomer than these materials themselves, and Sanitas is proof against fading, cracking, tearing, and only a damp cloth is ever needed to remove all dust, dirt or stains.

Illustration gives a hint of a Sanitas bedroom, with a cut-out floral border—pasted on. This is one of the latest decorative schemes.

Sanitas designs for living interiors are dull finished; for bathrooms, kitchens and pantries, glazed tile finish.

WIPE OFF THE DIRT

Your dealer or decorator will show you Sanitas and demonstrate its wonderful service qualities. Or write us your needs fully, describing the room or rooms you wish to decorate, and you will receive suitable Sanitas samples & interior sketches free.

IT'S FOOD

That Restores and Makes Health Possible.

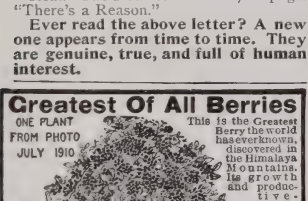
There are stomach specialists as well as eye and ear and other specialists.

One of these told a young lady, of New Brunswick, N. J., to quit medicines and eat Grape-Nuts. She says:

"For about 12 months I suffered severely with gastritis. I was unable to retain much of anything on my stomach, and consequently was compelled to give up my occupation.

"I took quantities of medicine, and had an idea I was dieting, but I continued to suffer, and soon lost 15 pounds in weight. I was depressed in spirits and lost interest in everything generally. My mind was so affected that it was impossible to become interested in even the lightest reading matter.

"After suffering for months I decided to go to a stomach specialist. He put me on Grape-Nuts and my health began to improve immediately. It was the keynote of a new life.



"I found that I had been eating too much starchy food which I did not digest, and that the cereals which I had tried had been too heavy. I soon proved that it is not the quantity of food that one eats, but the quality.

"In a few weeks I was able to go back to my old business of doing clerical work. I have continued to eat Grape-Nuts for both the morning and the evening meal. I wake in the morning with a clear mind and feel rested. I regained my lost weight in a short time. I am well and happy again and owe it to Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Greatest Of All Berries

This is the Greatest Berry the world has ever known, discovered in the Himalaya Mountains. Its growth and productiveness is simply marvelous. It is perfectly hardy everywhere and grows from 80 to 100 feet in a season and can be trained on arbors or trellises of any kind.

The Engraving shows one Plant from photo July 1, 1910, which is trained to a large trellis loaded with fruit, and continued bearing until October.

The Fruits is black, almost seedless and the large luscious Berries borne in enormous clusters will literally melt in your mouth. It is unsurpassed for eating fresh, cooked, canned or preserved in any form and is the Greatest of all Berries for all Climates.

Everybody can and will grow this Great Berry for it is the easiest Fruit in the world to grow, is splendid for city people or any one with limited space, for it can be trained up from the ground like a tree producing Berries from 8 to 4 months, growing larger and producing more Fruit each year.

We guarantee this the Greatest of all new Fruits and can produce facts no one can get away from.

Beware of imitations. Giant Himalaya is a family by itself and highly valued wherever grown. The English Himalaya or Plants raised from seeds cannot be relied upon for fruit or hardiness. Our plants are from tested parent stock. Complete satisfaction guaranteed.

Instructions for cultivation with a booklet of results for using in many ways free with all orders.

Strong plants 30c each, 3 for 60c, 6 for $1.00, 15 for $2.00, 25 for $3.00, postpaid.

OUR COMFORT CORNER

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Why Do You Worry?

"WHY do I worry? Because I cannot help it. You would worry if you were in my place." How many times has this little conversation been repeated, one friend chiding another for the puckered brow and frowning look, the mood of depression and the anxious, wearied, care-worn slump of mind and body together, incidental to a habit of worry. True, it is easy to say to one who is overborne by the burdens she is bearing, that worry will make her load no lighter. She knows this, yet while she concedes that worry is doing no good, she goes on as if she were climbing a hill and slipping back at every step or groping through a thick fog, unable to free herself from the smothering clutch of this fiend. Three-fourths of the women patients in a certain insane asylum were said to have reached their morbid estate and the loss of mental balance through the influence of worry. Worry is really waste. It wastes nervous tissue, is the enemy of happiness, and a prolific cause and aggravation of ill health.

We worry, it may be, about the house and the furniture. We worry over the mud that should have been left on the door-mat and is brought over the door-sill. We worry over the roast that is over or underdone. If a cup is broken, we are as much distressed as we ought to be if a bit of the ceiling had fallen. We worry over the weather. For some of us it is invariably too hot, too cold, too wet or too dry. We worry over what the neighbors think, over what they may say about us, or over the behavior of their children or their dogs. These are among the slighter causes of worry.

We worry about our health. A transient disturbance of the liver throws us into panic, and we forebode all sorts of direful catastrophes. The least cold is supposed to be the advancing flag of tuberculosis. Indeed, there is literally no end to the worries that march in like an invading army when once a hitherto sane individual begins to indulge needless anxiety about the oncoming of disease. Years ago, a good physician said to me, "Never let yourself worry over disease. It is the nature of disease to get well." This was good counsel.

Lost Accomplishments

THERE are women among the readers of this page who look back regretfully on lost accomplishments and waning powers. They have dropped into the whirl of housekeeping, have been caught and held and have done nothing else. Others there are with as much to do, as many children to care for and with means as small, who have resolutely raised a barrier against the waste of their mental powers and have continued to take in new ideas.

I can think of the wife of a minister who taught her boys Latin and prepared them for college over the mending basket and the kneading board. I remember a woman who amid varying fortunes, including a battle with real poverty, never intermitted her piano practice. She is beyond sixty to-day, and her playing is up to date, so that she can still not only find delight in it herself, but is able to add much pleasure to a social evening, and at any time can aid at a concert, if required. Were it necessary she could teach as thoroughly and successfully as the youngest recruit in the ranks. Do not permit moth and rust to invade the field of your life, dear sister woman. If you have already done so, change the situation at once.

Afternoon Tea

THE custom of afternoon tea is firmly established among our sensible cousins in the British Isles. Not only by way of entertaining guests, but as a family refreshment, the tea-tray is brought in with its accompaniments of thin bread and butter, scones or small cakes, and gathered around it there is a restful half hour which is one of the pleasantest features of the entire day. Afternoon tea is not limited in England to the enjoyment of women. John Bull is much less nervous than Brother Jonathan, and much more ready to take his ease at regular intervals. In business offices the tea-tray is seen to appear as regularly as it does in the home. Several years ago a woman journalist came over from London on an errand for her paper. Talking with her at a luncheon which was given in her honor, I inquired what had seemed to her most remarkable in our bustling New York. She replied, without an instant's hesitation, "The most extraordinary thing is how you all manage to live and work without your tea in the afternoon."

As a social function, nothing is easier, simpler, and, on the whole, more delightful than the meeting of friends at afternoon tea. If you have a guest whom you wish your friends to meet, you have only to send your visiting card by the post to the ladies of your circle, with, shall we say, "Wednesday from four till six, to meet Mrs. Blank," written upon it. The friends who accept will promptly appear at four. At the door they will leave cards for both hostess and guest. If they cannot attend, they will see that their cards are mailed in time to be delivered on Wednesday afternoon before six. Nothing need be written on these cards, although an intimate friend may, if she choose, send a personal message of regret on the back of her card. Conventionally, this is not needed.

What Shall I Read?

"I SUPPOSE I am more than middle aged, although I do not feel so. I am several years beyond fifty, and for the first time since girlhood I have a free foot, money enough to spend in doing as I choose, and not a soul to say yes or no to my decisions. I have thought over routes of travel, but cannot be sure what to do first. Shall I go to Europe? If I go what books should I read, in order to enjoy myself to the full in the old countries across the water? I may go to California. What would you advise me to study before seeking that lovely land of fruit and flowers? Let me whisper that I am not fond of reading and that I find most books very stupid, but if I have a thing to do I make up my mind and go at it firmly."

This fortunate lady will certainly be envied by numbers of her less independent sisters. What shall she read? Who is ready to advise her? My own opinion is that when a woman frankly admits that books bore her, she might as well let them alone, but this view may not commend itself to my readers, who are now at liberty to speak in meeting. I imagine that bright and chatty books of travel or books in the form of fiction would prove the better choice for this friend than treatises of profounder learning.

Notes of Invitation

THE important feature of an invitation is first that it shall be accurate in its mention of time, place and occasion. An invitation must not be vague and indefinite. If you want your friend to come to luncheon on Thursday, at one o'clock, say so plainly, and if you do not mean the Thursday following the Monday or Tuesday on which you write, add the day of the month to the day of the week. An invitation to dinner should mention the precise hour at which dinner will be served. It may be written in the third person or in the first, but the more cordial manner is the latter. If the invitation is to a week-end let the friend receiving it understand whether her presence is desired on Friday or on Saturday, and if she is to come by train send her a time table. Tell her which train will be the most convenient and agreeable, and state whether or not she will be met at the station on its arrival. Next to definiteness the most desirable quality in a note of invitation is a cordial tone. Invitations should never be tepid and half-hearted. For ordinary afternoon teas and receptions a lady usually sends her visiting card with the day and hours when she will be at home written across the top of the card or in the lower left-hand corner. If the function is formal enough to justify so much trouble and expense, or if she is at home on certain days during a succession of weeks, the indication is engraved in the lower left-hand corner.

A Word for Sugar

PURE candy is good for children. Pure sugar is good for grown people. Of course, there are exceptions to every rule. If the doctor prescribes a diet and orders a patient to refrain from sweets, the patient is bound to obey his adviser. What is the use of calling a physician and paying him for suggestions if the latter are treated with indifference? People in ordinary health need not be afraid to gratify an appetite which craves sweets. Those who have looked into the matter have been telling us lately that soldiers on the march hold out better if they have rations of sugar than if their food omits this useful commodity. A fondness for sugar is often a defense against the temptation to use alcoholic stimulants. The inebriate does not care very much about pure sweets.

Sugar, by the way, is almost the only incorruptible article of food in the market. It keeps in any climate and this cannot be said of many dietary articles. Of course, discretion must be used as to the time and amount when candy is given to children. The best time for such indulgence is immediately after a meal, not before it. If surfeited with sweets there will be no room left for wholesome food of other varieties. Children who have plenty of fresh air will bring to the table a good appetite for soup, meat, and potatoes, and they would much better have fruit, raw or cooked, and pure candy by way of dessert than rich pastry and plum cake.

$2618 Profit Per Acre

On a patch of ground containing 840 square feet, C. C. Woodruff, of Illinois, raised produce that netted him $51.34—or at the rate of $2618 per acre. He probably could not have made that much on a full acre, but his figures go to show how many ways there are to make and save money in the ordinary small garden. There is money in back yards.

If Your Garden Isn't Producing Good Profit It's Not the Garden's Fault

There is a gold mine in your garden if you know how to find it. You don't have to seek far or work hard to locate it. You simply have to know a few things, either by experience or from some one who is an expert garden-miner. One of the latter now offers to owners of small gardens the new booklet written to show you how to get produce and profits out of your garden. Hundreds and thousands of people have done it—men like Chas. C. Woodruff, of Illinois, who raised fifty-five dollars' worth of produce on 840 square feet of ground—at the rate of $2,805 worth per acre a season; or H. S. Weber, a Pennsylvania gardener, who figured his year's receipts on a patch of seven acres at $1,700.

Read these subject headings that occur here and there in this great little book, and then read how you can get it at a bargain:

"Locating the Garden Mine," "Small Areas Most Profitable," "The Secret of Drawing Fertility from the Air," "Planting Pointers," "Methods of Keeping Moisture in Soils," "Storing for High Winter Prices," "$500 Annually per Acre" (from Celery), "Sweet Potatoes a Paying Specialty," "How to Market Vegetables," etc., etc.

Reduce the Cost of Living

If you raise no garden vegetables for market, you can still raise them for your own table; it is amazing how even a tiny back yard can cut down huckster bills. All it needs is intelligent care and a handbook that is especially adapted for money-making in small patches of ground—in other words, "Garden Gold."

There is only one way to get this new and valuable work, and that is with Farm Journal.

Farm Journal comes once a month, and each copy is a kind of little brother to "Garden Gold." It is an intimate, friendly, neighborly sort of paper with well written departments that will appeal to every member of your family. Every page is full of the soundest, most practical reading, the most helpful information on gardening, poultry, horses, berries, fruit, the dairy, and all the multitude of farm interests. A splendid new series of articles called "Back to the Soil," by city people who have actually gone to the country, and who give the most absorbing accounts of their successes or failures. Farm Journal is the standard agricultural paper of the world. Has 750,000 subscribers already, and insists on a full million. Regardless of what you may think now, it is the paper for you if you have a back yard, a berry patch, a fruit tree, a few hens, or any patch of ground as large as a napkin. Unlike any other paper.

Methodism's Modern Prophets*

THE wonderful progress of Christianity in India, especially in the Oudh district, is due to no one man or woman—to no one sect or group—and yet in the providence of God, it is to the Methodist denomination and to the distinguished hero of this lesson that the chief credit should go. It is no small credit to him, also, that his famous sister, Isabella Thoburn, founder of the girls' college at Lucknow, was persuaded by him to begin her great work.

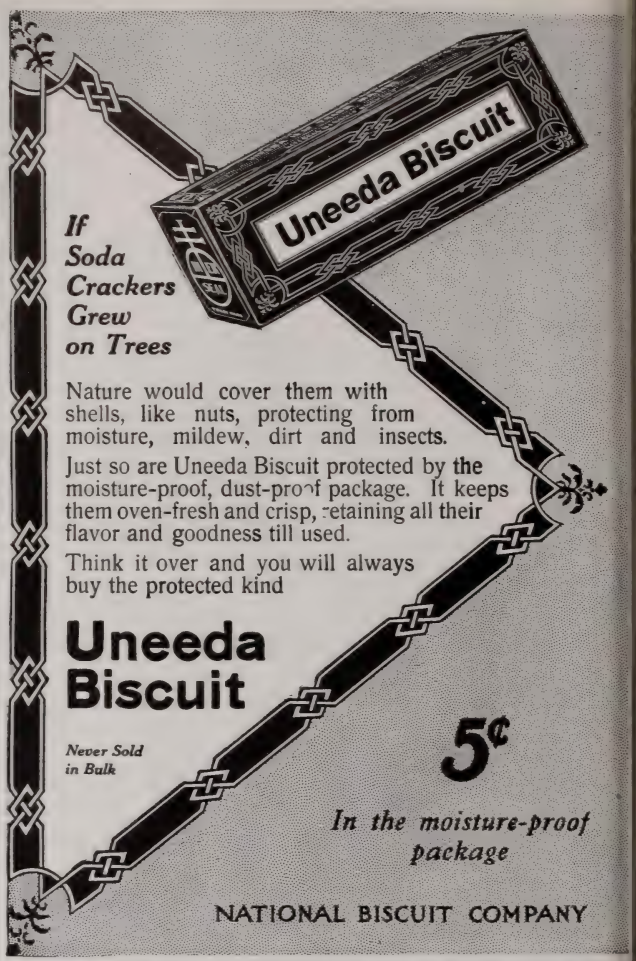
Dr. William Butler and his wife were the first Methodist missionaries at Bareilly. It was sunk in the darkness of heathenism. On the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the great Oudh mission, there were 185,000 Christians enrolled there; 141,000 Sunday School scholars; 231 men and 104 women missionaries; 979 teachers; 277 members of native conferences; 55 high schools; and four colleges. Surely God has wrought a great work in this important district, and Bishop Thoburn bore a manful part therein.

In some way or other, this keen and far-sighted man has pierced the languid, dull torpor of aged India, and has infused no one knows how much of Christian, Occidental energy into hundreds and thousands of her people. For one thing, he remembered the services of Dr. Gabriel Boughton, the noble English surgeon, who in 1636 cured the sick daughter of a powerful Mogul.

He remembered that Dr. Boughton opened the great trade of Coromandel to England by asking, instead of any personal reward, this privilege for his country; and having seen what a physician had done in one case (and probably in more) Bishop Thoburn reasoned that it might have equal power in another. It is said to have been largely owing to his influence that the first woman medical missionary, Dr. Clara Swain, was sent from America in 1869. This event signalized an epoch in missionary history.

The English empire, though not extended over all India until almost a hundred years later, began with the winning by Clive of the battle of Plassey in 1757. Up to that time the East India Company had befriended the missionaries. Now the English policy was reversed. Missionaries were forbidden the land. Native idolatries were encouraged. "English soldiers were even obliged," says Mrs. Mason, "to make a show of reverence before heathen shrines."

This lack of direct aid from the government has been a serious drawback to the work of Christ in India. All the more honor then to Butler, Parker, Taylor and Thoburn for the great work they have done there—a work of which a Brahman lawyer wrote: "My brethren, it were madness to shut our eyes to the fact that Christianity has come to India. It is not a passing episode; it is a mighty, conquering spiritual power, come to stay and repeat its victories."



No wonder that the Brahmans were alarmed, when Bishop Thoburn could write: "We entered Calcutta in 1872 without a dollar. We had not a member in all that great city to receive us. Bishop Taylor preached for months in a suburban chapel, kindly lent by a Baptist missionary, but his labors were mostly confined to private houses. We held on, and now we have the largest place of worship in India and the largest congregation."

Read the delightful book mentioned in the notes, and you will realize afresh what a great work has been done by the consecrated hero whom we honor to-day. Perhaps the desire may come to you to imitate his example.

"A TALE OF TEN CITIES"

MOBRIDGE, South Dakota—
grew faster in three years than Omaha in ten years; railroad center on Missouri River where the new line begins—branch lines from here are feeders to main lines; has car shops, storage depots, other railway properties. Surrounding territory rich in agricultural resources—ideal manufacturing, distributing point. A Missouri River city.

McLAUGHLIN, South Dakota—
important junction point. Branch road 200 miles long here joins main line, opening rich, new territory to north. Center of large cattle business. Hay may be cut on open prairie in this fertile region, to become vast wheat field. Has bank, stores, lumber yards, substantial houses, and coming summer will see most rapid development.

County seat, division point, in heart of recently opened Sioux Reservation, where 16,000 American farmers took up homestead lands last October. Ten thousand of these farms will be put under cultivation this year. National Bank, resources $100,000; State Bank with $25,000; churches, schoolhouses, newspapers, elevators, stock yards. Building lots selling as high as $1,000 each. Our properties abut on Main Street.

LEMMON, South Dakota—
Named for G. E. Lemmon. One of the most remarkable towns in Northwest. At age of two years was incorporated city, with mayor, aldermen, auditor, assessor, city attorney, city engineer, chief of police, street commissioner, fire department, school board, and a park. Has three banks, one $400,000 resources; municipal waterworks, electric lighting plant, long distance and local 'phone service, three churches, good schools, hospital, three newspapers, theatre, six hotels, four grain elevators.

HETTINGER, North Dakota—
County seat; center fertile farming country, settled 50 miles north, 65 miles south, all tributary to Hettinger. Four banks, five grain elevators, $14,000 public school, three exceptionally good hotels, six lumber yards, good merchandise stores, opera house, auditorium, three churches, active Commercial Club, State Experimental Station nearby. Hettinger's pride is its substantial brick and stone business blocks.

REEDER, North Dakota—
Beautiful townsite, with wide trade territory. Center of rich farming community—wheat, fruits, live stock are most important product; lignite coal and tile clay here; three banks, five lumber yards, churches, schools, newspapers, four grain elevators, automobile livery, soda bottling works. Commercial Club trying to make Reeder county seat.

ROUNDUP, Montana—
on Musselshell River; mining and agricultural center—unlimited supply of good coal. Pay rolls at mines $100,000 month. Railway Company invested $1,000,000 in coal lands here. Farmers raise small grains, fruit, cattle, sheep. Building stone and timber plentiful. Roundup has waterworks, electric light, fire department, modern schools, local and long distance 'phones, banks, hotels,—conveniences and improvements of cities four times its size.

THREE FORKS, Montana—
Lewis-Clark expedition camped here in 1805. Confluence of the Gallatin, Madison, Jefferson Rivers, forming Missouri. Meeting point of four valleys; richest agricultural lands, intervening mountains contain great mineral wealth; natural trade center. Early French traders here met Indians, who came with furs in canoes down these streams. Town established September, 1908; now a division terminal on the C. M. & P. S. Ry., also a station on the Northern Pacific. From here branch of the C. M. & P. S. Ry. is projected to Yellowstone National Park; electric line to Bozeman just put in operation.

DEER LODGE, Montana—
County seat. Connection point of the C. M. & P. S. Ry. and Northern Pacific. Location of Montana State College; famous for its beautiful homes, shady trees and lawns. Here are car shops of the new C. M. & P. S. Ry., employing several hundred men; electric lighting plant, two gravity water supply systems, sewer system, fine schools, college, churches, court house, public library; rich in surrounding copper mines, timber and agricultural wealth. Becoming home of many employees of copper industries at Butte and Anaconda.

ST. MARIES, Idaho—
at confluence of beautiful St. Maries and St. Joe Rivers, steamboat navigation to Cœur d'Alene country; $60,000 brick business blocks, $20,000 schoolhouse; one $17,000 and one $10,000 bank building; big saw mills, supplied from largest body of white pine timber in the world, south of city, reached by branch of C. M. & P. S. Ry.—electric lights, gravity water-works, water power; copper, lead and silver deposits being developed in neighborhood; rich bottom lands produce enormous crops. Ideal climate, abundant rainfall—310,000 acres of Indian lands adjoining town just opened to white settlers.

Laying the Last Rail on New $123,000,000.00 Railway to the Pacific Coast—Opening to Settlement a Territory Twice as Large as New York State

40 Cents a Day Buys Five Large Building Lots, One in Each of Five of the Most Rapidly Growing Young Cities in the Northwest, Chosen from 229 New Towns on the Newest, Shortest, Best Transcontinental Railway

THIS proposition is entirely new. It is made by the only corporation in America formed to cooperate with the great railway systems in developing new towns along their lines—not "boom" towns or cities on paper.

Our investment plan is new, scientific. That great economic principle—the Law of Averages—the foundation of all life and fire insurance business, has by us for the first time been applied to real estate investments, thereby dividing risk of loss, multiplying probability of profit, minimizing hazard, and practically eliminating speculation.

Greatest Engineering Feat

CHRISTIAN HERALD already has told the story of the building, by the great Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, of its "Extension"—the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound—from the Missouri River through the Dakotas, Montana, Idaho and Washington, to Seattle and Tacoma; the shortest road, by 152 miles, between the Great Lakes and Pacific tidewater.

Reaches Uncle Sam's Last Farm

While the road was building, thousands of settlers moved in and took possession of millions of acres of agricultural, grazing, timber and coal lands. When, in a few weeks, fast passenger service is established, the greatest migration in our history will begin. The road is now open, clear through, to passenger and freight traffic. Land values will rise with the tide of immigration. Many fortunes already have been made from the appreciation of land values.

"Looking Backward"

If you had gone out over the Central Pacific, Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific, or Great Northern Railroad, the first year any of them was opened; had examined the possibilities for growth possessed by each new town, you could have picked five or ten cities in which it would have been safe to buy, close in, for, say $125, a building lot in each town, that since then would have doubled in value many times. You might have made a mistake in one or two towns, but you could not have gone wrong on the whole number.

The president of Northwest Townsite Company was the first passenger over the new road, from Chicago to Seattle. He spent two months in studying the new towns and their probable future, and was given every opportunity for gaining information. We finally bought, for spot cash, land in the ten towns described on this page—towns that look as if they may be Denvers or Omahas some day.

These towns are "preferred risks," chosen as if one had taken the same number of people, (229) just as they came along the street; had submitted each one to a rigid medical examination, and because of infirmity, youth, old age, bad habits or bad history, rejected all but ten. The robust persons would be the safest to insure. The ten sturdiest towns have the best prospects for growth, hence are safest to invest in.

Put Your Eggs in Five Baskets

This was our first application of the Law of Averages. The next was like it. We decided not to offer for sale our land in any one of these towns, but we do now offer to sell, to a limited number of persons, in one transaction, for $625, one large, choice building lot in each of five of these ten best towns. This is an average of $125 a lot. And we will sell all five for $25 down and $10 a month (40 cents a day for each working day), without interest on deferred payments.

You have five years in which to pay for your lots. Each lot will be deeded as fast as paid for. We pay all taxes until lots are deeded. We give a Warranty Deed, with Abstract of Title, for each lot. The prices charged are at present actual local market values. The leading National Bank in each town is agent for our property there, and will confirm our valuations. Only one of our ten towns is more than three years old. Ought they not to double in population and in land values during the next five years?

Investment Insurance Feature

If the purchaser of an allotment of five lots dies before completing his purchase, we will deed the lots, free and clear, to his next of kin, if one-half of the purchase price has been paid.

Two or more persons can buy an allotment of five lots as partners, thus making the monthly payments easier for each.

Every one of our towns, when we invested there, was either a County Seat, division point or junction point on the new road, and possessed banks, newspapers, solid business blocks and other permanent features. And each was an industrial center, where some vast natural resource was being developed. Our land adjoins the most settled, built-up portion of each town, and the principal streets and avenues have been continued directly through our property. Upon several of the tracts substantial buildings already have been built.

Moses*

THIS greatest of leaders and lawgivers is known in history by many different names. Clement of Alexandria says that his original Hebrew name was Joachim. In the Vulgate, he is known as Moyses. Chaeveren (as quoted by Josephus) calls him Tisithen; Manetho (also in Josephus) speaks of him as Osarsiph (saved by Osiris), and there are many others.

In the Pseudoepigraphus Codex of Fabricius are fragments of three apocryphal books by Moses: The Prayers of Moses; The Apocalypse of Moses; and The Ascension of Moses.

In Scripture, he is alluded to in Psalms and Chronicles as "the man of God"; in Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua and Psalms, as "the slave of Jehovah"; and, again in Psalms, as "the chosen." In reading your Bible through in course (as every member of this society should do as often as once in each two years) notice how many times Moses is referred to. You will be surprised at the number. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis places Moses above all the other heroes of the Scriptures, excepting Paul. He accounts these two as among the five greatest men that have ever lived.

It is an interesting fact that a Jewish proverb, equivalent to our own, "the darkest hour comes just before the dawn," has been made from the life of Moses. It is, "When the tale of bricks is doubled, then comes Moses."

It seemed a reckless thing that Jochebed should have chosen so frail a substance as papyrus out of which to make the little ark in which she was to commit her baby to the mercy of the waters; but we understand it when we learn that papyrus was supposed to be a protection from the crocodiles, the plague of the River Nile.

Traditions bear out the intimations of the Scripture that the child was very comely. It is even written that his beauty was so great that passersby were transfixed as they beheld him, and laborers left their work to steal a glance at him.

Many of the great characters of the Bible were not only intellectual and noble, but also handsome. Joseph, David, Solomon, the beloved disciple, and many others were recorded as possessing remarkable beauty.

It is supposed that the tender-hearted princess to whom we owe the preservation of the great Jewish leader, was Asiat (Arabic form of the name) the wife of Chenephres, King of Memphis. She had no child. Hence her delight at finding Moses. Another inference (this is by the distinguished scholar Osburn) from the monuments recently uncovered, is that she was Thonoris, daughter of the famous Sesostris-Rameses. This daughter inherited her father's ability and became the reigning queen after the death of her only brother. It is recorded that she reigned long and well.

In Jude 9, we read of a contention between the Archangel Michael and the devil over the body of Moses. Our Scriptures give us no clue to the reference; but Origen mentions an apocryphal book called The Ascension of Moses. Fabricius has preserved for us the substance of this book, and from it we gather that the allusion of Jude was to an attempt to deify Moses and worship his body. As idolatry had to be hard fought by the early Christians, the figure can be readily understood.

By all means learn the beautiful poem by Mrs. C. F. Alexander upon "The Burial of Moses." Simple as it is, it is counted one of the ornaments of sacred literature.

With JAP-A-LAC In One Short Night, You'll Have the Whole Room Spick and Bright

Perhaps you would like to have a new library; your old oak furniture may be somewhat out of date, and dingy by this time.

All you have to do is wash it with warm water and soap during the day, order some Dead Black Jap-a-lac (Flemish finish), and when your husband comes home at night, give the bookcases, chairs, tables and picture frames a thorough coat.

In the morning you will have as charming and pleasing a room as though you'd gone downtown and bought a complete new outfit. It will cost you so little in both time and money that to hesitate is to waste.

You Can't Keep House Without

JAP-A-LAC

Made in 18 Colors and Natural (Clear)

Renews everything from cellar to garret

For hardwood floors; for restoring linoleum; for wainscoating rooms; for re-coating worn-out tin and zinc bath tubs; for brightening woodwork of all sorts; for coating pantry shelves and kitchen tables; for varnishing pictures and gilding picture frames when thinned with turpentine; for restoring go-carts and wagons; for decorating flower pots and jardiniere stands; for re-painting trunks; for restoring chairs, tables, iron beds, bookcases, and for a thousand and one uses, all of which are described and explained in a little book which you can have for a little request on a post card.

For sale everywhere—it wears forever. Look for the name Glidden as well as the name Jap-a-lac. There is no substitute.

A Wonderful Wedding Cake

NO international marriage in New York City since the wedding of the Duke of Marlborough and Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt has attracted so much attention as that of Miss Vivien Gould and John Graham Horsley de la Poer Beresford, D.S.O., Fifth Baron Decies.

Miss Gould wore a very simple wedding gown of white satin, the body and skirt quite plain. The bride's voluminous veil of tulle was caught all over her very dark, low coiffure in little puffs and a little frill effect with small sprays of orange blossoms, and she carried a large sheaf of Ascension lilies tied with broad white ribbon. She wore only one ornament, a la valliere of diamonds about four inches square suspended from a chain of diamonds. There were more than 200 stones in this ornament, and all were Beresford family jewels.

Lord Decies wore the full dress uniform of his regiment, the Seventh Hussars, of which he is a major. The uniform was gorgeous in its dark blue cloth with touches of red and masses of gold cords and emblems. Across his breast were medals of the Distinguished Service Order, the Knighthood of St. George, the Knighthood of the Bath and the Knighthood of the Thistle, and his service medals, awarded for distinguished service.

One of the most interesting things connected with the event was the wedding cake.

Three countries contributed to the making of this wonderful confection, and the story of this interesting international alliance has been cleverly told in allegorical form.

The cake has been built in three stories, the lowest one being the largest; the second one somewhat smaller and the top one still the smaller. The two upper stories are supported by Parian marble columns, brought over from Scotland.

Surrounding the first story are cupid standard or torch bearers, each carrying a tiny electric bulb. In front and somewhat ahead of the others, stands a herald, announcing with brass trumpet, the nuptials. On a candied cushion rests the Gould-Decies cipher and the bridegroom's crest. In front of this two tiny bisque slippers tied with orange blossoms and filled with rice, carry out the traditional "old shoe and shower of rice" idea. Just to the side is a marble ladder, on which a smiling cupid is climbing to ring the bells and proclaim his victory. Above the little electrics are bisque birds, imported from Germany, each carrying a bunch of orange blossoms in its beak. Topping all sits a cupid's orchestra, which, by the way, is one of the most novel affairs imaginable. Each one is playing some brass instrument. White rosebuds and orange blossoms are placed wherever possible. Over it all is an illusion veil of ice.

Called Higher

Samuel P. Whistler, of Yonkers, N. Y., was recently called higher.

Elizabeth Ann Pye (88), a native of Nyack, N. Y., passed away in Los Angeles, Calif.

William Birdsall (81), for over twenty years reader of this paper, died at North Jackson, Pa., January 8, regretted by many friends. He was a man of strong will and self-reliant character.

Mrs. George B. Forrester, Brooklyn, N. Y., an earnest Christian worker, passed to her reward on Christmas night. She was interested in philanthropic undertakings and was a member of the Baptist Church.

Rev. R. T. Armstrong (90), Newburg, Ind., has been called home after an active labor of forty years, as a minister of the Gospel in the Presbyterian Church. The scene of most of his work was in Ohio and Missouri.

I want to add my opinion in regard to the memorial to our dear Dr. Klopsch. I welcome the idea heartily of making Mont-Lawn a permanent memorial to his memory. May God bless every effort to perpetuate the work he so lovingly and successfully conducted.

Manchester, N. H. MRS. CLARA LULL.

We are asking these questions of newspaper readers everywhere

This particular advertisement and others to the same effect were inserted in 107 newspapers ——the first steps in a national campaign for an ideal—the ideal of true democracy.

COLLIER'S has already received several thousand replies from this.

COLLIER'S will run through 1911 what we hope will be the most epoch-making series of articles ever published ——a broad treatment of the newspaper situation in America.

Part of the series has been written by Will Irwin—after months of travel and personal investigation

——but the main portion, editorially sifted and crystallized, is written by the American Public itself.

This preliminary advertisement will give an idea of the scope of our purpose.

We want the readers of the "Christian Herald" to help us. We offer you a prize of $50 for the best letter of not over 500 words telling of the newspaper situation in your home town ——and we will pay $5 for every letter that may be published in COLLIER'S, either in whole or in part.

What does your daily paper bring into your home?

This is Collier's work for 1911

"The American press has more influence than it ever had in any other time or any other country."

Is it for good or ill?

Collier's, The National Weekly, has already spent over $25,000 in preparing the first real, human treatise of this vital subject—an interesting, intense, truthful narrative, written for the public. Well-known writers are at work on a series of articles that bristle with facts and read like fiction. This series is now appearing and will continue to run about every other week throughout 1911.

These men know what they are talking about—but we want more.

We want the opinion of the newspaper readers themselves.

——we need your view-point.

——and we ask you to answer these six questions:

We want your help on these six questions

1. What local newspaper do you read regularly?
2. How are your opinions influenced by its editorials?
3. Do you as a rule believe what you read in the news columns?
4. What feature or department do you value most?
5. What criticisms, if any, have you to make?
6. Which local newspapers exert a good, and which a bad, influence on your community?

$50 for the best answer

For the best answer to these questions, in a letter not over 500 words long—make it brief—Collier's will give a prize of $50.00. And for every other letter that may be published in Collier's, in whole or in part, we will pay $5.00.

Your answer will assist a splendid work. We want to tell the world not only the history of American journalism, but also ——the good that some powerful newspapers accomplish.

——the evil done by others.

——what they are doing for and against true democracy.

Just follow these directions

The six questions may be followed literally, or considered merely as suggestions. Write what you feel. We want letters from you, the intelligent citizen who has the well-being of his city at heart. You know what is the important subject better than we.

Send letter to Collier's Newspaper Editor, 416 West 13th Street, New York City.

CONTEST CLOSES APRIL 15th. AWARDS TO BE MADE ON OR BEFORE JUNE 1st.

Follow these instructions:

Write a brief, simple letter, answering all or part of the questions in the above advertisement—or ignore the questions altogether, if there is something more vital for you to write about. We want your honest view-point.

Send letter to Collier's Newspaper Editor, 416 West Thirteenth Street, New York City.

EDISON PHONOGRAPH

The reason this is true of the Edison Phonograph is because of two exclusive Edison features

The Sapphire Reproducing Point

The point of contact between an Edison Phonograph and its records is a highly polished indestructible Sapphire. It is button shaped, fitting accurately into the groove of the record and traveling without friction and without scratching, thus bringing out perfectly the sweet musical tones of Edison Records.

There is an Edison Phonograph at a price to suit everybody's means, from the Gem at $15.00 to the Amberola at $200.00. Ask your dealer for complete catalogs of Edison Phonographs and Records, or write us.

Edison Standard Records . . . . . $ .35
Edison Amberol Records (play twice as long) .50
Edison Grand Opera Records . . $ .75 to 2.00

All Edison Phonographs have the Sapphire Reproducing Point. All Edison Phonographs now sold play the four-and-a-half minute Amberol Records. If you have an Edison Phonograph and it is not equipped to play the Amberol Records, you should go at once to your dealer for the necessary attachments. When so equipped your Edison Phonograph will play both the Amberol and the Standard Records, changing from one to the other at your will.

Edison Amberol Records

These records, playing four-and-a-half minutes, render all selections completely—no omissions, no hurrying. Complete operatic arias, all the verses of every song, entire monologues, exactly as rendered by the greatest artists—and instrumental numbers as originally played by the greatest bands and orchestras.

Questions and Answers

Mrs. G., Green Pond, Fla. Please explain Matt. 12: 31, 32. Some think it means to use bad language after one has received the Holy Ghost, and others that it means any one, whether converted or not, who speaks evil of God or his Holy Spirit.

It refers to what has been called the "unpardonable sin," which, according to the views of the most eminent commentators, was attributing the works of the Holy Spirit to Satanic agency.

Reader, Hastings, Neb. 1. Please explain Prov. 31: 7. 2. I am a member of the Church and have been for many years, and try hard to do what is right, but I feel worried because I can't make a public prayer. When alone, I can pray for myself and friends, but I can not when called on at prayer meeting.

1. The previous warning in the same chapter, against drink, should be read in connection with the passage that follows. Read also Prov. 20: 1; 21: 17, and 23, 29-32, and you have the attitude of the writer on the subject. Some people try to pervert Scripture into an approval of wrong, when the very reverse is intended. 2. The gift of ready speech in public is one that does not come without cultivation. Your simple petition, no matter how haltingly it may be uttered, is as acceptable to God as the most eloquent prayer.

J. W. R., Berlin, N. Y. To what extent are churches reaching the rural population of the country? Where do they fail and what are the reasons?

If you will read the discussion now in progress in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, entitled "How is Your Own Church," you will form an idea on the condition of rural churches in the different States. The churches there spoken of are no doubt typical of the majority. These letters will also enlighten you as to the reasons for failure, where it exists.

W. K. S., Philadelphia. What is meant by exegesis?

It comes from a Greek word signifying "explanation" or "interpretation." It means the exposition or interpretation of any writing, but is almost exclusively used of the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures. The term hermeneutics is frequently applied to the science of the interpretation of the Bible, and it is usual to distinguish it from exegesis, as the interpretation proper, or discovery of the true meaning of the text, while the latter is more strictly the exposition of the meaning so discovered, and its practical doctrinal and moral applications.

E. F., Yorktown, N. Y. How is Easter Sunday determined?

This question has been answered several times in THE MAIL-BAG. The way by which Easter Day is now determined is that of the first Sunday after the paschal full moon (fourteenth day of the calendar moon which happens upon or next after the 21st of March. If the full moon happens upon a Sunday then Easter Day is the first Sunday following.

Mrs. M. B., Earlham, Ia. Please tell us about the "Passion Play."

The "Passion Play," which takes place at Oberammergau every ten years, is performed by the villagers, because their forefathers vowed it should always be done for a special mercy that was granted them. The play is taken very seriously by the actors, who number between eight and nine hundred. The production is carefully supervised and the characters are interpreted with all reverence. A fee is charged to view the performance. The net returns are divided amongst the actors in accordance with the importance of their parts. These sums, which seem small enough to us, help to dispel poverty from the village and to enable the actors to take the time necessary to prepare for the great event.

S. H. C., Saranac, Mich. I read these lines: "Thou camest not to thy place by accident; it is the very place God meant for thee." Will you give, through THE MAIL-BAG, Scripture texts showing how we may know that our individual place is just as God wants it? For surely his way is right.

The Bible in several places teaches the virtue of contentment with our lot in life. See Phil. 4: 11; Heb. 13: 5, and other passages. It does not, however, teach fatalism, as the passage you quote might suggest, for it shows that God has given man enlightened reason to choose for himself between the good and the evil, and that he has the power to make progress. It does not discourage a right ambition to better our lot and

WE WANT you to read the following descriptions of our latest premiums. If you haven't yet renewed your subscription, or if you would like to please some good friend by making him or her a gift of a CHRISTIAN HERALD subscription and one of our attractive books, now is the time to do it. There is no time, you know, like the present. Avoid disappointment by ordering promptly. Be sure not to overlook our Magazine Combinations.

THE COMPREHENSIVE STANDARD DICTIONARY. This new 1910 Dictionary is said by its publishers, Funk & Wagnalls, to be the latest and best Dictionary of the English Language. It has been abridged from the famous Standard Dictionary, which has a world-wide reputation among intelligent people. The Comprehensive Dictionary defines 35,000 words, has 800 instructive pictorial illustrations, is printed on good paper, with nice wide margins. It is bound in limp leather, so soft and pliable you can twist it at will. It is 1¼ inches thick, 8½ x 13½ when open, weighs 36 ounces. It is equipped with the Dennison Thumb Index. The Editor is James C. Fernald, L.H.D. The Comprehensive Dictionary will be sent with one year's subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD (new or renewal), 1911 Calendar, photogravure of Dr. Klopsch, all four for only $2.50.

LIFE WORK OF LOUIS KLOPSCH. Every person who may have the good fortune to secure this intensely interesting and profusely illustrated book will marvel at the LIFE WORK OF LOUIS KLOPSCH. In Dr. Klopsch's rise from a poor immigrant boy to the foremost philanthropist in the world—a friend to the friendless, to the poor and the downtrodden—there is a story of a life that has few equals. It is a life of splendid achievement—an inspiration to every American man, woman, boy and girl. Read this great book for yourself, and learn and apply the wonderful secret of success which it illustrates so well. 472 pages; large clear type, bound in dark green and gold. A copy of the LIFE WORK OF LOUIS KLOPSCH will be sent, together with a year's subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD, our 1911 Calendar, and a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, all for only $2.00.

HERO TALES FROM AMERICAN LIFE. Would you like to know the man who traveled four thousand miles through six bleak winter months to add three stars to the American flag? Would you like to shake hands with a woman who saved sixteen children? Would you like to look upon the lad who rescued a thousand lives in a storm at sea? HERO TALES will be sent, the 1911 Calendar, Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, all for only $2.00.

STEPHEN, A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS. Mrs. Kingsley has taken the little known life of Stephen and built from it a story that vibrates with human emotion. It is a story that grips you. Stephen's love and devotion to a cause that he thought must be right and just, is graphically portrayed. It is a good sermon in story form. STEPHEN will be sent with the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, 1911 Calendar, and a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, for $1.85.

CHRISTIAN HERALD HOME LIBRARY—8 BOOKS. In compiling this set of books we have endeavored to seek out those things which every member of every home wants to know. They appeal to all classes of people who read, or think, or work; to women as well as men—to girls as well as boys. The eight volumes will be sent, with our 1911 Calendar, Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD one year, new or renewal, all for only $2.50. If you do not want the set complete, simply add 20 cents for each volume you desire to the subscription price ($1.50) and we will send you as many or as few as you want.

INDIA PAPER RED LETTER BIBLE. The text of the Bible is set in bold-face minion, especially designed for this work. There are 268 pages of Helps, or Concordance, and 17 superb Maps. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and very durable, weighs only twenty ounces. It is bound in American Levant, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, and makes altogether the handiest and most satisfactory Bible now on the market. We send this superb Bible, together with the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one whole year, our 1911 Calendar, and a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, all four for only $3.00.

RED LETTER NEW TESTAMENT. Contains all the words spoken by our Lord, printed in red. Clear type, bound in American Levant, soft and flexible, with overlapping edges, red-under-gold, making a compact volume. No other Testament is as serviceable, owing to the emphasis it gives to Christ's own words, and the ease and facility with which one's favorite passage may be found. The Testament in either the Revised or Authorized Version will be sent, with a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, our 1911 Calendar, and a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, all four for only $2.00.

Our Attractive Magazine Clubs

The special arrangement that the CHRISTIAN HERALD made with the publishers of the Outlook, whereby that magazine and the CHRISTIAN HERALD are offered to our readers at the special price of $3.00, is still open for your acceptance. Theodore Roosevelt is a contributing editor of the Outlook, and his editorials and articles on National Topics will appear in the Outlook and nowhere else. enlarge opportunities for service and usefulness; indeed it promises to those who love God and serve him faithfully, that godliness will bring its reward in this life and that which is to come. (See I. Tim. 4: 8; Phil. 3: 14.) If men were content simply to exist and not to advance, the world would make no progress.

G. M., Eddy, Okla. What do the initials I. H. S. and I. N. R. I. stand for?

The initials I. H. S. represent the Latin words Iesus (or Jesus) Hominum Salvator, which being translated is Jesus Saviour of Men. I. N. R. I. are the initials of the words Iesus Nazarenus Rex Iudaeorum, which is in English, Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews.

A. H. D., Etiwanda, Calif. 1. When and by whom was the title of "Reverend" as applied to a clergyman, first adopted? 2. Please explain John 5: 14, last clause. 3. If Christians commit sin—as preachers tell us no one lives who does not commit sin—will not such sins be as serious in their effects as those committed by one who does not profess to be a Christian? Can one be said to be living a holy life, who thus commits sin either occasionally or under certain provocations?

1. It is a title of courtesy, just as a priest is called "Father" and a Jewish teacher "Rabbi" (master). When it was first used is not definitely known. 2. It was a warning not to relapse into the reckless, sinful life which presumably had brought on his malady. 3. When professing Christians have backslidden, their condition is not to be judged like that of those who have never known the light. Such a backslider can certainly not be said to be living a holy life; yet we are not to judge others. He may be in the midst of a severe conflict, and we should help rather than discourage him. Many a one has a struggle in which a helping hand extended might win him back, but his ultimate return is delayed by the unfriendly and even censorious attitude of those who should help him the most.

G. F. B., Staunton, Va. How do you harmonize Mark 15: 32; Luke 23: 39-42, and Matt. 27: 44?

The Gospels are in many instances complementary to each other, and we find details in some that are not in others. This is not surprising. Each Gospel was written from the writer's individual standpoint and facilities for observation, and there are instances of details in some and not in others, but all combine to make a perfect whole. This explanation applies to the story of the repentant thief, which is told by Luke alone.

R. W. T., New London, Wis. 1. Who were the 144,000 mentioned in Rev. 7: 4? 2. What is the "beast" mentioned in Rev. 13: 1? 3. Did Paul die at sea?

1. It is a symbolical number and not to be taken literally. It means the elect of all nations—those who successfully resist the seductions of Antichrist and who keep their garments pure. 2. Commentators interpret the "beast" as Antichrist and persecution; the world-power attacking the Church from without, and false doctrine assailing it from within. 3. Paul was martyred in Rome in the reign of Nero.

J. G. M., Norfolk, Va. What is meant by spontaneous combustion?

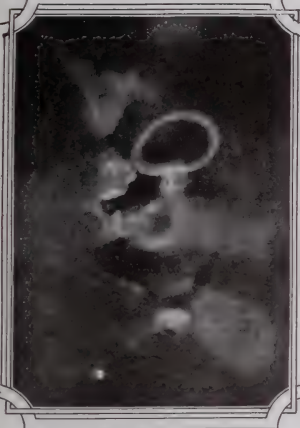
The ignition of bodies by the internal development of heat without the application of an external flame.

J. H., Ulster, Pa. 1. Harmonize or explain the account of the creation beginning Gen. 1: 1 with the account beginning in the first part of Gen. 2. 2. Where and when were Poe and Tennyson born? Where did each die?

1. The opening of the second chapter is merely a recapitulation of the opening statement in the first and not a new version. It is to emphasize briefly the central fact that God was the Creator of all things. 2. Poe was born in Boston, January 19, 1809, and died in Baltimore, October 7, 1849. Tennyson was born at Somersby, England, August 6, 1809, and died at Aldworth, October 6, 1892.

Miscellaneous

In our issue of January 25, in an article on the launching of the battleship Arkansas, by a typographical oversight the cost of the vessel was given as $5,000,000. This should have read $11,500,000, the actual cost.



B. B., Ontario. As you put the question, it does not seem right for such a man to come to the front in spiritual affairs; yet we are not to be the judge. God uses many different kinds of instruments to accomplish his purposes.

The Alpine Hut and Nearby Crater

A Volcanic Tunnel

THE MENACE OF MOUNT ETNA

By FRANK ALVORD PERRET, K. I. C.

DURING the last two years three important events have occurred within the sphere of my activity—the great earthquake at Messina in 1908, the eruption at Teneriffe in 1909, and the great eruption of Mount Etna in the spring of 1910. I will consider the last of these for a few minutes.

I am convinced that the only way to study a volcanic eruption is to study the eruption. In other words, not to visit the volcano after its activity has ceased, but to live upon it during the eruption, and as near as possible to the scene of action. In this way it has been my privilege during the past six years to live upon Vesuvius during the great eruption of 1906, Stromboli in 1907, and these others which I have just mentioned. The activity of this volcano has manifested itself during the past three hundred years at intervals of six years on an average. That is to say, there have been during this time seventeen eruptions per century. This being the case, it was not surprising when an eruption did not occur for sixteen years that one should have been looked for.

Lest I forget it at the end of this description, I should like to say that I do not consider that even this eruption after so long an interval has satisfied the volcanic conditions of the mountain. I think we may look for still more and possibly a still greater activity of Mount Etna, probably in the near future, possibly within three or four years, and I should not be surprised if sooner.

Mount Etna is one of the great volcanoes of the earth. It is great in size, great in activity, great in beauty. In size it would cover the entire metropolitan district of New York and the surrounding counties. Its height is 11,000 feet above sea level. As to its power, one of these eruptions some centuries ago killed 80,000 people, which is probably more than Vesuvius has ever done in all its existence as a volcano, not excepting the great eruption of 79 A.D., which destroyed the cities of Herculaneum and Pompeii. As to its beauty, this is also very difficult to describe. It is teeming with life, animal and vegetable, and is snow-covered one half the year; the other half it is bare to its very summit.

One of the photographs here reproduced shows a general view of the most active vent during the recent disturbance. This is not the central crater of Etna. The observatory stands very near to that former centre of activity and only about 1,000 feet below the summit. This is made possible only by the fact—and a very important one—that the great eruptions of Etna in modern times do not take place from the central crater. The mountain is rent open on the side and the eruptive forces find their vent and form craters upon the flanks of the volcano. Of this type was the eruption of 1910. A new fissure, a mile and a quarter in length, opened on the south flank with twenty-four small eruptive mouths, and from the upper portion at first, and later from the lower portion, there came a rapid stream of lava, which flowed for a distance of about seven miles and threatened the towns of Belpasso and Borelli, and would also have menaced the larger town of Nicolosi had it not been that its course was diverted frequently by the intervening hills resulting from other eruptions.

One of the most notable peculiarities of this eruption was the absence of cones which generally form around the mouths of the craters, and which are almost entirely absent in this instance. The history of one of these openings shows conclusively how necessary it is to live upon the volcano during the eruption in order to have a correct idea of what takes place. Any geologist or vulcanologist would have declared that this particular crater had been the least important of all the twenty-four and he would have inferred this from the fact that there was nothing at all lying about in this vicinity, that there was no volcanic ash around it, that there were no bombs of lava lying about. Nevertheless, I, who was there and who lived there throughout the eruption, know that that particular one was by far the most terrible of all the twenty-four; so much so that I had christened it the "Demon." It was the source of all those heavy explosions which shook the mountain and which almost shook us out of our beds in the little hut where we lived.

This little hut was built by the Italian Alpine Club as a refuge in going up the mountain for the mounting of certain instruments which have long since fallen into disuse; but when I arrived at Catania

THE NEED OF FINDING GOD

TEXT: Matt. 23: 37, 38

THESE words of lamentation palpitate with the strongest emotion. Weak men are incapable of deep emotion; if they employ the language of high feeling we instantly perceive that they are straining after an effect and falling into an unworthy and shallow affectation. The words of the text could not be used by any one of less stature than the Son of God without provoking derision. They become him, but they are utterly beyond and above the highest and noblest utterance of man. We shall perceive their unearthly elevation, and the divine claims of him who uttered them, if we seek to put such words in the mouths of even the wisest and best. Let us imagine one, combining in himself the noblest qualities of all the good men of our country, standing on Arlington Heights, weeping over the Capitol, and crying out, "O Washington! Washington! Thou that rejectest all the calls of God to thee, and persecutest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, and ye would not. Your capitol is left unto you desolate." What would we think of such self-assertion and arrogance? Would not all men account such a manifestation of self-importance, although it might be accompanied with tears of tenderness, as the outburst of an unbalanced and frenzied mind? Yet, when Jesus thus laments over Jerusalem we are not shocked, but we are melted by his majestic grief. Indeed, all the sweetest expressions of his human tenderness are the sublimest assertions of his superhuman nature. Men who deny his deity can not get away from his tenderness, and in holding to that they are sometimes forced into an unconscious recognition of the divine character which they would deny to him.

The Lofty Mission of Jesus

Surely, "never man spake as this Man." Even when his majesty is disguised by human tears, the light of his divine glory beams through upon us. "None but God such love can show." He who could weep over Jerusalem without showing a grief too great for him, could justly claim the ability to gather her children beneath his protecting power as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings.

When Jesus weeps over Jerusalem his lamentation is for the Jewish nation. Some appalling desolation threatens his people. Some blighting curse has fallen upon its life. Some overwhelming judgment is at hand. The danger is one that is past turning back; he himself can not now avert it. There were times when he might have done so, but now the sad words declare, "Ye would not. Your house is left unto you desolate." We might imagine that he was distressed for the dire poverty of his nation. He had a heart for the poor. He began his Sermon on the Mount with the words, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Again, when John the Baptist sent to him, asking him, "Art thou he that should come, or look we for another?" he gave as the highest proof of his Messiahship, in response to the question of the Prophet of the Wilderness, "The poor have the Gospel preached unto them." Truly Jesus was the "poor man's philosopher and friend," and he came to a very poor world. The poverty of the ancient world is beyond our understanding in this day of overflowing wealth and abounding luxury. Wealth as we know it is modern. When Jesus came there was no deeper destitution than that of Palestine. But while he cared for the poor, it was not the poverty of the nation which drew forth his lamentation over Jerusalem. He did not consider poverty the worst thing that can befall a people, nor wealth the highest good.. He proposed no scheme for abolishing poverty. He said, "The poor ye have always with you." He refused to be a judge and divider of earthly goods. He declined the offices of a socialistic reformer. He had a loftier mission to fulfil than one which concerns itself only with material issues. We may think he was distressed over the deadly diseases and heart-breaking afflictions that were prevalent among the people. He did care for the sick. "Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses." The sorrowing flocked to meet him and the diseased were brought forth to him for cure. "And he healed them all." The blind and the deaf, the dumb and the lame, the fevered cases and the leprous—all with their accumulated distresses and pains were relieved by his tender touch. In the very hem of his garments was balsamic power to bless the sick and relieve the suffering. But when he went away from the world, the bed-ridden in Israel were as numerous as ever. He left not a prescription behind; no hospital; no treatise on medicine; no work on surgery. He came to a sick world, and he left it sick—sick as we of the modern world can hardly conceive.

His Grief Not of Earth

If, then, the source of his grief over Jerusalem was neither the poverty nor the sickness of the people, it may be that we shall find it in their political condition. They were indeed an oppressed people. They were a despised part of the Roman Empire in the first century, and their rulers were those Idumean princes who were never repelled by a vice nor attracted to a virtue. The conditions must have been bad in a land where such men as the Herods bore rule. One of them slew John the Baptist, another massacred the babes of Bethlehem, and a third killed James, the brother of John, with a sword. History has never shown such a brood of vile monsters issuing from the same nest. Jesus was not indifferent to the character of these wicked men, nor insensible to the grievous wrongs with which they afflicted the people. On one occasion "certain of the Pharisees came and said to him, Get thee out, and depart hence: for Herod will seek to kill thee. And he said unto them, Go ye and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected. Nevertheless I must walk to-day, and to-morrow, and the day following: for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem." (Luke 13: 31-33.) Saint Luke tells us that it was then he spoke the sad words of our text. We see, then, how clearly he perceived the fox-like meanness of Herod. But his mind rested not on Herod's corruptions enough to exclude even for a brief space the desolation of Jerusalem. It was not, therefore, political conditions, wretched as they were around him, which moved him to utter this bitter cry of disappointment and grief. He was no political agitator and reformer, vainly attempting to build up the kingdom of heaven by rearranging earthly forces and restoring the political ruins of this world. He knew that the government of God springs not up from the suffrages of men, but descends upon the earth from heavenly powers.

Fallen Away from God

When Jesus came to the temple and found it full of traders and trafficking, he was filled with the indignation of love aggrieved, so he drove out the traders from the holy place, and said: "Make not my Father's house a house of merchandise." And when they demanded of him a sign to justify his act of cleansing, he pointed to his body, of which the temple was but a symbol, and said, "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up." It was as if he had said, "I am determined that the way to God shall never be closed, or obstructed. I will not only cleanse this temple of wood and stone from all the profane obstructions you have brought into it; but, when you undertake to profane and destroy the holier temple of which it is but the shadow, I will set it up again. The way to God shall never be closed by wicked and godless hands. I have authority over both the shadow and the substance of the way to God, and that authority I will exert to the uttermost, so that no soul seeking the Father shall ever find the way stopped up."

He went away and came again, only to find things gone from bad to worse. Again he cleansed the temple, which from having been made "a house of merchandise" had come at length to be a "den of thieves." A second time, with hotter indignation, "He went into the temple and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves; and would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple. And he taught them saying unto them, Is it not written, My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves."

But all his cleansings were in vain. Covetousness, which is idolatry, had proudly usurped the place of God, and it held its place against the Lord when he came suddenly to his temple. He gave over the contest, and turned over the house to them who had cast out God and made a throne for Mammon in it. He no longer calls it "My Father's house." Now it is "your house"; but it is desolate.

We may interpret his grief on the occasion when he uttered the words of the text, in the light of his indignation when he cleansed the temple. A people, whose whole life and mission and history were all locked up in God, had turned away from him and lost him. They had turned him out of doors, and had taken possession of his throne and made of it a vulgar commercial counter. The history of fifteen centuries had culminated in base and incurable treason against the King. It was enough to anger holiness and to break the heart of love. None but the divine heart could feel the depth of wickedness and treachery that had been reached by the people. He had walked with them in all their journeyings from Abraham's time; he had come nigh to them through the prophets whom they had slain; he had done everything for them that infinite wisdom could conceive, boundless love propose, and limitless power accomplish. And all had been in vain!

The Desolation of Israel

It is unspeakably pathetic when a man follows through a long life a purpose, and by one false step falls short of it just when it is in reach. But who can state the case of a nation, set apart to the highest possible mission, and failing of it by forgetting God and following the greed of the world? Such was Israel's case. To the Hebrews was not given the mission of art: they carved not a statue, nor painted a picture. Of literature, as an art, they knew nothing; their literature was wholly theological, ethical, and devotional. To them was not given the political wisdom of worldly statesmanship: their government was theocratic, not democratic, nor aristocratic, nor autocratic. Their judges were called of God, and their kings were no more than vice-regents. Their prophets, coming out of the council chamber of the Most High, outranked their princes and rebuked royalty with authority. Theirs was a religious mission, and that alone; and now they had failed in that. To them were committed the oracles of God, not in books only, but also in visions, and, most of all, in him in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. But all these they had rejected. How sad was their state! How desolate was their national house, built for the habitation of God, when he went out of it to return to it no more forever!

Israel's desolation is for our warning. The mission of Israel was not exclusive of other nations from the possession of God. God gave himself peculiarly to the children of Abraham that they might give his glory to all the nations of the world. To Abraham God said, "In thee all families of the earth shall be blessed." The Israelitish nation was the pivot on which all national histories turned: "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel." (Deut. 32: 8.) The same purpose that dominated God's plan for Israel pervaded his plan for all mankind, and that purpose was that they might seek and find their heavenly Father, and know him for themselves, to the end that there might not be an orphaned world, a prodigal race dwelling in want, far away from the Father's house. For "He hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they might seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us." (Acts 17: 26, 27.)

The supreme need of the human soul is God. The words of St. Augustine are most true: "O God, thou hast made us for thyself, and inquiet are our souls without thee!" Without God both individuals and nations are undone; and the work of the Church is the same as the mission of Israel. The Church must fulfil its mission to mankind in finding God and giving him to all men. The most urgent need of our country to-day is the knowledge of God. Our chief woes are not poverty, disease, and political corruption, and our sorest needs are not wealth, health, and political reformations. If we seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, all these things will be added unto us.

Some would turn the Church into an instrument of social reform, that poverty might be abolished and wealth more equally divided. They talk much of what they are pleased to call "practical Christianity." The most practical of all forms of Christianity is that which concerns itself supremely with bringing men to God. The poor want something better than victuals and clothes. The main thing a lost child wants is to be carried back to the father's home and the mother's heart. I would not have cared for a mission to the prodigal son which involved nothing more than giving him better food than that of the swine upon which he was feeding and nothing better than carrying him a new suit of clothes. But who would not gladly have gone to the far country to tell him of the loving heart of the father in the old home, which was breaking for his return? The Church will do little for the poor, if it goes with nothing nobler than a mission to their stomachs and backs. The poor are most of all heart-hungry. They want God.

Others would convert the Church into a machine for all sorts of political reforms. These are they upon whose lips is always, in season and out of season, the cant phrase, "Civic righteousness." The righteousness which we need is that which cometh from above, the righteousness of the kingdom of heaven, not merely the formal order which is enforced by the sheriff and the militia. If we know and love God, every element of good government will arise as fruits and flowers come from soil and sunshine and showers. Without the knowledge and love of God in the hearts of the people, political reformations will never be pure or permanent. They will be mixed with partisan zeal and tainted with personal ambition. Most of our earth-born reformations quickly need reforming, and nobody is so hard to reform as a reformer. Savonarola tried that programme. Jesus did not. He saw Israel desolate, not because of Roman rule and Herodian politics, but because Israel had lost God. The people had begun to ruin not by falling into the hands of bad politicians, but by killing God's prophets, who came to lead them back to the heavenly Father and the heavenly home. It was that which grieved our Lord to tears.

What our country needs is a revival of religion rather than a political reformation. But we can not find a revival by merely seeking a revival. God will not allow us to deify even a revival. We are not to seek a revival, but to seek God. The finding of God revives religion and all other good things.

That final government of the world, the rule of the ever-present God, rises not from the earth, but descends out of heaven. It corrects every disorder, heals every woe, and enriches with imperishable and incorruptible wealth. The disappointed Saviour, with tears on his face, lamented the fate of Jerusalem, from which God had departed, leaving unfaithful Israel's house desolate.

It was enough to break the heart of the Son of God to see Jerusalem of old without God. It will be enough to bind up the broken-hearted world to find God at last, and in the New Jerusalem to be forever with the Lord.

His Best Monument

OAKLAND, CALIF., January 20, 1911.

TO THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Dear Sir and Brother: Your invitation requested for suggestions as to a monument for the wonderfully grand man, Louis Klopsch, prompts me to reply. I have never believed in spending money simply for a dead monument. In this world of want, both physical and spiritual, and in so many places such awful want, I do believe the grandest monument and the most pleasing to our God would be a rich endowment of Mont-Lawn.

Yours most truly,

ROLPH R. BIRD.

The Man and the Church

By EUGENE THWING

I. The Man's Part

NO GREATER work challenges the Church of Christ, and the individual church organization, to-day than the work of winning and holding the men—the busy, earnest, practical men of affairs. Theory, and sentiment, and even praying, are not enough. Plain common sense, and the fitting of efforts to real conditions, are necessary. The work requires co-operation. An important share falls to the minister; another share rests (yes, too often it rests) with the church officers; but a vital part must be assumed by the men themselves who are outside the church. It may be necessary to put squarely up to them their part before they will recognize and accept it, but theirs it is, and no church nor pastor can devise a substitute for the part the man must bear himself. What is that part?

A SUGGESTIVE letter from a CHRISTIAN HERALD subscriber is worth careful study in connection with this question:

I believe the mass of the people of civilized nations admire practical Christianity. As an elder in the Presbyterian Church, I have talked with many of our leading business men with reference to uniting with the Church and have received this reply from several who are considered honorable business men: "I believe in Christianity, but I cannot practise it and run my business, and I do not care to profess what I cannot practise."

I have tried to analyze this and I am led to this conclusion: Fifty years ago competition was almost inoperative; but under the strenuous conditions of business of this day, business is a battle and the victory is to the strong.

This arrays every man in any line of business against his fellow-man in the same line of business, and makes them antagonists instead of brothers. This is probably more noticeable in small towns than in the cities. I believe this is one of the greatest if not the greatest cause of the neglect of the Church by men.

If it were possible for men to earn their living for themselves and family as brothers instead of antagonists, I believe Christ's kingdom on earth would be possible. I am greatly interested in the different thoughts being expressed on this subject, as we all feel that it is more difficult to get men into church than when we were young.—J. E. G.

THE only kind of Christianity that is worth anything is "practical Christianity"—the kind that can be and is related to the actual life. Mental belief that finds little concrete expression in living will never help a man in this world or save him in the next. The man who says, "I believe in Christianity but cannot practise it and run my business," proves how worthless is the mental belief without the genuine heart experience. The best answer to the oft-repeated assertion that a man cannot be a successful business man and a genuine Christian is the unquestionable fact that there are many thousands of successful business men who are living pure, strong Christian lives, and carrying on their business in the fear and honor of God. It is possible for men to earn a living for themselves and families, and even to manage large business enterprises, at the same time treating their fellow-men, including their business competitors, as brothers and not as antagonists. Because so many do not know how, the assertion that it is "impossible" often passes unchallenged.

How does any man know that he "cannot practise" Christianity in his business until he has it to practise?

He cannot make a fair test of it until he has taken its vital force as a reality into his life. He has measured the difficulty by his theory of Christian life and not by a genuine compelling experience of it. Such a half-way test always fails, and the results are misleading. Only an unqualified surrender and consecration to Christ—a complete burning of his bridges behind him, as it were—will put him in the right relationship to the Christian life and to his business to prove whether they can go together.

NO MAN is clever enough of himself to harmonize the life of the world with the life that is hid in Christ. No man is smart enough himself to conduct his business in all its details so that he shall be "void of offense toward God and toward men." The complications, the traps, the difficulties, and the subtle temptations are too many and too constant. He needs help. God's power and willingness to help are limitless, but he will not guide a man who has not submitted himself and his business to him and pledged obedience to his will. Just as certainly, he will guide and help that man who has made, sincerely, such a surrender. Let the man who cannot combine his religion and his business ask God in humble prayer if he has given to man so vain and empty a thing as a faith that cannot be a living part of his daily life, and which, if he accepts and lives it, must make him a failure in the world. The real fact is that never is a man so completely a success, never is he so immensely valuable in the world and to his family, as when he learns that his business or his profession or his art belongs to God, with everything else in life, and that the One to whom the business belongs will guide him in the management of it if he is a faithful steward. "Prove me now, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

THE difficulty and conflict of business, therefore, is one of the strongest reasons that can be presented to men for consecrating themselves to God. It should be a reason for uniting with God's Church, where they may have fellowship with other Christian business men, and where they may receive encouragement and help for their struggle with the world. It is the part of the minister and of the church to see that such help and such fellowship are provided. The lack of them is one great cause of the neglect of the Church by men. Another cause is the multiplicity and the attractiveness of things in the present day that compete with the attractions of the Church on the Sabbath. Facts must be faced. Modern conditions must be recognized. In the earlier days of the church there was little to do on the Sabbath but to go to church. Now such convenient enticements as golf, automobiling, musical concerts and pleasure resorts draw the indifferent away.

The physical and mental weariness resulting from the more strenuous life of the day causes many a tired man to sleep late Sunday morning or to lounge in negligée in his home. When the minister and the Church provide that which is real, and earnest, and vital to him, and so attractive that it appeals to his own sense of desire, the man will be in his pew, and his heart and his business will be on the altar.

Next Week: THE MINISTER'S PART.

Restoring Eden's Garden

By Rev. Willian Durban, London

BY FAR the most interesting of all coming events, so far as international relationships are concerned, is the projected resurrecting, by plans already defined and organized, of the glories not only of Mesopotamia, wherein the Paradise of Genesis was located, but of Parapotamia. Mesopotamia is a term meaning "between the rivers," the streams embracing the territory being the Euphrates and the Tigris. Parapotamia is the equally important region outside each of the rivers. Mesopotamia and Parapotamia (the latter term of course signifies "beyond the rivers") together cover the whole area of what is often denominated "Abraham's Land." This is the cradle of the human race.

A momentous negotiation has just been brought to a satisfactory conclusion. Sir John Jackson, a noted member of Parliament in England, and head of one of the world's greatest engineering firms, has recently signed with Nazim Pasha at Bagdad a contract for the erection of an immense dam at the head of the Hindieh branch of the Euphrates. This vast work is to be executed in connection with the Mesopotamia irrigation proposals. The scheme will before many years are past exercise effects reaching far beyond anything dreamed of by the world at large.

For about five years the eminent British surveyor, Sir William Willcocks, has been engaged in the difficult work of examining Mesopotamian and Parapotamian conditions. His report has just been sent in. In this document he says:

The deserts of Mesopotamia are not as arid and barren as those of Egypt; when rains are abundant the plains are covered with rich grass, on which thousands of sheep feed. But the dangers of drought are terrible for the tillers of the soil. According to statistics the inhabitants of the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates calculate that they lose their crops and even seeds once in three years.

By a brilliant scheme which he now suggests Sir William Willcocks is confident that this deplorable state of things can be absolutely and permanently remedied, and the wilderness can once more be made as in ancient days to blossom as the rose. The waters of the Euphrates are to be turned from their source when the river is at its highest. The enterprise would be accomplished at a cost of $17,500,000, and it would be completed in three years. This interesting report proceeds:

On the northwest of Bagdad, between the Tigris and Euphrates, there is some low water known by the name of Lake Akkar Kuf. It has a surface of 10,000 square yards when the waters are low and of 300,000 square yards when they are high. Its level is 35 feet below the Tigris. It is in this lake that, in former times, a branch of the Euphrates known as the Sakhlawa had its outlet.

Sir William Willcocks now proposes to supply the Sakhlawa with two powerful sluices at the place where it leaves the Euphrates so as to regulate the quantity of water. On the Euphrates itself, below the divarication, would be a dam to control the river itself. These two great works would be sufficient for the regulation of the Euphrates. On the other historic stream, the Tigris, it is proposed to construct an enormous dam at Beled above the rapids, and below the dam to cut a canal which shall irrigate the rich plains north of Bagdad and empty itself into the lake. To the southeast of this lake, near Bagdad, another canal would start, following the right bank of the Tigris and ending in the Chatt el Hai, a tributary of the old Tigris. This canal alone would efficiently irrigate six million acres of ground. The extra oozy mud, which for a fortnight is very considerable, and is sufficient to ruin everything, would be deposited in the lake; the latter would regulate not only the efflux of waters, but also their muddy contents. The execution of the entire project will occupy six years.

TRANSFORMED BY GRACE

The Wonderful Story of a Man Who, Once a Social Wreck, Is Now a Bank President

By Rev. J. C. HALLIMOND, D.D.

Superintendent of the Bowery Mission

IF THERE had been any lingering doubt in any mind about the worth-while-ness of Rescue Mission work, it would have been dissipated by an interview I had the other day with Mr. Joseph J. Rafter, president of the Broad and Market National Bank of Newark, N. J.

"And seeing the man that was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it." (Acts 4: 14.) Here was an incontestable, concrete proof of the far-reaching, down-swooping, uplifting power of the Gospel. Familiar as I am with the transformation wrought by divine grace, I felt the question buzzing in my brain, as I stepped across the marble threshold of the palatial bank building, "Can it be true that he who now presides over this institution was five and a half years ago a hopeless drunkard on the Bowery?"

The president was busy at his desk telephone when I entered his room, so, sliding into a chair by his side, I had a chance to recover my breath, and answer my question, while a great glow of emotion swept over my heart, and I believe something like tears, tears of joyful gratitude, stood in my eyes. As he finished his telephone talk he turned to me, grasped my hand, and said, in tones of sincere friendship that I am afraid are not often heard in bank presidents' chambers, "I'm glad to see you."

"I want you to see this little proposition," he went on. This little proposition is the new national bank opened recently under the auspices of some of the strongest and most reliable citizens of this great city, the third city in the United States in regard to manufactures. In one short month the deposits of the institution have reached nearly half a million dollars, business is good, prospects encouraging, and this result is largely due to the confidence-creating qualities of its president.

Having shown me, with pardonable pride, through the public offices, we reached the seclusion of the directors' room in the rear, and, seated face to face with this remarkable man, I bluntly submitted the question, "Are you willing, Mr. Rafter, to let THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have the story of your conversion?"

"Yes," he replied, "if it can be told in such a way as to let God have all the glory."

At this moment Mr. Lent, the cashier of the bank, entered, and the president was on his feet in a moment, kindly introducing me as Superintendent of the Old Bowery Mission. "Mr. Lent," he said, "is a God-fearing Christian man, and we are all that kind of people here. My directors know the story of my past life. I tell it wherever I go to the glory of God, and my associates rejoice in it, almost as much as I do myself."

"That is splendid, Mr. Rafter," I said, "for it sets at rest any misgivings as to the effect publicity might have upon your own personal welfare, in a commercial sense."

The reply came in a flash of the dark eyes, an emphatic bang of the fist upon the new rosewood table, and an almost passionate but quite unconscious paraphrasing of the Earl of Morton's eulogy of John Knox, "I fear not the face of living man, and if I have to lose my job by giving my testimony that I am a redeemed man, then I am willing to lose it. All is in God's hands."

This then is the wonderful story:

For many years Mr. Rafter was known as a capable printer—"a master of his craft" throughout the large cities in New England. His only failing was his inordinate craving for drink. This in the course of the years forced him down the grim gradations in social and business life until he reached the gutter, and even Mr. Wyburn, the Superintendent of the McAuley Mission, with his vast experience in such cases, has said, "He was the most unhappy, wretched specimen of the devil's work I had ever seen."

"It was on October 8, 1905, on Sunday morning, at 6.30 o'clock. After walking the streets all night, as I had often done before, catching a little sleep here and there on doorsteps and trucks, and in the City Hall Park, wandering around tired, hungry and hopeless, almost insane, and almost frozen from exposure, I thought I could get a little sleep or rest in a saloon where I had spent most of the days and nights of seven weeks. Here had gathered as usual from twenty to twenty-five men, of all classes and conditions, who had spent the whole night there, most of them in a drunken stupor. Many of these men had been my companions for seven weeks. I had hardly reached the inside door of the saloon, before I was told to get out, the proprietor saying I was a disgrace to the place, and that he did not want me there any more. I thank God for that crucial moment. Turning right-about-face, I took an inventory of myself.

Bank President Rafter (seated) and His Official Staff

"'If I am a disgrace to this place,' I said, 'I surely am of no use to myself, my friends, or my family, and I had better put an end to it all.' It was with this idea of self-destruction in mind that I wandered down to South Street, near the East River. I then realized where I was, and, sitting down, wept like a child. God must have been with me, for as soon as I got near the edge of the pier, a watchman ordered me off, saying I had no right there, and that I had better go home; that if the boss found me there he would lose his job. Then I certainly did think I had no friends.

"An impulse seized me, and turning, I retraced my steps up Roosevelt Street, where I happened to notice the transparency of the McAuley Mission. I was dirty; my clothes did not fit, being 'relievers.' My shoes were tied on with cords. My shirt and suspenders had gone for rum. Not knowing anything about missions, I therefore thought that I would not be received there. I sat down on the platform opposite the mission, remaining there a large part of the day, looking at the door wonderingly.

"About three o'clock I noticed a large crowd going in, and it was at this time a poor boy came to me and said: 'Old man, you look tired out.' He slipped a nickel in my hand and told me to get something to eat or drink, at the same time urging me to go in the mission. I did buy a drink, but I did not have the nerve to enter the mission that night. I walked the streets the same as the night before. I slept part of that night on a Franklin Square truck where I had so often before got rest. It was cold there, and I moved to the steps of the New York Press on Spruce Street. It was there that a fireman came to me from the subcellar and gave me a sandwich, saying that it would do me good. I thank God for that kindness. God had taken me over to himself.

"Monday I wandered into City Hall Park, but fearing arrest, I went down to South Street again, where I thought I could walk about and forget where I was. That night, October 9, I entered the doors of the dear old mission, where I was cordially received, and given a seat in the rear of the hall. I listened to the testimonies, and I said to myself, 'These men are telling my own life story.' There were twenty-five or thirty testimonies given. I wondered if it were true that God could save a man in my condition. When the invitation was given to go forward, I did so, and got down on my knees and prayed for the first time in twenty years. I asked God to save me if it were not too late—and oh! how I thank Him for that moment.

"When I arose from my knees, the heavy load was gone. I had been born again in a twinkling. I became a new man in Christ Jesus, and from that instant I have not wanted a drink of liquor, and I thank God for it!

"I found my Saviour, and immediately Christian friends gave me the assurance that all would be well, and that God would carry me through if I meant business. God has been as good as they said he would be. He has given me back my wife, home, mother, and sisters, other dear ones and a host of friends. He has vouchsafed me a standing among good men, and to-day I enjoy everything that a man should desire. He has taught me how to live a Christian life. God has done it all."

Such is Mr. Rafter's wonderful story. He did not acquire his present honorable position at one bound. In his former life he held, as has been said, quite a distinguished place in his trade, the printing business.

Twenty years ago in the city of Springfield, Mass., he was recognized as one of the ablest printers in that State. With several of the leading firms in New England, as manager and partner, he continued to hold a high position until the "rake's progress" commenced, and even then his ability was such that he was called back many times to firms who knew and recognized the worth that was in him.

After his conversion, therefore, he resumed his trade and in the course of time it as found that "his right hand had not forgotten its cunning." He was appointed superintendent of the printing department of the Prudential Insurance Company, of Newark, N. J., probably the most superbly fitted printing plant in the world. Whilst he lives in an almost luxurious house in one of the best residential sections of Newark, surrounded by an adoring circle of relatives and friends, he is never tired of visiting his old associates in the missions, and never hesitates to testify of God's wonderful power to save.

from Naples, it was reported destroyed. I saw through my field glass that it was still standing, and I made a trip up there the first day after my arrival to see if it was practicable to live there and make observations. I found that it was, and with a guide I made this my home for two weeks. It was a most interesting place, I can assure you. The lava, which, as I said, flowed at the speed of eleven miles an hour, passed the house at a distance of 150 yards. The crater had the bad habit of shooting in our direction, and in the absence of contrary wind, everything came our way. To many the danger of life under these circumstances would be the first thing to occupy attention. This, however, is entirely lost sight of in the actual experience. The present discomforts and sufferings are so great that any possible danger sinks into insignificance. To make observations on the edge of a lava stream for several hours, exposes one to heat almost intense enough to scorch the face. In fact the skin becomes burned as by the sun. Then to return to the hut one had to go through snow ten feet deep, and finally sleep under as many blankets as he could find, with all his clothes on, including a fur cap. The gases and finely powdered ash from the eruptions are constantly in the air, and irritate the mucous membrane of the nose and bronchial tubes to such an extent that one suffers acute pain after a time.

Mission Among Striking Miners

Rev. D. L. Schultz
Labor Missionary and Evangelist

By WARREN G. PARTRIDGE, D.D.

ABOUT twenty thousand miners in Western Pennsylvania, wishing to obtain a fair living wage and shorter hours, went on strike last March. For many months they and their families lived in tents until the beginning of last December, when they moved into wooden shacks. The miners when at work face many perils in the soft coal fields, from dangerous gases, explosions, falling roofs of the chambers in which they toil, and other causes incidental to the work. They risk their lives every day they enter dark, narrow, tortuous passageways in the bowels of the earth.

Many of the companies evicted the striking miners from the company houses, and they were compelled to live in tents, and there has been much destitution and suffering among them. A supreme opportunity was given the Christian Church to show her sympathy and practical interest in these laboring men, and for some time earnest Christian Endeavorers have been doing splendid missionary work among the unfortunate people. Thousands of the miners are foreigners, and some are English-speaking people. They wanted to organize a labor union, as thousands of miners in other parts of the State are organized, and thus obtain better conditions. But the coal and coke companies refused to recognize the labor unions and refused to arbitrate their differences. At great expense they imported other men to take the places of the strikers. There was much bitterness and strife, and some miners in the conflicts were wounded and killed. The struggle between labor on one side and capital on the other side has been raging for almost a year.

The antagonism afforded an open door for the missionary of the Cross of Christ. What could be done? Very much, if earnest effort was brought to bear. Preaching services were held in the different camps, and the good work continued. It was the writer's privilege to visit the camps and preach to the people the spirit of Christ, and to encourage them with the hope that better days were coming, and to tell them not to become discouraged. It was also a blessed opportunity to talk with individuals and to give them good advice. One minister who gave much time to these suffering people was Rev. D. L. Schultz, who spent his summer vacation among them as a friend and adviser. He preached many times in the different camps, and aroused the churches and Christian people to send the strikers clothing and other necessary things, like shoes and stockings, etc. This minister's work was so valuable that he finally resigned his pastorate, and was appointed by the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the Pittsburg Baptist Association to give his entire time as labor evangelist among these people.

We saw bare-footed women, ragged children, and sad-faced men. Thousands had all the furniture they had in the world stored in the canvas tents. Some had hardly room enough to move around in these tents. You would often see a cooking stove with a piece of old stovepipe sticking out through a hole in the canvas, while the wife and mother was trying to cook a little food for the hungry family. In the winter it was difficult to keep the poorly clad people warm. They needed underclothing, blankets, comforts and bedding. A call was sent out, and the churches responded nobly. Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Baptists, and other denominations sent hundred of boxes filled with clothing, shoes, bedding, food, etc., to relieve the suffering people. There were over eleven thousand children in the camps, and at the present time over three hundred children are sick. Many babies were born in the tents, and their poor mothers had all the discomforts of tent-life in these trying experiences. Hundreds of people would have starved to death if it had not been for the assistance of the miners' labor unions, and the churches, and the missionary work of individuals. Two Christian women went in and out among the camps and ministered to these unfortunate people. Rev. J. M. Bruce, superintendent of the work among the foreigners for the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and whose home is in New York City, also visited the camps, and became interested in this noble mission work.

I was impressed with the cheerfulness and courage of the people. Many farmers extended kindnesses and allowed them to pitch their tents on their lands, and gave them wood for fires. The farmers sympathize with the strikers; the former told me that the latter were law-abiding people, and that nothing was taken from their farms or gardens through theft, the strikers being honest and industrious. Several of the farmers themselves and their families attended the preaching services when I was present and some of them spoke.

The immigrants are coming at the rate of a million a year. How shall the churches evangelize these foreign-speaking people? By being neighborly and practical in befriending them in their troubles. I believe that in this strike, while there has been so much poverty and suffering, there will be manifested the splendid opportunity of the Christian Church to conciliate labor and capital, and to show the foreign-speaking people and the labor movement that the Christian people are on the side of justice, humanity and fair play between man and man. I believe that hundreds of these striking miners and their wives and children will be won to Christ by the noble efforts of the missionaries, who carry the Gospel and necessaries of life into their camps.

Through the assistance of the United Mine Workers' organization these twenty thousand cold, shivering and half-clad people exchanged their canvas tents for wooden shacks or barracks about the first of December, as has been said; the missionaries gave the eleven thousand children a Christmas treat, carrying them hundreds of pounds of candy and other gifts, and supplying them a Santa Claus, who distributed the presents. This deed of love and generosity brought rays of sunshine into the hearts of thousands of little children. Hundreds of the children cannot attend school, and they have no books, papers, or pictures; and the long winter days drag slowly for them as well as for their fathers and mothers. Such people in their affliction appreciate the Gospel of Christ and the loving deeds of practical missionaries.

AMONG THE WORKERS AT HOME AND ABROAD

—EVANGELIST DAN SHANNON lately closed one of the most notable revivals ever held in the San Joaquin Valley, Calif. Many conversions are reported.

—MRS. WILLIAM N. BREWSTER sailed on January 18 for China. Mrs. Brewster was here on furlough. Any one wishing to communicate with her may address her at Hinghua Orphanage, Hinghua, China.

—GRACE D. HILDEBRAND, the "Gospel Nightingale," has been singing in Massey Hall, Toronto, Canada, for the Canadian Temperance League to audiences of 3,000. Miss Hildebrand is in charge of a large children's choir at the People's Tabernacle, New York City.

—REV. ROBERT WILLAM MACCULLOUGH, Ph.D., pastor of Jackson Street Baptist church of Scranton, Pa., and Mrs. MacCullough began a two weeks' evangelistic campaign with the First Baptist Church, Bradford City, Pa., on February 8. Mr. MacCullough asks that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD pray for these services.

—EVANGELISTS HART and Magann of Fairbury, Ill., have just closed a revival campaign in Barberton, O. All of the Protestant churches united and erected a tabernacle, accommodating over three thousand, and nightly it was well filled. There were some remarkable conversions, and a general quickening of the churches.

—THERE WAS great rejoicing at the International Sunshine Society headquarters in New York, lately, when the fact was made known that the mortgages on the Brooklyn, N. Y., and Summit, N. J., Homes for Blind Babies had been paid off. Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, President-General of the Society, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "The mortgage on both the homes was finally paid on New Year's Eve, the last check being drawn about 11:30 on December 31."

—THE EIGHTH year of the Bible Verse Society closed with December, 1910. The general secretary reports a successful year's work. Membership has gradually and constantly increased and many of those who first joined are still enthusiastic in the society's interests. This year we are to study promises. Only those who have clung to a promise when all seemed lost, know their inestimable value. The promises have not been classified, as it was thought it might be more helpful for each student to arrange them for himself.—Alice Temple Benedict, General Secretary, 80 Main Street, Cochituate, Mass.

—THE BEAUTIFUL EDIFICE which was some years ago presented by Alexander Gibson, Sr., of Marysville, N. B., Canada, to the Methodist congregation of that town, was recently destroyed by fire. The church was valued at $65,000. This is a severe loss to the community as well as a crushing blow to the giver, who is now nearly one hundred years of age. Mr. Gibson was formerly one of Eastern Canada's great lumber kings and has the distinction of having seen a prosperous town grow up in the forest around his industries.

The Hague Convention Ratified

AFTER a long delay, which was to some extent unavoidable, the convention signed at the Second Hague Peace Conference in 1907 has been ratified by the United States Senate. As the convention originally stood there were constitutional objections raised both by our own government and that of Great Britain, but a protocol was added which removed the difficulties that were so serious as to endanger the success of the entire experiment of an International Prize Court which the convention was designed to create. When the court was first proposed, the Powers were not in accord on any code of maritime law, and the provision for constituting the Prize Court a court of final appeal was impracticable in certain countries, our own included. These difficulties have now been diplomatically arranged, and another important stage has been reached in the world's onward progress toward peace. To our own State Department and its resourceful and tactful head is due very largely the overcoming of obstacles which less than a generation ago would have wrecked almost any peace enterprise. It is well for the cause that it fell to the lot of our government to take the initiative. Justice Brewer of the United States Supreme Court in an address some two years ago directed attention to the persistent attempt to make of this country a great naval and military nation. Yet at the first Hague Conference we were foremost among those favoring limitation of armaments. Again, while our navy is increasing, we are still in the front rank of those who are striving for universal peace, founded on equity and justice and consideration for the rights of others. And the time will yet come when the great moral forces of this nation will assert themselves still more emphatically in the great struggle for international peace and arbitration. May that day be not far off; and when it comes, may we be prepared to fulfil our destined mission. "Blessed are the peacemakers."

The Postal Rate Controversy

THE battle between the periodical publishers and the group of Congressmen and Senators who have gathered to support President Taft's magazine tax proposition is becoming more and more animated. Argument and recrimination are filling columns of news and editorial space, while whole pages in the advertising sections of metropolitan daily papers have been bought by the publishers. Many of the newspapers, realizing the injustice of the proposal, are supporting the contentions of the publishers. Others, evidently satisfied as to the safety of their own position, have devoted space to all the absurd arguments advanced by the Post Office Department. The chief leg upon which the special interests, supported by President Taft and the Postmaster General, rest their defense of this move, is the plea that the government is carrying second-class mail matter, i. e., the magazines and weekly periodicals, at a loss. This is an extremely unwise admission, as it is but further proof of the accusations of poor business management. England, whose rate is practically the same as ours, nets a goodly sum each year on this class of matter. Canada, that land of long railway hauls and many difficult mail routes, presents a yearly profit on second-class matter though her rate is only one quarter of ours. A fair proportion of those earnings are made upon the identical magazines about which our department is protesting. Many magazines published in the United States ship in bulk to a city across the border and mail to their Canadian subscribers from that point.

If the Post Office Department is losing money on this class of mail matter—Why? It becomes a pertinent question as to what the fault is and where it lies.

Though the President and the Postmaster General may be entirely sincere in their attitude on this question, many of their supporters are not. One who is in favor of advancing the rate was perfectly frank in saying that he is for it because the independent magazines are giving the people so much information that some of them think they know more than members of the Senate. This seems perilously like an attempt to muzzle the independent publications, which have disclosed so much political corruption to the people. To do this is to Russianize the press of the United States.

Woodrow Wilson, Governor of New Jersey and lately president of Princeton University, says: "This proposed new postal rate would be a direct tax, and a very serious one, upon the formation and expression of opinion—its more deliberate formation and expression just at a time when opinion is concerning itself actively and effectively with the deepest problems of our politics and our social life."

The consummation of this proposal will achieve none of the objects sought and will certainly arouse a great deal of antagonism. By killing off many of the lesser publications and the first-class matter which they produce the department will find that it has merely strangled one source of revenue to create another.

The entire proposition can be qualified in no other way than as poor financing, poor politics and poor patriotism.

Work and Rest

"THERE remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." Somehow in these crowding, strenuous modern days when every day is rich in new opportunities, and every moment pulsates with possibilities of accomplishment, the old idea of rest, complete cessation from toil and struggle, has lost its attractiveness for many people. To the man or the woman who loves activity and work and hates idleness and stagnation, the text quoted suggests too much an end of active participation in things that are earnest and purposeful—of work that means usefulness and advancement in power. Nirvana is to such a soul eternal punishment.

But we may be thankful that God's rest does not mean such idleness. As God himself is never idle, he would not condemn his faithful ones to idleness. He would say to them, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The rest that remaineth to the people of God is a change of activity rather than an end. It is a release from the limitations and restrictions that hamper us here. It is an infinite broadening and enriching of service. It means the end of weakness, and weariness, and anxiety—the joy of work with the worry taken out—a life of endless activity with the soul of peace.

Those Graduation Gowns

SINCE this journal noted with approval the girls who last season made their own dainty graduation gowns at an incredibly small price, the movement has spread over the entire country, until in many places the girls are now emulating the heroines of last year. Rumors are flying in several States of seminaries and high schools in which the young ladies, like the model woman of the Proverbs, are laying their hands, so to speak, to the spindle and the distaff, and making their own graduation dresses. Cheesecloth, batiste and lawns are in great demand. Delicate cotton gimps and laces are sought out in every town by eager girl shoppers. Needles and thread are bought by the wholesale by one member of a class, and doled out to her mates. Fractions of a cent become important quantities to be reckoned. And thus the merry war goes on. It is at least more useful and at present more amusing than the gay parties at which the young people have been wont to spend their spare time exclusively heretofore.

But, in spite of the inevitable friction, it is all a move in the right direction, whatever form the details may take. Economy and efficiency must be promoted by it, and the skilful hand, on which the success of life so largely depends, will be exalted.

What Reciprocity Means

NOW that the House of Representatives has passed the Reciprocity Bill by a vote of 221 to 92, this measure, which now goes to the Senate, becomes one of foremost interest. In an authoritative article which appears on another page, Hon. Charles M. Pepper, one of the American Commissioners who negotiated the agreement with Canada, explains what reciprocity really means. He shows that Canada, being our nearest source of supply for food products, should be naturally regarded as a friendly neighbor with whom we can trade to mutual advantage and on the most liberal basis for both parties. A wise and far-sighted policy now would encourage a wholesome and desirable interchange of commodities, besides preventing the recurrence of such manipulations of the necessaries of life as those through which our people have suffered in recent years. The reciprocity agreement proposes to abolish the duties on a large number of food products, including cattle, sheep, fish, garden and dairy products, wheat and oats and other cereals, and to so materially reduce the duties on secondary products, including flour, ham and bacon, canned and salted goods, both vegetables and meat, that it could not be felt to be oppressive in any part of the country. In a word, the whole movement for reciprocity is in the direction of cheapening all the necessaries of life, and permanently lifting the burden of high prices. The reciprocity schedule will, of course, go much further than we have indicated.

Secretary Knox has defined its object as "generous, equitable and reciprocal trade relations between the United States and Canada; the natural, logical and inevitable result of forces that began their operations when the continent was first settled by Europeans." He adds that the interests of both consumer and producer are maintained in every part of the agreement.

It is not to be supposed that all of our people will be satisfied with reciprocity at the outset. Our American lumbermen may chafe; our New England fishermen may feel that their ancient privileges are invaded; our Western cattlemen, our great wheat growers and stock raisers may feel that their interests have not been duly considered. But beyond and above all other considerations, there is the welfare of the whole people to be taken into account, and this is the moving principle in the reciprocity treaty. It is an effort to reduce the cost of living and to make life better on both sides of the border.

One Week More

MARCH 7, the first anniversary of the death of Dr. Klopsch, is now less than a week off. It is the date fixed for the general Memorial tribute, which is designed to endow the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn as an enduring monument to the memory of its founder. We would urge all of our readers who are in sympathy with the movement, to send in their offerings during the coming week and be personally represented in this beautiful work, which Dr. Klopsch loved better than all else. A contribution to the Memorial Fund now is a peculiarly timely and fitting tribute to the man who "loved God and little children."

The Crown Prince Returning

THE Crown Prince of Germany, who has for some time been making a tour of inspection of the Far East, has changed his plans, and instead of visiting the Philippines, China and Japan, according to his intentions, will return home at once. There are several reasons for this disappointment which he suffers. One is that the fearful mortality of the plague in China would involve too great personal peril. His father's health is poor, and his wife is suffering from a tubercular malady, and these may have been incentives to his return. It is also hinted that the political complications in Europe and a clash with the British Government officials in India may have had something to do with the home-coming. As it is, the Crown Prince claims to have had the time of his life every way, especially in his success in hunting big game in India. The hunting experience in India is very different from that which he has in his own land, where the royal sportsman stations himself in a decorated stand while the bands are playing and the game is driven within easy range. The royal family to which Frederick belongs has been remarkable for its ability, practical industry, integrity and common sense. His father, who promised at the start to be impetuous and warlike in his administration, has shown singular ability as a scholar and statesman, deep spirituality as a Christian and the highest kind of courage as a moral reformer. It is to be hoped that he will be spared very many years as the head of the great German nation and that when the time shall come for his son Frederick to take his place on the throne he may be enabled to rule the people with as great wisdom, patriotism and devotion to God and his fellow-men as his father has done. The advice which the ancient king gave to his son who was to succeed him is no doubt given actually as well as in spirit by Emperor William to the Crown Prince Frederick:

Be thou strong therefore and show thyself a man; and keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and his testimonies, as it is written in the law of Moses, that thou mayest prosper in all that thou doest, and whithersoever thou turnest thyself. (I. Kings 2:2, 3.)

Millions in a Thought

The newspapers have reported that a man in California had a bright thought, which he proceeded to coin into $17,000,000. George Gates, a G. A. R. veteran of the Civil War, had been working for some time toward the invention of a concrete railroad tie. He is seventy years of age, and his efforts and experiments were looked upon by those who were closest to him as the harmless visions and plays of an old man; but he demonstrated his ability to do what he undertook, secured patent rights, and it is said that a syndicate of railroads has bought his patent and given him $17,000,000 in cash for it. It may be that the printers have gotten too many zeros to the amount, but there is a strong possibility that the reports are true and that the new thought of the old soldier has made him a multi-millionaire. We have the records of the discoveries of young men and those in middle life which have brought large financial returns, and it is a pleasure to record the achievement of this old soldier and patriot and to rejoice with him in his financial good fortune. It is claimed that his invention will contribute greatly to the comfort and success of railroad transportation, and that he will be hailed as an inventor and benefactor. This veteran bids fair to go off the stage as one of olden times did:

And he died in a good old age, full of days, riches, and honor. (I Chron. 29:28.)

Unmindful of Jewels and Coin

Death is at his old game, spoiling the plans of the living. Outside the walls of Pompeii the other day a petrified woman was found with her hands full of jewels. She was running to escape the eruption of the volcano and was caught under the ashes and lava. In her stone fingers were bracelets, necklaces, rings and two earrings containing each twenty-one perfect pearls, set in gold, representing a bunch of grapes. The woman was doubtless a person of intelligence, culture and wealth, but death did not care for her or her jewels, and tripped her when she tried to make her escape. The paper recording the discovery of this petrified woman also made mention of this incident: John Cremett, seventy-eight years old, died while counting his money in his room. Mrs. Patrick McMahon, with whom he boarded, knocked at his door to call him to luncheon, and found him sitting in a chair, dead. Upon a table drawn up in front of the chair were $3,670 in cash and two bank books showing deposits of a considerable amount. The old man was happy at his task, but death rudely dragged him away from it. As in the centuries past, so now, death enters the palace of wealth and culture and takes the woman away from her jewels and pleasures and confronts the rich man in his money getting and counting, leaving the coin on the table for other fingers. The woman buried in the ashes and the old man dead in his chair and those like them took no jewels or coin with them into the other life. They carried with them only thought, affection, character, faith, the only real treasures of the soul.

Naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labor, which he may carry in his hand. (Eccles. 5:15.)

Marvelous New Fire-Alarm

New York City is to have a system of fire protection superior to all of the old methods and which will doubtless be universally accepted throughout the country. The new system is called the air alarm. Its basis consists of a small hollow wire of copper alloy, one-eighth of an inch in diameter and containing a tiny insulated wire. The hollow wire acts as a heat conductor for the air, whose expansion causes a fire alarm to sound. The tiny wire is called the trouble wire. If for any reason the hollow wire is cut or broken the result is that an electric circuit is also broken which causes the little wire to send a "trouble alarm" to the headquarters of the alarm company. The fire headquarters hears nothing unless there be a real fire at the time the wire breaks or is cut. Loops of this inconspicuous hollow wire are strung around the ceiling or tucked in behind the molding of the rooms, houses, tenements and buildings to be protected, the loops ending in a detector, which consists of a disc containing a delicate diaphragm. If a fire starts in a room the air in the hollow tube expands under the influence of the heat and operates the sensitive diaphragm in the detector, causing it to close an electrical circuit which sets in operation all of the marvelous fire alarm machinery. The new system plans to deal with incipient fires instead of conflagrations under full way. It gives an instant alarm. If a pair of curtains catch fire, or even a newspaper, the alarm is sounded within ten to forty seconds. Besides, another alarm is rung on a box outside the building, which indicates the location of the fire. The fire department is notified almost instantly when the blaze begins. The principle of the new system is to prevent a conflagration by attacking the fire at its beginning. That is the best method of destroying the fire of evil in the human soul. The devastations of moral evil are to be best prevented by vigorously attacking the beginnings of thought, action or habit. All of the sins, as well as those of the tongue, if not quenched at the start are liable to grow from small beginnings into a fiercely hot and destructive conflagration.

Carnegie's Advice to Girls

Andrew Carnegie was introduced to the girl employees of a newspaper office in New York recently and gave some advice to them which is worthy of a wider hearing than they received at the time. After contrasting the happiness of toil with the disadvantage of being born rich, he said: "Most millionaires' wives are not happy. They have too many luxuries and few mental resources to fall back upon. Don't refuse a man simply because he is a millionaire. I would rather be born poor than a millionaire. I have had some experience in both directions. I have made forty-two millionaires in my time, but I want to say the only right a man has to wealth lies in his acquiring it by some useful labor. The great trouble with the wealth of to-day is that the sons of millionaires do not realize the necessity of being of use to the community. I shall never forget how proud I was when I got my first wages of $1.25 a week, and how I felt when I was raised to $1.50 as a telegraph operator. To take home that sum to my good mother gave me such a feeling of manly independence. I owe a great deal to my mother. She was a seamstress, cook, washlady, and never until late in life had a servant in the house. And yet she was a cultivated woman. She read Channing and kept up with the literature of the day. When I was a little tot she used to read good books to me. You young women have every opportunity for literary culture, and you ought to avail yourselves of it. You ought to be very proud with money earned so honorably, for money that is not earned honorably will never do you any good." This common-sense encouragement to industry from such a source will do a world of good, and his exquisite tribute to his washwoman mother is tender and beautiful beyond expression. His tribute to his mother's industry and virtue calls to mind the description of the ideal wife and mother:

She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness; her children arise up and call her blessed. (Prov. 31:27, 28.)

Youthful Heroism

Three children were playing "snap the whip" on a pond at Carteret, N. J., when they broke through the ice and were about to drown. The youngest. Arthur Curtis, twelve years old, managed to catch hold of the thick ice on the edge of the hole and pull himself up. He saw a long plank near the pond, which he ran to hurriedly and placed across the hole, and running on the plank out to the centre of the hole, he seized Grace Woodward, who was almost drowned, and dragged her over to the safe ice. He ran back and caught Bert Campbell, aged fourteen, who was also about gone, and pulled him to a place of safety. The two were resuscitated and taken to their homes at Union Hill, N. J. This little fellow, Arthur Curtis, was a real hero. He showed singular energy in being able to climb out of water above his head through the thin breaking ice and up on the thicker surface. He showed uncommon common sense in the use he made of the board in the rescue of his companions. He exemplified real chivalry in saving the girl companion first, and great agility and power in making the rescue complete. Never for a moment did he think of himself nor did he feel that he had done anything worthy of any especial commendation. Over against the carelessness and recklessness of the street urchin who set fire to the dress of a little playmate and burned her up, and the degeneracy of the little girl who the other day shot two boy playmates to death on purpose with a pistol, there is the beautiful, modest heroism of this twelve-year-old boy, Arthur Curtis. His example should suggest to us the necessity of diligence in the rescue of those who are in spiritual peril, thereby placing ourselves in harmony with the will of heaven.

Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish. (Matt. 18:14).

I think it a grand idea to start an endowment fund for the Children's Paradise, and this will be a memorial fund to our beloved Dr. Klopsch. I want to add my mite when it is started.

Elaborate Outfit Operating at Half Capacity

How Second-class Matter Is Handled

Every Facility Is at the Government's Disposal

IN THE fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, the United States Postal Department did an aggregate business of $224,128,657.62, and lost on its transaction $5,848,567. This is an appalling fact whose only redeeming qualification is that the deficit is $11,593,152 less than that of 1909. To conduct the great postal service of this country the Government owns or rents 59,580 buildings and employs about 280,000 men. Its right to the monopoly of the postal business is made absolute, both by law and by popular verdict; yet attempts are being made continually to represent this branch of the Government service as a vast philanthropy. This is only an endeavor to justify atrociously bad business management by an appeal to the sentiment of the nation. As the prize political plum tree, the Postal Department outbears all the others of the Government orchard, and those who dispense the fruit are loath to see such a potent source of "influence" go from them into the hands of efficient business men.

The publisher of one of America's greatest newspapers says: "If any private corporation had the privileges and monopolies enjoyed by the Post Office, it would make money too fast to count." That this statement is not such an exaggeration as it may appear at first glance, is proved by the results attending the postal operations of other countries. Though lower rates prevail on many classes of mail matter in Canada, the Dominion Postal Department cleared $743,210.25 on an aggregate business amounting to only about one-twentieth of that of the United States. A proportionate profit on the business of this country would mean $15,012,887.45 put into the public pocket, instead of a purloining of over $5,000,000 from it. Great Britain in 1910 cleared $24,543,725 and even Japan, a land of small per capita wealth, whose people are only now being educated to the use of the Post Office, made $9,850,000.

The failure of our Post Office Department to show earnings is due to the policy of the Department to drive business from its own hands as much as possible; with the result that carriers go on their routes, both urban and rural, with only a fraction of the material that could be handled without the expenditure of an extra dollar. Yet the Department makes no effort to interest the public in any of its possibly profitable activities. Daniel P. Cahill of the Chicago Post Office, said recently: "The Postal Service offers a peculiarly inviting field for the exercise of genuine salesmanship. Only a small proportion of the public knows anything of the service we have to offer." Continuing, he cites the stamped envelope business, special delivery, registration, money orders, and the almost unknown six-cent coupon which has the virtue of turning itself into foreign postage in lands thousands of miles away, as minor examples of the chances that the department already possesses, but does not urge in any businesslike way.

A lesion of such huge dimensions as the postal deficit, in the governmental affairs of what is supposedly the shrewdest nation on earth, must have an explanation. Instead of acknowledging its deficiencies and attempting to remedy them, the Postal Department sought a scapegoat, and evidently thought it had found him in the publishing interests of the land. "Second-Class Mail Matter" was promptly blamed for the entire deficit, piled up by mismangement.

At first newspapers were included with the magazines as undesirable customers. "Then the great dailies were able to show the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that they do not use the post office to any appreciable extent because it is slow, unreliable, and much more expensive than other means of transportation, and that they employ it only where other methods are not handy. So some thirty periodicals, three-quarters of whose output is sent to distributing centres in freight cars, are left alone to be the victims of the curious ignorance in command at Washington. The Postmaster General now recurs to his earliest idea of business killing, which he at first advocated for all publications, viz.: to divide the contents between reading and advertising matter and re-classify, leaving the 'privileges' to the 'literary' end and taxing the business part of the publication."

It becomes self-evident that this proposal is not an increase in postal rates, but a mere subterfuge for the levying of a direct tax upon the magazines—who knows?—perhaps the standpatter's payment of some old insurgency and muck-raking accounts. More than this, it would pass to clerks in the post offices the decision of questions that might well receive the most careful consideration of a supreme court judge. It would make it possible for even a minor official to sway the fortunes of the great periodical press of America. Endless misunderstandings and bickering would be sure to result. Many of the magazines which operate on a small margin of profit would be compelled to cease publication. Henry Wallace, one of the great farm paper publishers, has gone on record with the statement that many of the farm publications would be driven out of business. What the snuffing out of many of these periodicals would mean to millions of rural and semi-rural Americans, is beyond comprehension. The educational and refining influences which they now carry to the most isolated sections would be wiped out with a single action. If the Post Office Department can claim any title to philanthropy, it must rest that claim on the service it has done the people by permitting the distribution at reasonable rates of the newspapers and periodicals of the country. It is well known to the advertising world that magazine publicity has, during the last year, created at least $1,500,000 worth of first-class mail matter. Now as one of the most natural results of a tax on advertising will be an increase in the rates charged for its publication, and a consequent lessening of the amount handled and the resulting business, a consideration of the advisability of killing the goose that lays the golden egg might be advisable at Washington.

This attempt to foist upon the publishers the job of paying for some one else's inefficiency is a mere evasion by the Postal Department which would still further postpone the coming of the inevitable solution—a general parcels post. The pressure for this improvement has become so strong that the Postmaster General has recommended its adoption for rural routes. This, however, is not enough! During these years that the Post Office Department has been sinking millions of the people's money, four great express companies have been piling up fabulous fortunes by handling, under keen business management, the very custom which the department has refused to accommodate. When John Wanamaker, the great merchant, was Postmaster General of the United States, twenty years ago, he said there were four mighty obstacles in the way of parcels post. When asked to name them he gave the names of these four great express companies. These companies have been for years declaring dividends ranging from four to seventeen per cent. on a capitalization which represents many times the value of the property employed in the conduct of their business. The division, every few years, of sums of from twelve to twenty-four millions has not been at all unusual.

Nathan B. Williams of Fayetteville, Ark., whose treatise on the competition of the Post Office and the express companies was made a part of the Congressional Record, said recently:

"The leading thought in the President's message is: 'Enforce the laws we have rather than enact new or experimental ones.' This fits the parcels post situation most exactly. We have had in this country since its foundation a parcels post system. It is not a new and untried thing. The only thing about it that is yet untried is the effect upon postal revenues and upon business of the enforcement of existing law which prohibits express companies from carrying any letter or packet over a railroad or other post route for hire. This law was passed in 1848 and as long as it was enforced we had no postal deficits."

The parcels post systems of the European nations work with precision, speed and profit. Eleven pounds is the weight limit in Germany and Great Britain, and that weight may consist of anything from live animals to a tub of butter. Explosives and insufficiently protected fragile vessels containing liquids are about the only things debarred. The great morning daily papers of London contain a department of classified advertisements called "Marketing by Mail," in which appear the advertisements of all manner of small wares and perishable articles, fresh fish, farm products, fruits and a thousand other things, all of which are handled speedily and conveniently and greatly to the satisfaction of all concerned. Isn't this what the United States wants?

Not in taxation of that which has become one of the motive forces of business—advertising—but in the adoption of business management and enterprise lies the salvation of our Postal Department. It is time to prune out a lot of dense foliage and dead wood and graft in some modern ideas of management and enterprise, such as may be seen in the operation of the British and German Post Offices.

Great Old Folks' Bible Class

THERE is in the Sunday School of the Baptist church in Marlboro, Mass., a Bible class so unique in some respects that it is doubtful if it can be duplicated anywhere. The most interesting thing about the class is that its teacher, Mrs. Nancy Leland, is a woman eighty-six years of age, and yet she did not miss but one Sunday with her class last year. The class has eighteen members, many of whom are grandmothers, and none are too young to enjoy that distinction. The aggregate ages of the members of the class make a total of 1,170 years. The youngest member of the class is fifty-two. The prize for unfailing attendance belongs to Mrs. S. A. Carpenter, who is sixty-two. She has for four successive years won the badge given annually to the member most constant in attendance. Regarding her Sunday School attendance Mrs. Carpenter says: "When I was a child up in New Hampshire, I used to walk four miles to Sunday School, when it was not convenient for my father to hitch up his horses and carry me to the village. It seemed to me that a person should not always ask the easiest way to go to divine service. That is just the way I feel now, and I wish that young folks all felt the same, and were not so often willing to make a rain-storm or a heavy snow an excuse for not attending church and Sunday School."

The old ladies of this remarkable Bible class evidently do not allow any ordinary rain or snow-storm to keep them away from the class, and when a woman now in her eighty-sixth year is in her place as teacher of a Bible class every Sunday but one for a year, it argues well for her good health and her fidelity to duty.

I do most heartily agree that Mont-Lawn should be a monument to Dr. Klopsch.

FRANCES BESSON.
Frenchtown, N. J.

THE KLOPSCH MEMORIAL

WHEN this copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches you, you will have but seven days more in which to work for the Endowment of Mont-Lawn.

It does not seem like a year since Dr. Klopsch passed away. The spirit of his personality has been with us so constantly and so vividly, that it has seemed but a little while ago that the sad news went out to the world. And yet March 7 will be the first anniversary of his death. Dr. Klopsch was himself so full of the spirit of good cheer and light-hearted happiness in his work, that we never have been able to believe he would have wanted one of his friends to set aside the anniversary of his death as a day of mourning. Rather would he have rejoiced that it has been set aside as the day of days upon which all his friends will rally to the support of his favorite charity—Mont-Lawn on the Hudson.

In the middle of this page is a picture of the great gate of Mont-Lawn, the gate over which he wrote: "I Love God and Little Children" (you can see it there if you examine the picture closely), and in front, with eager faces and open mouths, proclaiming their childish happiness, stand hundreds of children from the New York slums.

What do you suppose it was that made them so happy! Why were the faces so eager, why did the hands wave so vigorously and joyously? It was this: That photograph was taken one Saturday just as Dr. Klopsch arrived at Mont-Lawn, and the children, his children, were expressing their joy at his coming. There was always this spontaneous outburst when he reached the Home, for he was the life of the place, just as he was the inspiration of every enterprise, religious and secular, into which he entered.

That was the spirit of Dr. Klopsch—the spirit of joyousness—and that we are sure will be the spirit, on March 7, of all his friends who have been working to make Mont-Lawn his Memorial.

That there are thousands at work is shown by the letters that have come in from earnest friends, stating that they mean to secure as many subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as possible before March 7. The offer of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to give to Mont-Lawn one-half of all money for new yearly subscriptions received up to that date, has been welcomed by many who have wanted to help along the work, and have taken advantage of the offer to increase the volume of their own contributions. One friend writes:

"DEAR CHRISTIAN HERALD: I think your offer to give half of all new subscriptions received before March 7 to Mont-Lawn, just what Dr. Klopsch would approve of if he were alive. I am too poor to give much myself, but I can get you some new subscribers, and that will mean more to the Fund than if I sent you just my own little mite.

"Yours in the Master's work, H. H."

It certainly will, and in more ways than one. If, for instance, our friend sent in ten subscriptions accompanied by $15, not only would $7.50 go to the Home and our friend become a Patron, but the influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would be extended through ten new households.

On the other hand, we have received letters from friends who state that they are not in a position to secure subscriptions, yet they would like to contribute to Mont-Lawn and at the same time extend the influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. One correspondent writes:

"Could I not send you the required amount to become a Patron and have THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sent to ten friends who might be benefited by it?"

Our answer to this is the following letter, which we have received from a subscriber in North Dakota:

"February 10, 1911.

"GENTLEMEN: Can you send me THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of January 25? I loaned it and it was lost, and I want it. Let me say that I am not a Christian, but THE HERALD is the finest paper that comes to my house, and I would not be without it for many times its price, and I will try to get some subscribers at once. No home should be without it; it will bring a man (thoughtful) nearer the real than anything I have ever read, and it has helped me to be better.

"Wishing for the highest results from every angle, I am, Your well wisher, D. G."

Is not that a wonderful example of the power of the Word of God to influence even those who are without the fold? "I am not a Christian, but THE HERALD will bring a man (thoughtful) nearer to the real, than anything I have ever read." Here is one who acknowledges that he is without that Word, and yet admits its power. "It has helped me to be better." Ay, and it is helping thousands of others to be better. As a matter of fact, we can think of no greater example of missionary effectiveness than THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Its great work is not confined entirely to the Christian household, for it is read by many who are without the assurance of the Gospel, and who yet admit that they would not be without the paper "for many times its price."

You can do no more effective missionary work than to extend the influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by placing it in as many homes as you can. Cast around you and think of those friends or acquaintances who are not now subscribers to this paper, and ask them to become so. If they will not subscribe, and you still wish them to receive THE CHRISTIAN HERALD regularly, cut out the set of ten coupons which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD two weeks ago, or if you have not that issue of the paper, write us and we will send you as many coupons as you can use. Write on each coupon the name of a friend, if possible the head of a family, who will be benefited by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Send these coupons to us, together with the price of the new subscriptions, and we will enter the names upon our list, and send THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year.

Can you think that the effect of receiving THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year will be other than that which is acknowledged in the letter quoted above?

Many of our friends have written that they have secured several names, but are waiting until they secure ten before sending them. This is not necessary. Let us have them at once. You will be credited with them just the same and your friends will have the advantage of receiving THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at once.

But do not forget that you have less than a week in which to act. You would not forgive yourself if you allowed March 7 to go by and you had not taken advantage of this opportunity to become a Patron of the Klopsch Memorial. Already many have earned the right to have their names included in the roster, as you will see from the partial list printed on this page. Of course the great majority of names will not be sent in until just prior to the great day, but we would advise those who intend to have their "names written there" to act as quickly as possible. The names of Patrons will of course be printed in the order as received.

But do not feel because you may not be able to procure ten new subscriptions that your effort to procure a smaller number will be unappreciated. If each family now reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD procured only one new subscriber the Klopsch Memorial would become assured and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family would become one of the most influential congregations on earth.

If you cannot procure ten, send in as many as you can. Every one helps. Use the coupons freely, signing each with your name so that you will be sure to get credit for every new reader influenced by you.

Last week we published a complete description of Mont-Lawn. Show this to your friends, and they will realize what a wonderful institution Mont-Lawn really is, and what a world power for good THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may become with your help. After all, as we have said so many times, it is not your money we want. It is your influence with your friends. Give us that and give it now and the Endowment of the Klopsch Memorial will be assured.

Patrons who have sent in ten or more subscriptions and whose names will be inscribed on tablets in the Children's Temple at Mont-Lawn:

James W. Black	Rev. Charles H. Mead
Jacob Persinger	Charlotte D. Sandison
Harriett E. Strong	Mrs. C. Doolittle
A. H. Dawley	Ella DeBaun
Mrs. D. B. Bishop	Eleanor H. Porter
Mrs. M. M. Little	Eva J. Wick

"Is Your Name Written There?"

THE MEMORIAL COMMITTEE

The MEMORIAL COMMITTEE, composed of people of national and even international fame, is seven in number, and every member is well known to the readers of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. The Committee is as follows:

BISHOP JAMES HENRY DARLINGTON
REAR-ADMIRAL CHARLES D. SIGSBEE
MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER
HON. CHARLES M. PEPPER
IRVING BACHELLER
MRS. SARAH J. BIRD
REV. J. WESLEY HILL, Chairman

New Yearly Subscriptions received by the CHRISTIAN HERALD from January 25th up to time of going to press, are as follows:

Already Credited	1073
February 4, 1911	78
February 6, 1911	161
February 7, 1911	73
February 8, 1911	103
February 9, 1911	114
February 10, 1911	143
Total,	1,745

75c. of each of these, or $1,308.75 in all, have been credited to the "Klopsch Memorial Fund"

Now a Famine Ship for China

"The Christian Herald" Is Now Sending 10,000 Sacks of Flour to the Starving Chinese Peasants—Many Missionaries Unite in Appealing for Help as the Crisis is Approaching

Helpless and Starving

Famine Refugees Waiting for Relief

A Village Elder

CHINA'S double battle with plague and famine continues. In the north, there are indications that the plague has been checked along the Russian frontier; but its ravages elsewhere have been frightful. Among the Chinese in Harbin, it seems to have gained a new foothold. Piles of dead are cremated almost every day. One correspondent cables from Peking that whole villages have been depopulated. The plague has broken out among the Chinese troops at Harbin with fatal results. The victims are generally between the ages of twenty and forty. In the Chinese town of Assikho, east of Harbin, four hundred were dying daily. In one house there were fifty dead, and the building and all its contents were burned.

In the southern provinces, in spite of the extension of the relief work, the famine situation grows more menacing. Thousands of the refugees are sleeping on the ground outside of the city walls of Nanking, the southern capital. The plague zone is now so close to the famine section that the government is apprehensive that the epidemic may spread southward. Cordons of troops and police surround some of the famine-stricken villages. Bands of armed robbers, recruited from the famine refugees, are looting the country. These outlaw bands come from the direction of Hunan province, where the famine has made men desperate.

Arranging to Send a Famine Cargo

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relief fund has sent up to date $26,000 to the Relief Committees at Shanghai and Chin-kiang, and arrangements are now under way to send 10,000 sacks of American "Gold Medal" flour to Chin-kiang from Seattle. The flour has been purchased and forwarded to Seattle. This shipment will be hurried forward without delay. Every pound of flour sent to China now will do double duty, as it will be fully equal in value to two pounds bought in any part of China at present prices. Every reader of this journal is invited to be represented in this life-saving cargo. Letters from the missionaries—from several of which we give extracts below—show the great need of such a shipment, which would be a most effective supplement to the efforts of the Relief Committees. In the last great famine, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers supplied two cargoes of flour for the sufferers, one of which went by the troopship Buford and the other by the Logan. The sailing of these two vessels from San Francisco was a memorable event, and the arrival of the cargoes at Chin-kiang, their point of destination, was made the occasion of a great demonstration of welcome. Many thousands of lives were undoubtedly saved by that timely gift of food, and it is hoped that the present cargo may be equally fruitful of blessed results.

The Famine Seen Through Chinese Eyes

The Shanghai National Review, in a recent issue, devotes much space to the famine and gives many pitiful photographic illustrations showing that the horrors of the last great famine are being repeated. These pictures are so realistic that, if reproduced in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, they would cause a shudder of revulsion among our readers. The Review makes a strong appeal for the world's charity in behalf of the sufferers. It describes them as chiefly industrious and peace-loving farmer folk, who will compare favorably with the peasantry of similar countries. Accustomed as they are to periodic floods, they only complain when the disaster becomes overwhelming. In the recent floods, eighty per cent. of the farm section was ruinously inundated.

A writer in the Shanghai Mercury, after a visit to Yung-chow, describes the condition of affairs in that section. There was a great exodus of peasants from the flooded sections. Thousands located themselves in mat houses outside the gates of Yung-chow, and the authorities gave them what food they could spare and sent them away, although many afterwards returned. Another correspondent writes telling of cases of death from starvation which he observed at Suchien. Of twenty families, only three had any "dry" food, the rest ate greens mixed with grain and a little gruel.

Two Millions in Danger of Death

Our State Department in Washington has advices from Consul-General Wilder in Shanghai, in which he states that 2,000,000 must die of starvation unless relieved. There will be no crops until the end of May. He adds that Chinese relief is wholly inadequate. In the famine districts families are giving away their children. Dead bodies lie by the roadside and the severe cold and snow increase the distress. The governors of several American States have issued appeals in behalf of the sufferers.

Mr. H. S. Ferguson of the China Inland Mission writes from Ying-chow: "Already many have eaten their last food and have fled; many more will soon have to do so unless relief reaches them. Everything that can be eaten is being used as food. A great slaughter of cattle, needed for cultivating the soil, is taking place, because the owners are not able to feed them. There is also a great cutting down of trees, and firewood is cheap; for when farmers have nothing else to sell they sell their trees. The distress will intensify as the season advances. What will the Lord have us do by way of relief? We look for his guidance."

Sufferers Selling Their Children

The Rev. E. C. Lobenstine (A.B.C.F.M.), of Hwai Yuen, writes: "I personally am of the opinion that money spent on relief will be of direct service to the Church. Two cents gold will keep a person alive a day. Two dollars will save one from now till the wheat harvest. Ten dollars will save a family from starvation. I am advocating the purchase of bean cake and millet in Manchuria. These can be shipped directly to Nanking in a short time and from there the new railroad can carry the grain and cake to a point thirty miles from here, from whence it can be distributed. The magistracy of Hwai Yuen has an estimated population of approximately 300,000 persons. The number of 'famine sufferers' (in Hwai Yuen), those who must be relieved or die, is approximately 175,000 persons. Reports come in daily of people dying of starvation. The poor who have children are trying to sell them, but even they will not sell for a pittance. Help is needed at once. As soon as the real cold and wet weather sets in the death rate will increase greatly. I have gone over my estimate of a few weeks ago, that, in all, 1,000,000 people would be dependent on outside relief or probably die of starvation. The missionaries in this section are ready to distribute relief."

The Famine Refugees

The Central China Famine Relief Committee in Shanghai has a letter from Dr. Patterson of Suchien, who writes: "We are convinced that many people will die from malnutrition. There are said to be 20,000 refugees coming back up the Canal. Those who have absolutely no hope at home have gone away. Many families have sent away some of their members, so as to lessen the drain on the food supply. A great many families are eating only grue even now. One particularly pitiful case occurred here the other day. A poor man realized that his end was near, and begged for a mat to be buried in; then dragged himself toward the burying ground as far as he could and lay down to die with his face to the ground, hugging the mat. The refugees, especially the little children, suffer extremely this cold weather. They are provided only with a couple of mats and their clothing is insufficient. The little crying tots stringing down the trail behind their mothers, with their little legs trembling as they walk, are enough to melt the heart of the most hardened."

In a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from a reader in Passaic, N. J., the writer says:

What a Gift Now Will Do

A year or so ago I traveled through portions of the affected district. We were at Shanghai, then went to Nanking, back to Chin-kiang and from there by boat up through the Yangtse River, all the way back to Hankow. I was told by business men and officials as well as by missionaries that scarcely a year passed in which there was not great scarcity of food, amounting to famine conditions, in some parts of China. The population is so dense that even the partial failure of a crop in a small district seriously hurts many people, because the portion on which each individual depends is so very small even with a full crop. If this is cut down or taken away entirely by adverse conditions, suffering quickly sets in. Neighboring districts, perhaps less affected, have little or nothing to spare. True, the Chinese seem able to get along on less food than most races and still do a great amount of hard work, but they also are patient and uncomplaining under conditions which we would call intolerable. Hence, when they cry out for help, their suffering is not just beginning, but has been endured for some time. So THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relief work is very timely and deserves every encouragement as well as general liberal support.

Knowing this, what reader will not be anxious to deny himself or herself something and send the equivalent in money to the starving Chinese? Less than two cents, I believe, will support a human being for a day. Who would not spare a dollar when it will do so much?

It is particularly gratifying to know that the present management of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is determined to follow the same high ideals which made its founder happy and which practically and energetically applied, carried happiness to hundreds and thousands near and far. You are giving an illustration of practical Christianity in your present work, and I am glad to enclose my check to assist the same.

All contributions for the relief work should be addressed "China Famine Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York." Acknowledgments of contributions will be found on another page.

Sunday Schools Helping China

FROM Mr. James Tanis, Paterson, N. J., editor of the Sabbath School Bode, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received the sum of $240.01, being the third collection made through the Sabbath Schools in connection with this organization. The children in these schools are doing a wonderful work for China, and giving a fine example to Sunday Schools in other parts of the country. Their gift will be forwarded in the next remittance to China through the State Department.

CHEAPENING THE COST OF LIVING

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

Canadian Harvesting — On a Canadian Sheep Ranch — In a Wheat Field

By CHARLES M. PEPPER

Canadian Reciprocity Commissioner

PRESIDENT TAFT in negotiating the reciprocity agreement with Canada had several objects in mind. One of these was to see if it were not possible to cheapen the cost of living for the great masses of our people so that the butcher's and the grocer's bill might be cut down and the contents of the housewife's market-basket be added to without adding to the price.

Hon. Chas. M. Pepper

It happens that Canada is our nearest source of supply for a large number of food products. It would seem to follow that if those supplies could be got across the boundary—which is after all an artificial line so far as crops and articles of common production are concerned—under a little better terms than at present, the prospect of cheaper food would be improved. It was felt that if the tariff duties were entirely removed or reduced this would encourage a much freer movement of the articles which the two countries produce in common. It would thus be certain to prevent manipulations and artificial fluctuations under which the people who produce get less for their products than they should and the people who consume pay much more. So when the Department of State with Secretary Knox at the head undertook the negotiations with representatives of the Canadian Government the effort was made to facilitate the free movement of products on both sides of the line.

The result of the negotiations was an agreement by each government, subject to approval by Congress in the United States and by the Dominion Parliament in Canada, entirely to remove the duties on a large number of products, such as wheat, oats and other grains; cattle and other live stock; fish and fresh fruits and vegetables, and milk, cream, butter and eggs. In this way it was believed that when in one section of the United States there was a scarcity that section might draw on some part of Canada to make good the deficiency, while in some parts of Canada the reverse process might be worked out. In doing this it was believed that no more harm would come to the people of either country than came to the people of the different States of the United States when the Constitution was adopted and no duties were allowed to hamper the movement of the products of the different States from one to another.

Following the same idea of cheapening food by enlarging the sources of supply and facilitating the interchange across the border, duties were very largely reduced on the leading staples usually known as foodstuffs partly manufactured. This is to say that on secondary food products the duties were very largely reduced. These articles included flour; bacon and ham; canned meats and vegetables of all kinds; fresh and salted meats and lard.

The further movement on the part of the United States to cheapen the cost of living was by providing for the free admission of what is known as rough lumber. For many years there has been a very strong demand on the part of the people of the prairie States and of other States that the destruction of our own forests should be lessened by enabling us to draw on the forest supplies of Canada which has enormous timber areas. By making lumber in the United States free, two objects are thus attained. At the same time the duty on dressed lumber is very largely reduced, yet the wages which go to laborers for planing or finishing it are paid out in the United States.

While the leading purpose in negotiating the reciprocity agreement was to obtain for the people of the United States additions to their sources of supply of the common necessities of life, it was also desirable that they should have the benefit of the Canadian market for their surplus agricultural and other products. So Canada agreed to give free entry to cotton seed oil, which is a very important product of the Southern cotton growers. Canada also conceded the free admission of fresh fruits and vegetables of all kinds. It happens that sections of the United States as far away from Canada as Florida and Southern California, can ship their fruits and vegetables to the Dominion, since the season so far north does not enable fruit to be matured until mid-summer. Taken with the freight rates the duties levied by Canada made the burden on the fruit and vegetable growers in these distant sections a heavy one and limited the market. With free entry, however, they will not only have good profits, but will be certain to increase their trade. In the same way the orchardists near the Canadian border will get their products into Canada much cheaper than formerly, and can therefore command a better price. This also is true of various products of mixed farming and of clover and timothy seeds.

In providing for this freer movement of traffic across the border it was also desirable to have the interest of the American mechanic and artisan in mind. Could a larger and better market be given in Canada for the products of American factories, it was certain that there would be better employment at home and that the schedule of wages would have a better chance of remaining steady. There was moreover the certainty that Canada's population is growing very rapidly. The present population of 7,500,000 will soon be 10,000,000 and then will mount up to 15,000,000. The market of this growing population for many manufactured articles of the United States and especially for agricultural implements of all kinds and the numerous articles entering into the automobile industry, is therefore of very great importance. By securing material reductions in the duties on these manufactures and on numerous other manufactures, the industries of the United States and the wage-earners of mills and factories are benefited.

It may be understood that there were many difficulties confronting the negotiations and that many obstacles had to be overcome. But the spirit on both sides was one of mutual goodwill, and this enabled the difficulties to be vanquished. The agreement which is now before the American people undoubtedly will be regarded as one of the greatest achievements of President Taft. If it becomes law by the action of Congress and the Dominion Parliament, it will not only be of benefit to a large number of people on both sides of the line, but it will strengthen the friendly relations which now exist between the United States and Canada and which always should exist between neighbors who have so much in common.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—ARCHBISHOP P. J. RYAN died on February 11 in his eightieth year. He was a man of lovable character, popular with all creeds and classes, and was considered the best pulpit orator among the Catholic preachers of America.

—IT IS EXPECTED that the coronation of George V. on June 22 will be the most gorgeous pageant London has ever witnessed. Kings and queens, emperors, princes, potentates, plenipotentiaries and representatives are coming from every part of the globe, and the problem of housing the crowds, vast as London is, will be the most difficult task to be considered. It is expected that in addition to London's own seven millions, at least three millions more will be present, thus making an aggregation of ten million human beings in one city, which is unprecedented.

—CONGRESSIONAL SOCIETY in Washington filled the floor spaces and galleries of the House of Representatives, on the night of February 13, to hear an illustrated lecture on the Panama Canal, by Colonel Goethals, head of the Canal Commission. Nearly all the members of the House of Representatives attended. The lecturer gave a pleasant surprise to the audience, by promising that if no unlooked for misfortune happens, ships will be able to pass through the Canal by June 1, 1913, although the date of the formal opening is set for January 1, 1915.

—NOW THAT RECIPROCITY with Canada is assured, it is believed that before long the South American countries and the United States will also enter into a similar arrangement. There is no doubt that lower tariffs on the mineral products coming into this country from South America, and on manufactured goods going out, would be mutually beneficial to both.

—THE CHICAGO TRACT SOCIETY celebrated its twenty-first anniversary on January 30. The society was organized by Dr. Elwood M. Wherry, the veteran missionary at Ludhiana, India, and during his nine years' furlough in America, from 1889 to 1898, the work was under his personal direction. Dr. Jesse W. Brooks, who has been secretary of the society for the past twelve years, said in his report that during 1910 literature was distributed in thirty-three different languages, and missionary-colporteurs were employed speaking twenty-four in their personal work in the homes. The interdenominational character of the work was especially emphasized in connection with this anniversary. Six denominations were represented on the programme. The anniversary address was delivered by Dr. John Timothy Stone, one of the society's directors, who said: "This society is meeting a vast need in our great city. Though we are not beginning to face this problem of immigration as we should face it, I do not believe that a similar amount of money is accomplishing a greater amount of good in any part of our country." The different departments of work that were referred to especially in the reports were that among the Syrians; that among the Letts, which has resulted in the present flourishing First Lettish Church of Chicago; that among the Finlanders, who also now have regular Sabbath services under the direction of Rev. Gustave Blomgren; and the largest work of all, among the Poles, who now claim in Chicago a resident population of over 275,000. Rev. Paul Mishkoff, who is conducting regular Sabbath services for the Bulgarians, made a short address, and Rev. Christo T. Papadopoulos, who has organized under the direction of the society the Greek Evangelical Mission, also spoke in behalf of his countryman. Attention was also called to the great need of the enlargement of the Tract Society work in other cities, such as Detroit, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, South Bend, Omaha and Cedar Rapids.

THE THROSTLE

"Summer is coming, summer is coming.
I know it, I know it, I know it.
Light again, leaf again, life again, love again,"
Yes, my wild little poet.

Sing the new year in under the blue;
Last year you sang it as gladly.
"New, new, new, new!" Is it then so new
That you should carol so madly?

"Love again, song again, nest again, young again,"
Never a prophet so crazy!
And hardly a daisy as yet, little friend,
See, there is hardly a daisy.

"Here again, here, here, here, happy year!"
O warble unchidden, unbidden!
Summer is coming, is coming, my dear,
And all the winters are hidden. SELECTED.

"Her coat is so warm"

POLITENESS

Good boys and girls will never say,
"I will," and "Give me these";
Oh, no; that never is the way,
But, "Mother, if you please."

And "If you please," to sister Ann,
Good boys to say are ready;
And "Yes, sir," to a gentleman,
And "Yes, ma'am," to a lady.

MARCH

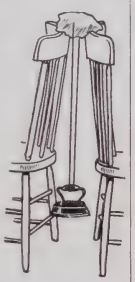
March, its tree, juniper; its stone, bloodstone; its motto, courage and strength in times of danger.—Old Saying.

BEFORE THE WINTER GOES

Some Interesting Experiments with Ice and Snow

TAKE a piece of ice about three inches in length and breadth and half an inch in thickness, and chip the edges till it is as nearly a perfect circle as you can make it. After having shaped it neatly, begin to shave the edges thin (see illustration). Let the piece of ice become thickest toward the centre.

Perfect Burning Glass



By the warmth of your hand you can get the ice smooth and gently rounded until you have as perfect a burning-glass as can be made.

Hold the ice in the sun and you will see the sun's rays focused to a bright spot, and if you hold a piece of tissue paper under the ice at the point where the bright spot is smallest you will be able to set fire to the paper. You will think it queer that you can start a fire with a piece of ice; but queerer yet is the fact that you can do all that and still not melt the ice. This is because the heat of the rays is distributed all over the piece of ice and of course they cannot create so much warmth as when they are close together, concentrated in the small bright spot in which there is heat enough to set fire to the paper.

Magic Ice

ANOTHER interesting experiment with ice is to take a rather good-sized chunk and a piece of wire and a flat-iron or any other heavy object which is easy to find.

Place two chairs back to back, near enough to support the piece of ice; now take a fine wire (one strand from a piece of picture wire will do) and bend the wire across the top of the ice, down over either side, and under the ice swing your heavy weight from the wire. (Let this experiment be carried on in a cool room or out of doors.) Leave the ice for a short time and upon returning you will find the wire will have moved in some mysterious way and, where it was resting on the top it is now two or three inches below the top and no cut is to be seen in the ice. Had you not placed the wire yourself you would say a hole had been bored through the ice and the wire threaded through. However, it is simple enough when you stop to think. The wire has slowly melted the ice beneath it, but the ice, instead of running away in a tiny stream of water, has frozen again above the wire and has left the block of ice as solid as it was before the wire melted it.

An Ice Mystery

Burning a Snowball

A pretty trick with snow is to roll a ball, not too hard, and press into it a stick of gum camphor, leaving the end protruding toward the back, as you hold the ball in front of your audience. You can announce that the snow of which this ball is made is a peculiar variety that will burn, then light the camphor and a bright blue flame will leap up behind the ball.

Colors Warm and Cool

ONE clear, cold winter's day, Benjamin Franklin spread a number of handkerchiefs carefully on a level stretch of snow. One of the handkerchiefs was black, another white, and the others of various colors. Some time afterwards, he returned and removed the handkerchiefs carefully one by one, measuring the depth of snow under each. Under the black handkerchief, he found that the snow had melted considerably; under a red handkerchief, almost as much; under a blue handkerchief, very little, and under the white one, scarcely any. By this simple experiment, he learned that color has a great deal to do with the warmth of clothing. White sheds the sun's heat almost as well as an oil-skin sheds water; blue is nearly as heatproof; green is less so; yellow is a warm color; red a still warmer color, while black soaks up almost all the sun's heat that strikes it. Try the experiment before the snow goes, and you will see why black clothes are out of place in the summertime, and white ducks in winter.

A Delicate Experiment

STIR salt into a glass of water until the water will not dissolve or "take up" any more. Now put a piece of soft cotton string into this brine and allow it to soak thoroughly and then dry it rapidly by putting it in a warm oven, or over the hot stove. When the string is dry soak it again in the strong salt brine. This time tie it to a chandelier while it is still wet, and to the end hanging free tie a small piece of tinfoil. Let the string dry again, and when it is thoroughly dry darken the room, close all the windows and doors so no breath of air can stir. Light a match and set fire to the string. It would seem that, as the string burned, the tinfoil would drop, but by striking another match you find it still hanging as before. A thin thread of ashes holds the tinfoil to the chandelier. The greatest care must be taken after the string has been burnt, for the slightest whiff of air will scatter the ashes and spoil the experiment.

NOTE.—The circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is rapidly increasing, so that we know there are a great many young people every day who discover the Cozy Corner for the first time.

Be sure to write and introduce yourselves to Miss Porter. She will answer your letters as they come and send you a glad, hearty welcome into the Cozy Corner.

"I was explaining to a neighbor, who had commented on the glossiness of my palms and ferns, that I kept them clean with Ivory Soap, when she laughed and said: 'Don't talk to me about air-ships. I believe that Ivory Soap is the real wonder of the age. You know what a time I have had with Raymond about his bath? You ought to see him now! He was yelling at the top of his voice, and I had given up in despair, when I was seized with a brilliant idea. I picked up a nice new cake of Ivory Soap and stuck a small flag in each end. In a very few moments I had enticed him into the bath, and I have never had any more trouble, except in getting him out.'"

(Extract from a Letter)

For the bath and for every other purpose that involves the use of a better-than-ordinary soap, Ivory Soap is unequalled. It is mild. It is gentle. It is pure. It does what soap is intended to do—it cleans but it does not injure.

OUR COMFORT CORNER

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A Mother's Club

ON a bright afternoon when for all the lingering chill of winter there was a breath of spring in the air, a number of women wended their way to the house of Mrs. Rufus Alexander. This lady was entitled to be called a personage. She had arrived at her eightieth year and was a very proud and complacent great-grandmother. The woman who maintains her strength and poise, serenely confronting old age with a smile, and seeing around her the children of the third generation, is a queen in her own right. Mrs. Alexander lived in her own house, and she was to be congratulated that she had never been willing to give up its privileges and spend her declining years in the home of a son or a daughter. When guests entered her home to discuss the important subject of bringing up children, they were greeted by an aroma of festivity. Fresh cake had been baked, and there was a faint fragrance of lemonade. Evidently Mrs. Alexander meant to serve simple refreshments. Something to stir and sip, something to nibble and pass about, is a very great help to sociability at a meeting of any sort, and especially helps along when some of the women are timid, others aggressive, and others disposed to ask questions not easy to answer.

After the preliminaries of opening the meeting were over, the hostess said that she had lately read in an English periodical an open letter on the bringing up of children. A mother who did not know how to manage an active and rather turbulent boy had written to the editor for counsel. The advice given was so good that, realizing what puzzles most lads were, Mrs. Alexander decided that she could not do better than ask one of the young mothers to read part of it aloud.

"I don't think you need have much fear about Dick, though his uproarious spirits must be a little trying. Set him things to do, persuade him to dig, to drill, to sew, to make boats or kites—anything, only keep him going. Those tremendous little fellows do press heavily on their elders, but one must take them as they are. Never be hard on a puppy or a boy, nor call his exuberant vitality naughtiness. Let bears and lions growl and fight; let puppies worry slippers and banquet on cakes of soap; let boys be boys. Remember that nearly all the great men were troublesome boys. Life draws so heavily upon spirit, nerve, cheerfulness, courage, that unless one starts with a little too much of them, middle-age finds us bankrupt in all. The abounding vitality is a heritage and gift that cometh of the Lord."

"I have my hands full," said Mrs. Elmendorf, "with my dear little Harold. "Perhaps I have been too fussy. I want him to show his best side before company, and the child shows his worst. He behaves beautifully when we are alone, but if a friend calls, and I particularly wish to have her impressed with my success in bringing up my boy, he is sure to do something or say something which covers me with confusion."

"I wonder," said a low-voiced woman on the edge of the group, "whether you have not mentioned one of the stumbling-blocks which mothers should avoid? We are anxious to have our children appear to the best advantage, and are over-sensitive as to their little faults. In my own case, I have learned that if I wish Fred and Susy to be polite and amiable before folk, I must see that they are polite when we are by ourselves. My boy must take his hat off in the street when he meets me. If I insist on this and never pass over a neglect, I need not be worried about the removal of the hat when he meets the minister's wife or the principal of the school."

The mother of six now took part in the discussion. "My experience has led me," she said, "to be deaf and blind on many occasions when little squabbles are going on. I am far more lenient with the younger children than I was with the elder ones. Children pass through phases. I used to come down severely upon little lapses of manner, and I know that I frequently misunderstood the children and blamed them unjustly, when I was young and inexperienced. Children should grow up like plants, in an atmosphere suited to them. What was your magic, Mrs. Alexander?"

The great-grandmother gave a cheery little laugh. "I had none," she said. "The children were taught to mind, of course; to tell the truth and to say their prayers. It is long ago, but I acted on my own mother's plan, and took it for granted that my children would be good, and that praise would go farther than blame."

Here the refreshments were brought in, and discussion for that day ended.

Heart Secrets

THE glimpses into heart secrets revealed in recent correspondence are often too sacred to be spoken of, except in personal letters. A mother writes that in her widowhood her strongest ally in her battle with a hard world was her eldest son. After his father's death he left school at the earliest moment allowed by law, worked with might and main, though only a boy, helped her in bringing up the other children, and rose rapidly in business. At twenty-four, when the home prospects were brightening, and for the first time in years she faced the future with confidence, her son was taken ill and very soon was called away to the home land. Physicians said that he had drawn too heavily on his vitality, and had no reserve when fever attacked him. Not only does this mother grieve at the loss of her son and mourn because there is the vacant chair in the household, but she is the prey of a strange remorse. "If I had not permitted Edward to work so hard he would have been with me still," is the plea that she urges over and over as she refuses to be comforted.

IN thinking over this peculiar and great trial, the suggestion comes that the mother is mistaken in her persistent blame of herself. She made her boy very happy. They were more than mother and son; they were comrades and friends drawn very closely together in their combined struggle during the years between fourteen and twenty-four, in which her son was making his upward climb. She cannot be sure that an ardent and ambitious youth would not equally have strained every nerve in his endeavor to get on had the pressure of necessity been other than it was. All the nobility and splendor of his character, all the fine traits which her friends remember, were brought out by his early tussle with adversity. He has been taken from her, but his life is not

Mar-Proof Floors

There is one floor finish that resists heels and casters. Romping and rocking don't injure it. Water doesn't turn it white.

It ends the old troubles caused by brittle floor finish. It needs no constant replacing like wax.

This finish — the final result of our 40 years of experience — is called Elastica Floor Finish.

It is needed on every uncarpeted floor, and there is nothing to take its place. Every other floor finish leads to troubles, as every user knows.

Elastica protects a natural wood floor. It protects the paint on a painted floor. It doubles the life of linoleum. It is elastic and durable. It keeps a floor clean and new.

The Reason is This

Elastica has in its composition a large percentage of properly treated oil. That is what makes it so tough and elastic, so proof against mar and wear.

That oil is so treated by our own secret process that Elastica dries quickly and becomes very hard. The hardest usage doesn't mar it. Water doesn't spot it.

These facts are true of no other floor finish, as most of you know. But we shall prove, when you write us, that they are true of Elastica. This finish puts an end to all floor troubles.

ended. The soul goes on living, and God has service for those who love him, in spheres beyond earth. The mother's crown of rejoicing should be that she had a son whom every one honored, and that in her whole recollection of him there was not an hour in which he did not give her pleasure and pride.

"What consolation is there in a living trouble?" writes another friend. "How am I to bear continual anxiety for a dear one who is going astray? What is the best way to take when heart and flesh fail? Shall I talk about my trials to the neighbors? Unless they are blind they must see them. Shall I remain silent to the one who is breaking my heart? Tell me what to do, what to say, where to go for help."

A LIVING trouble is indeed hard to endure. Yet there is always in it the element of hope. Little good is done by unveiling the privacies of the household. Unless neighbors and acquaintances are extremely sympathetic, it is unwise to make one's personal griefs of this special kind a subject of talk. Silence and reticence are dignified. Complaint is often a great mistake. Carry your trouble in your darkest hours, to God, and do not be afraid to tell him everything. There will surely be a way out. So far as you possibly can, maintain a cheerful courage and believe that it will be better further on.

Concerning Moth and Rust

EVERY woman knows the feeling of discouragement that comes over her when she unfolds a garment which has been carefully put away, and finds moth holes in it here and there. She fancied, poor soul, that she was doing the best in her power when she laid aside the wrap, the dress or the rich shawl, guarding it as she supposed against the perils of use, and her chagrin is great when she discovers that disuse has done far more harm than would have followed upon constant usage day in and day out. Equally, when rust has eaten into and marred some valuable piece of metal, the housekeeper regrets that she was foolish enough to put by itself, out of sight, any article which ought to have been often in her hand.

We learn the lesson slowly sometimes, but we learn it surely, that the only way to keep what we prize in its pristine beauty is to use it fearlessly and frequently. The sword hanging on the wall rusts, the garment folded away in a trunk by and by falls apart. The neglected instrument gets out of tune. The most beautiful house will go to pieces if left closed and empty, while that which is used as a home, lived in, occupied, with the multiform activities of a family, children running to and fro, windows opened and shut, the life of the household going on, will stand much wear and tear. The same thing holds good of our mental powers. Many a brilliant girl has left school carrying off high honors only to become a dull commonplace woman in later days. She has atrophied her faculties by disuse. She has ceased to read and study, and has suffered herself to fall into mere domesticity. There is no occasion for the domestic woman to become a drudge if she sets the proper valuation on herself and has a will sufficiently strong to determine what is essential and what non-essential in the home, standing firmly on her own feet the while and abiding by her decision.

SPRING

WHEN Spring comes tripping gaily in,
Adorned with blossoms bright,
You'd think the work kept holiday
From morning until night.
But 'tis not so, my friend, you know
'Tis Nature's busiest time,
And she's at work, and not at play,
And all through April and through May
Thinks idleness a crime.

The Spring with dashing crystal shower,
With shaft of golden sun,
Is laboring her every hour
Until her course is run.
She weaves the greening forest roofs
Of lovely shining leaves,
And deep beneath the earth her elves
Are toiling to surpass themselves
For future Autumn sheaves.

When Spring takes up her urgent work
She carries it like play,
And of her busiest time, my dear,
She makes a holiday.
So you and I may learn of her,
And gaily take the road,
And with a blithe and buoyant heart
Bear on our heaviest load.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

We would like to see Mont-Lawn endowed to our dear Dr. Klopsch as a memorial. I don't think there could be a more fitting monument put up for him, as his whole heart was for the poor children. May his name ever live and be a great blessing to the poor tenement waifs. May THE CHRISTIAN HERALD prosper and spread from pole to pole the world over. I shall always have it as long as I live, and I have been a reader for a number of years, and we wish it Godspeed.

Undesirable Advertisements

IT IS a well-known fact that most prominent newspapers throw into the waste-basket every day more news matter than they can print; and very much the same may be said nowadays concerning advertisements in periodicals which are particular concerning the kind of advertising they publish. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for instance, has offered to it, and is compelled to decline, thousands of dollars' worth of advertising in the course of the year.

The reasons why much of this undesirable advertising is declined are many and varied. Sometimes the proposition is a fraud upon its face. Again, it may be feared that the advertiser, however honest in his purpose, may not be able to carry that purpose to a successful conclusion. Then there are advertisements which are undesirable on account of the wording; such, for instance, as the use of the word "free," or the statement to the effect that such and such an investment is "absolutely safe," or the thousands of "cure-alls" which are foisted upon an innocent public.

Certainly the campaign against fraudulent advertising which has been carried on by reputable periodicals has produced very desirable results, for which we cannot be too grateful.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement. This guarantee does not apply to investment advertisements.

CHILDREN AFFECTED
By Mother's Food and Drink

Many babies have been launched into life with constitutions weakened by disease taken in with their mothers' milk. Mothers cannot be too careful as to the food they use while nursing their babes.

The experience of a Kansas City mother is a case in point:

"I was a great coffee drinker from a child, and thought I could not do without it. But I found at last it was doing me harm. For years I had been troubled with dizziness, spots before my eyes and pain in my heart, to which was added, two years later, a chronic sour stomach.

"The baby was born 7 months ago, and almost from the beginning, it, too, suffered from sour stomach. She was taking it from me!

"In my distress I consulted a friend of more experience and she told me to quit coffee, that coffee did not make good milk. I have since ascertained that it really dries up the milk.

"So, I quit coffee and tried tea and at last cocoa. But they did not agree with me. Then I turned to Postum with the happiest results. It proved to be the very thing I needed. It not only agreed perfectly with baby and myself, but it increased the flow of my milk.

"My husband then quit coffee and used Postum and quickly got well of the dyspepsia with which he had been troubled. I no longer suffer from the dizziness, blind spells, pain in my heart or sour stomach.

"Now we all drink Postum from my husband to my seven months' old baby. It has proved to be the best hot drink we have ever used. We would not give up Postum for the best coffee we ever drank."

Serial By Florence Morse Kingsley

XXIII—Continued

JENNIE looked at David timidly.

"You ain't had a scrap with her, have you?" she asked, "an'—broke off th' engagement?"

"Well, not exactly," he muttered, with a frown.

"Anyway, don't—show her that ring o' mine, please. I'm 'fraid—she'd laugh."

"She won't see it, ever. Don't you worry about that. And she won't set eyes on that diamond again in a hurry. Take good care of it, little girl. It's good for a house and lot—that ring."

"Is it a real di'mon'?"

"Of course, goosie; you didn't suppose I'd buy an imitation, did you? I guess not. It's yours to do what you like with. But——"

He stared dubiously into her pretty, flushed face. "Keep it to yourself that I gave it to you, will you?"

"I—won't tell," she faltered. "I'll do jus' as you say, Mr. Whitcomb."

"All right. Now you sit down here, and I'll be back in a few minutes. I've got to look around a bit, and put some money on my horse. I'll buy some candy, too, while I'm gone."

The girl sat, where he had left her, in a daze of happiness. All about her the seats of the grandstand were filling with people for the afternoon races; but she did not see them, nor the arid stretch of the race-course, around which were circling various experimental trotters under the guidance of hunched men in two-wheeled vehicles. The subdued light of the shaded place brought out new and more vivid flashes of color in the marvelous white stone on her little pink hand—scarlet, and green, and blue. Jennie twisted it slowly on her finger, her eyes riveted upon its alien splendors.

"To think she didn't like it!" she whispered to herself.

"Good afternoon, Miss Jennie," murmured a carefully modulated voice at her side. She turned with a start to gaze into Mr. Todd's smiling face.

"Goodness!" exclaimed the girl petulantly. "How you made me jump!"

"You were thinking about that new ring of yours, I suppose," said Mr. Todd, blinking pleasantly.

"Who told you I had a new ring, I'd like to know?" the girl demanded coldly.

"I don't have to be told," Mr. Todd said facetiously. "Say, but it's handsome! I shouldn't wonder if it cost as much as two hundred and fifty."

"Not dollars?" exclaimed the girl, in an awestruck voice.

"Sure! He must have thought a lot of you to give you that—eh, Miss Jennie?"

The girl did not answer. She was putting on her gloves with an air of offended dignity.

"I guess it ain't any of your affairs," she said, her lips trembling, "if I've got a friend or two."

"Don't sit on me too hard," begged Mr. Todd. "I didn't mean anything out of the way. I couldn't help noticing the sparkler on your hand. Most anybody would. Get it to-day?"

"Yes, I did," admitted the girl. "But you don't need t' ask me who gave it t' me, for I shan't tell; so there!"

"I wasn't going to ask," asserted Mr. Todd truthfully. "I—er—congratulate you, though. You'll let me do that, won't you?"

The girl hunched the shoulder nearest him and eyed him sulkily over its slender defense.

"I ain't engaged; if that's what you mean."

"Not engaged—with that ring? Come, you're fooling!"

"It does look some like an engagement ring," said the girl, stealthily feeling her new treasure, "but it—it's only an offerin' o' friendship. He—

—"And you must take Sanatogen regularly for several weeks"

THIS urgent advice is given by physicians day by day in every civilized land—wherever sufferers from starved nerves and poor digestion seek relief. There is a reason for this. Physicians know that Sanatogen is a substance capable of supplying the real needs of a starved, overwrought nervous system—that it is a scientific combination of albumen and organic phosphorus—a compound eagerly absorbed by the hungry tissues and possessing unique tonic and reconstructive qualities. They also know from their own observation what Sanatogen has done for others. They have watched its revivifying action upon persons whose nervous strength had been undermined by overwork, worry or disease; they have observed how it has infused renewed energy, life and elasticity into starved nerves; how it has regenerated the appetite, digestion; in short, how wonderfully it has helped to make the human machinery fit to perform its functions in the most perfect manner.

There are on file with the owners of Sanatogen no less than 15,000 letters from practising physicians, praising, endorsing Sanatogen. Truly, a magnificent monument to the value of this food-tonic.

But no less impressive is the enthusiastic testimony of patients themselves. Men and women in the forefront of human endeavor, statesmen, prelates, authors, lawyers, have written above their own signatures of the wonderful benefits received from Sanatogen.

We ask you earnestly to get acquainted with Sanatogen. Investigate our claims first, if you like, and we are only too glad to have you do so. Ask your doctor about it, and in any case write at once for our book, "Our Nerves of To-morrow," the work of a physician-author, written in an absorbingly interesting style, beautifully illustrated and containing facts and information of vital interest to you. This book also contains evidence of the value of Sanatogen which is as remarkable as it is conclusive.

Sanatogen is sold in three sizes: $1.00, $1.90, $3.60

Get it from your druggist—if not obtainable from him, write

The Bauer Chemical Company, Everett Building Fourth Ave., New York

U. S. Senator P. J. McCumber writes:

"Sanatogen is a very effective remedy for nervousness and fatigue. I have used it for some time and find it excellent in its stomach action."

Hon. Wm. J. Stone

U. S. Senator from Missouri, Ex-Governor of Missouri, states:

"Sanatogen has been used in my family with good results. I feel assured that it will relieve to a considerable degree nervous troubles caused by overwork. It is an excellent food tonic for building up the system."

Hon. Wm. E. Chandler

Former Sec'y of Navy, ex-Senator from New Hampshire, writes:

"Sanatogen is a pleasant nutrient for cases of impaired digestion. It strengthens without irritating and promotes vitality in feeble folk."

John Burroughs

The distinguished naturalist and author, writes:

"I think the Sanatogen did me much good—it gave me much strength, steadied my nerves and greatly improved my sleep. It comes the nearest to being a remedy for old age I have yet struck, and I want to thank you for suggesting it."

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r, 444 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.

he's got another girl. But I guess he don't care s' awful much 'bout her. She's good-lookin'; but she don't treat him right, an' that makes him mad. I don't blame him, neither."

"Do I know the party?" inquired Mr. Todd, affecting a consuming curiosity.

"I ain't a-goin' t' say whether you do, er don't," and the girl tossed her head. "I wisht you'd let me alone."

"W'y, I ain't sayin' anything out the way. What's your hurry to get rid of me, I'd like to know?"

The girl moistened her red lips with an anxious glance at the stair.

"The's a party bought that seat you're in. I got t' save it fer him."

"That's all right, too," said Mr. Todd affably. "I'll get up an' vamoose the minute you tell me he's coming."

"He's comin' now," said the girl anxiously. "He won't like it, if he sees me talkin' with you."

Mr. Todd arose.

"He must be a great chap," he said carelessly. "Well, so long. Hope you'll treat him better'n you have me."

The genial insurance man walked quietly away through the crowd, humming a little tune to himself. Among the vehicles drawn up inside the enclosure roped off for teams, he caught sight of Jarvis, sitting alone, in his usual red-wheeled sidebar. Mr. Todd made his way among the crowd, and presently paused at Jarvis' side.

"Our young friend is here to-day," he observed in a low voice.

"Yes, I saw him come in with the boy," Jarvis replied.

"Since then he appears to have got rid of the boy and acquired a girl."

"Where is the boy?" demanded Jarvis sharply.

Mr. Todd shook his head.

"I wasn't looking after the boy," he reminded his patron.

"What's Whitcomb up to?" asked Jarvis after a silence.

His face was gray and set and his weary eyes wandered impatiently over the dusty race-track.

"Horse-racing, for one thing," replied the detective. "He's backing his own horse heavily; but there's more doing than that. Do you want to hear it now?"

"No," said Jarvis, "not here."

Mr. Todd gathered his lips into a noiseless whistle.

"Our young friend," he said slowly, "has appropriated about all the rope he needs. All you've got to do now is to let him alone."

XXIV

It was well on toward evening before Barbara found herself watching with strained attention for the return of David and Jimmy.

They would surely come soon, she concluded, with a glance at the tall clock in the corner. But this faithful monitor of dead and gone generations of Prestons presently became quite intolerable, so loudly did it proclaim the lagging minutes. It drove her forth at length into the chill of the autumn moonlight. Down by the stone gateway she could see the empty road winding away into obscurity on either hand, like a gray ribbon unbound and flung carelessly across the valley. A faint wind shook gusts of fragrance from the cone-laden pines, and away off among the orchards a little brown owl gurgled a mocking defiance to the moon.

She would have said, perhaps, that she was worried because David had not brought Jimmy home early, as he had promised. The child would be cold, hungry, tired; his little jacket was too thin; his limbs unprotected; but beneath these quasi-maternal misgivings lurked a keener anxiety, a more consuming fear. This it was that held her there, listening, listening—her whole being an insistent question, which would not be denied.

She could have told no one, least of all herself, how long she remained alone in the wan darkness, fighting her losing battle; but her hair and clothing were wet with frosty dew when at last she heard in the far distance the unbroken beat of hoofs. It was a fast horse, driven at furious speed; yet long before the vehicle drew up with a muttered exclamation from its occupant, at sight of her standing there in the moonlight, she knew it was not David.

"I've got the boy here, and he's all right," Jarvis said. "Get in and I'll—explain."

But he said nothing further in the brief interval that elapsed before they reached the house. Barbara had drawn the sleeping child into her arms, and helped him jealously close to her numbed breast. She felt strangely still, unnaturally composed, as Jarvis took the child from her and helped her to alight.

"I'm coming in," he said. "I want to tell you how it happened that I am bringing him home."

"Is David——?" she managed to articulate.

"Oh, nothing has happened to Whitcomb—no accident, I mean. Go in; you're chilled through."

She had taken off Jimmy's coat and cap, and the child, half awake, was nestled in her arms, when Jarvis followed her into the lighted room, with its table daintily set for three, and its cheer of burning logs, which Barbara had stirred to a blaze.

She looked at him in piteous silence as he stood, a tall, sombre figure, at her fireside, looking down at her with eyes full of a brooding tenderness of which he was only half aware. He was anxiously searching for words which would hurt least, for a balm of comfort which, he knew, did not exist.

Jimmy, rubbing the sleep out of his brown eyes, sat up suddenly in Barbara's lap.

"David didn't let me stay wiv him," he quavered. "He—he made me det out 'n'—'n' he dave me some money; 'n' a big boy pushed me over and took it away. I ran after David 'n' called him loud; but he didn't hear me. 'Nen I got lost."

"I found him," said Jarvis, "asleep on some straw in the corner of an empty stall."

He smiled reassuringly at Barbara. "The boy appears to need a general washing and putting to rights, I should say; but he isn't hungry."

"Where," asked Barbara in a stifled voice, "is David?"

"He's gone wiv the pretty lady, I guess," said Jimmy sleepily. "She had roses in her hat. Why don't you have some roses in your hat, Barbara? I like roses."

The little boy suddenly opened his eyes very wide; his mouth followed suit.

"Look, Barb'ra," he shrilled excitedly, "a man dave me a sausage in the middle of a biscuit, 'n' I was awful hungry an' I fordot—I mean I forgot—t' bite wiv my side teef—'n'—'n'—'n' one o' my front teef came right out. I lost it on the ground."

Barbara's questioning eyes were on Jarvis' face. He turned abruptly as if unable to bear them.

To be concluded next week

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

I want you to know how glad we should be to help build a monument to our late editor of the much loved and read CHRISTIAN HERALD, and I think this monument or memorial fund should be given to the work he loved the most. Not in marble or granite should this be built, unless the granite of love; and oh, may it be Mont-Lawn, and may it be a memorial fund that never will stop growing, is the wish of, I think, more than all your subscribers,

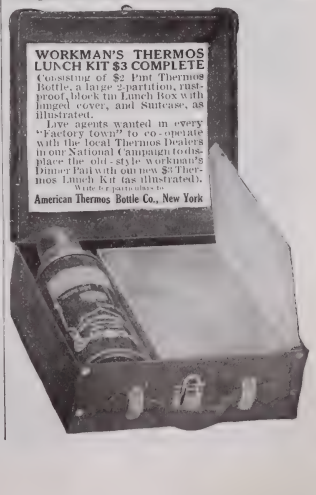
At Last a Genuine Thermos Bottle for $2

After 3 years' experimenting, we have finally perfected a pint size Thermos Bottle to retail at $2 that keeps hot and cold just as well as our highest-priced bottles.

This new $2 bottle now brings Thermos within the reach of your pocket-book, no matter how small your income may be.



Think of the Comfort and Convenience that $2 invested in this "Combination Pocketstove and Icebox Bottle" will add to your noonday meal at the Factory, Office or Store by serving you soup, tea or coffee piping hot! Then at night, think how it will also serve your wife, your baby or your invalid mother with hot or cold nourishment whenever needed.

So why deprive yourself another day of the added comfort, health, pleasure, satisfaction and convenience which Thermos will give you, and ALL YOUR FAMILY, in the Nursery or Sickroom, at School or College, at Home or when Traveling, and in every form of Outdoor Life, when you can now buy all this for a two-dollar bill!

See it at any first class store today and take one home with you tonight!

PLEASE BE CAUTIOUS as there are worthless imitations. Look for the name Thermos, stamped on the bottom—AND BE SURE YOU SEE IT!

Ask the dealer for or write us for "The Thermos Book," illustrating and describing all Thermos Specialties and their uses.

What Is a Good Public Utility Bond?

It is a mortgage on the property of the company issuing it. When you buy such a bond you lend the company your money. The interest is usually paid in the form of coupons which are cut off the bond at regular intervals. The security for both the principal and the interest is the company itself—the state and value of its property, the amount of its earnings, the way it is managed, the duration of its franchises, the future of the community that it serves—all subjects for slow and careful investigation by people who know. It is not a matter of opinion. It is a question of facts. All of these facts must be ascertained and approved before any bond can be recommended.

In the case of all bonds offered by N. W. Halsey & Co. these facts are ascertained. This expensive investigation, which would cost too much for any single bond buyer, is a part of the service offered to every customer of this firm.

Our booklet, "The Most Satisfactory Bonds," describes this service and some of the bonds. Sent to anyone interested in bonds.

Economy as a Habit

WE all know how easily a child acquires a habit, particularly if it be a bad one, and how very difficult it is at times to wean it from the undesirable practice. The acquiring of that habit was a form of education, even if it required no effort; the eradication of that habit and the setting up of another and a better one may be made more distinctly educational, if continued patiently and persistently.

Too many fathers and mothers are indifferent to the habits of their children. So long as they are not glaringly objectionable, they will even delight in the habits if they have in them a semblance of smartness, and this without any thought of the ultimate effect on the child's character. "Billy is no good at figures, or spelling, but he makes up for it in his history and geography. My, how he does take to such studies!" Have we not all heard speeches like that? But have we always considered their full significance? Johnny is not only pardoned for not doing what he should do, but he is in a way applauded and encouraged by the flattery he receives for doing that which he finds easy and congenial.

Johnny does not like arithmetic and he may never like it, but if he were made to stick to that objectionable study till he had mastered its essentials, the effect for good on his character would be far greater and more lasting than that derived from all the studies that come so easy.

Children and savages are alike extravagant, because neither have been trained to estimate values. We, who cannot leave large wealth to our children, very properly train them for the callings in which they are to fight out their life battle. We speak to them about this calling, its moneygetting chances and its opportunities for advancement; but how many of us attempt to train our children in the proper way to spend this money after it has come into their possession? "But," you ask, "how is this to be done with children?" "Why," we reply, "by giving them money to spend!"

Lessons in Thrift

Money, in the pockets of all children and of too many men, is forever burning holes. The average child regards money as a commodity of unknown origin, which differs from all other commodities, in that it can be exchanged for sweets or some other object of temporary desire. Too many people, with children of their own, are inclined to regard money in much the same way, and if we could trace it back, we should be pretty sure to find that this tendency is at the bottom of much of the vice and poverty we see about us.

The following story, taken from the lips of its leading character, one of the most successful and generous men of his time, will illustrate what we mean by teaching children how to spend money, and it shows, better than any didactic statement of our own, how the habit of thrift may be set up in the child without any dwarfing of its fine natural impulses.

"You see that check framed up there? Well, it is for five dollars, and I keep it because it was the first check I ever drew in my life, and when it was cashed at the savings bank, it represented the savings of two years, and there was not another cent left to my credit.

"Up on that Maine farm, near the New Brunswick line, there wasn't much chance to make money when I was a boy, and I don't think the conditions have changed for the better. But father, who had been a civil engineer, preferred to live up there with his wife, three boys and two girls, all hale and strong. Of course, we went to the common school, and let me tell you, it was mighty common; but father and mother gave much time to our home studies, so that, on the whole, we children were better educated than were those of our neighbors.

"Father's ready money, it was never very much, came from the land surveys he was frequently called on to make; but here is the point: When each child reached the age of seven he or she, during good behavior, was given one cent a day, Sundays included. Each was provided with a little tin bank, and we were left free to spend the money in any way we pleased; it was, as we used to say, 'all really and truly ours.' But—and here comes in an educational factor that has powerfully influenced all my subsequent life—at the end of every year father looked over our banks, and he duplicated every cent he found there.

Value of Money and Love

"Now, you might think this would make us a pack of mean little misers, but it did not. At Christmas and birthdays, we children always bought presents for our parents and each other, nor was there hesitation about it, for with these wholesome lessons of thrift, we were taught that money was a thing to be properly used and love a thing to be eternally treasured.

"Before we were thirteen, we boys, knowing the effort father was making for us, bought from our savings our own boots and school books, and though he said nothing about it, it comforted us to see that our thoughtfulness made him happier.

"When I was fifteen, my brother Dick, who is still my partner, induced me to go into partnership with him in the purchase of a row boat to carry passengers over the St. John; that check represents my contribution to the firm.

"Fifty years have passed since then, and through hard persistent work I have reached a safe place financially, and the world calls me rich. Perhaps it is right. But you ask to what I attribute my success. Well, that is hard to answer, but if I were to select one influence, one thing that most helped to build up and develop my character, I would say it was the habit of economic thrift taught me by my generous father in my boyhood days."

So long as a man has the power to change his habits—and that power should remain so long as he has left his will—so long can he influence his own character for good or ill. If his character is all that it should be, then it might be well to consider the way in which the father of the lumber king influenced the habits of his children.

A Unique Collection

NEARLY every one has the collecting habit at some time in his life and some people never get over it. This is fortunate, for it is to such people that we owe collections which the art collector would neglect, but which show the progress of mankind in some especial field of work. Recently there died in Edinburgh a Mr. Edward Young, who had long been in the iron business. He began to collect horseshoes of all countries and of all ages. Before he died he had a complete series of the various types of horseshoes from Roman times to the present, representing the work of smiths for seventeen hundred years. If good fortune goes with a horseshoe, Mr. Young must have been a very fortunate man, at least in finding horseshoes.

this. The formation of smoke rings is nothing new, and it is not surprising that a crater which is circular and full of vapor should, when a sharp explosion occurs, emit these vapor rings. I have often seen these at Vesuvius, but under conditions that made photography impossible. In the case of Etna, however, there was so much dense vapor that the most beautiful rings were thrown off from this crater, and floated upward a mile or more into the air, and consequently could very easily be photographed. One of these views shows the ring as taken early in the morning before six o'clock and high above the sun, which had just risen two hours before, and which is seen in the picture as a ball of fire with its irradiation cut off entirely by the ash cloud.

About the crater on the side of the cone a most interesting and important thing developed during our stay up there at this time. Looking into this opening I thought I could see flames shooting from the surface of the lava, up through the chimney toward the top. As this has been made an important point by the old writers on Vesuvius, most people have thought that flames were an essential part of volcanic eruptions. Nevertheless modern geologists and vulcanologists have generally come to the conclusion that these flames existed only in the imagination of previous observers. Therefore I was very doubtful about believing my eyes in thinking that I saw flames inside of this chimney, but later on when the lava had worked itself up by the consolidation of its bed to the top part of the cone, then flames, true flames of burning gases, shot out from the top to the height of from ten to fifteen feet.

It may be that these were due to hydrogen and to the presence of such hydro-carbons as vaseline and paraffine, as products similar to these were later distilled from the ashes. It is almost impossible to give any idea of the action of the lava. The stream moved with considerable rapidity and its best effects were visible only at night, when instantaneous photography was impossible.

In this eruption, the greater part of the damage was caused by the lava streams. There was no destruction of human life, but much property was damaged and as usual the peasants suffered most. Many of the mule drivers and guides saw the land bought with their small savings desolated for years by the lava.

A visit to the scene of the eruption some time after it occurred was very interesting. One of the most interesting and marvelous things, and one which has taught me a great deal about the internal workings of such eruptions, is the lava tunnel, a picture of which is here reproduced. It is a work of nature that is remarkably perfect, this arch being as uniform as could be chiseled by the hand of man. I was able to enter this tunnel for a distance of about one hundred feet and to get to a point under the next one of the craters and look up through the central conduit and see the sky. You will notice in this picture that the lava, after filling the tunnel, subsided successively to three different levels, leaving its record in each case, the last being the present floor of the tunnel.

Mr. Perret, the world's only professional vulcanologist, is the American scientist who occupied a hut on Mount Etna during the eruption of 1910, and secured data of great importance to scientific research. Mr. Perret has furnished the illustrations for this article from photographs taken at that time. The article is taken by permission from a recent lecture. The initials K. I. C. stand for Knight of the Italian Crown, a decoration granted by the King of Italy.

The Howard Watch

Sometimes you see a prosperous looking passenger inquire the time, and you wonder why he does not take out his own watch to compare with the conductor's.

It is not that he has no watch—but because he is ashamed of the time he is carrying. He has no confidence that it is anywhere near correct and he tries to save his dignity by not making a comparison.

What do you think of the type of man who will carry a cheap and uncertain timepiece because it doesn't have to be seen?

It is quite different with the HOWARD owner. He is ready to match time with all comers.

The HOWARD is the closest rating watch in the world—and worth all it costs to any man of accurate habit and orderly mind.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it. The price of each watch—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Boss or Crescent gold-filled case at $40 to the 23-jewel in a 14-k solid gold case at $150—is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know.

Drop us a postal card, Dept. W, and we will send you "The Story of Edward Howard and the First American Watch"—an inspiring chapter of history that every man and boy should read.

The Child in Life and Death*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

The Child in the Home

THE house of Shunem, where the prophet Elisha was so hospitably entertained, lacked the sweet element of child-life.

The names of the host and hostess are not given to us, but we know they must have been very gracious and loving, because they fitted up a chamber for the special use of the prophet, where he might abide whenever he should be in their city. They may have built it on the roof, to be reached by an outside stairway, according to the custom of the land, or it might have been a room in the wall, close beside the gateway. In it they placed a bed, a table, a seat, and a candlestick. It was home-like to Elisha, and he felt a desire to do some kindness in return. He had influence at court, being a friend of King Jehoram, who then ruled in Israel, and he asked his entertainers if there was not some favor he might do for them at court, but they replied, "No." Then it occurred to Elisha to petition the Court of Heaven that a son should be born unto them to complete their earthly joy. Elisha must have had assurance from God that the son would be given, for he made a promise to his friends that at a certain time they should embrace a son.

There was joy in the home in Shunem when the little son was born, and he grew until he was large enough to run out into the fields when his father was at work. A harvest field is a hot place in any country, but it was particularly hot in the valley of Esdraelon, which glows like a furnace in harvest time. It is no wonder that the little boy was stricken down by the heat; in short, he had a sunstroke, and was carried home, and laid upon his mother's lap, where he died. What place in all that house so suitable for the mother to place her dead child as on the prophet's bed? There might have been in her mind some thought that virtue would come from it, and bring her child back to life. But whatever her thought in placing him there, she immediately afterward started out on a pilgrimage to find Elisha, going alone, and riding upon an ass, as was customary among her people.

Elisha on the top of Mount Carmel saw her in the valley below. She carried about her an atmosphere of grief, and Elisha sent his servant Gehazi to see what might be the matter. But she would not tell her sorrow until she reached Elisha himself, and then she fell at his feet and sobbed it out. It is strange that Elisha should have sent his servant on a life-giving errand; it is true he armed him with his own staff which he was told to lay on the child. But the mother was not satisfied; she would have the prophet himself go. While the mother and Elisha were on their way, Gehazi, the servant, came to meet them, saying that he had placed the staff on the child, but it did not quicken him; that the child was still dead.

When at last Elisha reached the house, he went up to his own room, and closed the door, and stretched himself upon the child, and breathed his warm breath into the child's face. In that way he appealed to the Court of Heaven to give life again to the child. And the King of Earth and Heaven heard the appeal, and life was given; the child grew warm and sneezed seven times, and opened his eyes. Then the mother was called, and Elisha said to her: "Take up thy son." With gratitude she bowed before him, and then took up her son and went out, a happy mother. And the home was sweeter and gladder than it had ever been before.

Life's Golden Shields

Is your home happier because you live there? That depends upon what kind of a child you are. Have you ever heard the story of the shields of gold? In the temple built by King Solomon there were three hundred shields of beaten gold, made from nine hundred pounds of gold, three pounds of gold in each shield. They were placed on the walls of the temple, and shone like three hundred suns. After King Solomon died, his son Rehoboam was king. He had an enemy, Shishak, King of Egypt, who came to do battle with him. Shishak prevailed against Rehoboam, and carried away the three hundred shields of gold. It was a sad loss, and all King Rehoboam could do was to put three hundred brass shields where the gold ones had been. That was both a shame and a sorrow. We would tell you that every child has shields of gold, many shields which God has given. Some of them are a sweet voice, a sweet face, a loving heart, good health, truthfulness, happiness. Because children have these golden shields they make their homes happy. We can imagine that the boy in the house at Shunem, the little friend of the prophet Elisha, had all of his shields bright and shining, and that is why there was so much sorrow when he died. Satan is always on the watch to capture the golden shields not alone from the children, but from all who possess them, young and old. As long as you live, he will be trying to rob you. Look about you wherever you go for the people who have kept their golden shields. You will see many who have lost them, and are not taking trouble to recover even substitutes.

Those who have parted with the golden ones through their bad acts may repent and be forgiven, but they never get back the original shields; they receive brass ones instead; faces are less bright, voices are less sweet, hearts are less loving and truthful, while health and happiness are not quite up to full measure. Brass must be polished again and again to keep it shining brightly, but it is not so with gold. The roof of the lantern on the top of the Congressional Library in Washington is covered with pure gold, and during the nearly fourteen years it has been there, it has never lost its shining brightness, nor has it been necessary to polish it. Who would not choose to be like gold rather than like brass?

Death Comes to All

It is said that one-third of the human race dies in childhood. Death comes early to some doors, but it passes none—sooner or later it arrives at all. A poor woman in India came to her teacher and asked him if there was any kind of medicine that would bring back to life her dead child. When the teacher saw her distress he told her to bring him a handful of common mustard seed, only he charged her to bring it from a house where neither father, nor mother, nor child, nor servant had died. So the woman took her dead baby in her arms and went from door to door asking for mustard seed, and gladly was it given to her; but when she asked whether any had died in that house, each one made the same sad answer: "I have lost my husband" (or wife), or "My child is dead," or "Our servant has died." So with a heavy heart the woman went back to her teacher and told him how she had failed to get any mustard seed, for she could not find a single house where none had died. Then her teacher

FIXING A STANDARD FOR BREAD

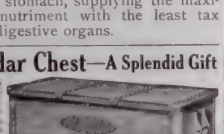
Eight Prominent English Physicians Join in Asking that a Standard be fixed for the Nutritive Value of Bread.

We are making wonderful progress along the line of safeguarding the public health through regulation of foods and conditions under which men and women work. This progress is more marked, however, in the many efforts that are being put forth to educate the public on the nutritive value of foods.

The good educational work has been going on, however, until it has finally resulted in the public recognition of the right of health officers and food inspectors to actually set a standard for the nutritive value of foods.

Eight English physicians and surgeons, including Dr. Sir Alfred Fripp, surgeon-in-ordinary to the King, have issued a jointly signed statement expressing the opinion that there is a national necessity that a standard be fixed for nutritive value of what is sold as bread the same as is already done for milk. We quote one sentence from this statement as follows:

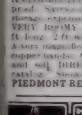
> "In view of the inferior nourishing qualities of the white bread commonly sold we urge legislation making it compulsory that all bread sold as such should be made of unadulterated wheat flour, containing at least 80 per cent of whole wheat, including the germ and semolina (bran coat)."



There is no doubt about the drift of public intelligence toward bread that contains a larger percentage of the whole wheat than is ordinarily found in fine white flour. There is, however, much controversy regarding the digestibility of much of our whole wheat flour when made into bread. Much of the whole wheat flour bread found upon the market in this country is improperly made and not wholly digestible.

In the case of shredded wheat biscuit however, there is no question about its nutritive value or its digestibility for the reason that the whole wheat is steam-cooked before it is shredded and baked. In making whole wheat flour bread the whole wheat is not steam-cooked and hence a good portion of the nutrients of the whole wheat grain pass through the stomach undigested.

In the case of Shredded Wheat, however, the starch globules in the wheat are broken down and made soluble by the steam-cooking. The shreds also expose a vast surface to the action of the digestive fluids and the baking makes the shreds so crisp and delicious as to encourage thorough chewing, which is a very important process in digestion.



Two shredded wheat biscuits eaten for breakfast with hot milk or cream and sliced bananas or stewed fruits will supply all the strength needed for a half day's work at a cost of a few cents. Shredded Wheat is without doubt the best whole wheat food ever prepared for the human stomach, supplying the maximum of nutriment with the least tax upon the digestive organs.

Sunday School Lesson

showed her lovingly that she must learn not to think of her own grief alone, seeing that all alike are sharers in sorrow and death.

A mother asks: "Is it wrong for me to love my child as I do? I often hear it said that I am making an idol out of my child, and that God may therefore take it away from me." A wise person has answered this: "No, God gave you your child to be loved, and all the wealth of your mother's heart may go out to it as free as the water flows in the mountain stream. If our Father takes away your babe, he does it in wisdom and kindness, never because he is jealous of the love you bore it. He gives us friendships and loves as he gives the flowers and the beauty of earth, that we may enjoy them to the fullest; so love with all your life and be not afraid."

The late Dr. Pond of Bangor had several young children removed by death. Among his papers, after his death, the following beautiful allusion was found to them: "I love to think of them as away from me at school, the best school in the universe, where they have the best teachers and are learning the best things in the best possible manner. I expect ere long to go and see them—see what progress they have made, and to what heights of glory they are ultimately destined; for I think it is not unlikely that among the brightest spirits that surround the eternal throne may be found many at last who have left this world in infancy."

The tender love of a father for his dead child is shown in the following incident: A nobleman who died a few years ago left a locked chest marked: "To be removed in case of fire." When he died, his friends opened the chest, expecting to find a valuable deed or document or rich jewelry or costly plate. What was their surprise to find instead the toys of the nobleman's dead child!—the most precious things in all the world to him.

Not Death but Life

The Master gave into my hands
A little life to hold,
An unfledged bird for which to care,
A helpless lamb to fold.
I thanked him through my happy tears
And murmured in my joy:
"Into thy hands I give, dear Lord,
The leading of my boy."

A little while, a happy while—
And then the unstained breath
Of human life went softly out,
And that they said was death.
I knew it was not death, but life
When Jesus stopped to say,
"I am the Way, the Truth, the Life,"
And led the lamb away.

My lamb by sacred motherhood,
His by the right divine
Of life that bears all spirit life,
As branches of the vine.
His for all growth in angelhood,
His for defense from fears:
His and yet mine to hold in him
Through the eternal years. —M. A. L.

"And the streets of the city (the New Jerusalem) shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof." (Zech. 8: 5.)

Little six-year-old Georgie was troubled when he saw his mother weeping, because her brother had just died. Georgie tried in his own way to comfort her: "Mama, why do you cry for Uncle Bert when you know he has gone to his beautiful home? And I suppose now he is singing while David plays on the harp." (Uncle Bert in his lifetime had been a beautiful singer.) A little baby cousin soon followed, a child of the uncle who had died. Georgie then tried to comfort himself by saying between his sobs: "I suppose Uncle Bert wanted Charley to play with him, so the Lord sent for him."

Bread Upon the Waters

SOME very remarkable and deeply gratifying results have attended the Bible distribution which was made by the "Gideons" in Chicago hotels about two months ago. W. E. Henderson, national secretary of the organization, has said of the first period of the work: "We are greatly pleased with the success of the work in Chicago, and the daily receipt of letters from those who have been benefited by the distribution of Bibles goes to show clearly that the undertaking was not a fruitless one." These letters have been from all sorts of people. A small boy pathetically writes thanks for the book which recalled his dead mother to the father who was forgetting the associations of the home which had been broken up. A young girl standing on the brink of the precipice was saved from the depths by one of these little Bibles in a hotel room. Many have written of their approval, and the majority of the hotel managers are convinced that it is a splendid work. The manager of the La Salle Hotel said: "There are some people who jest with me about the innovation, but as a rule the guests approve of the plan. It can do much good and no harm. The idea should be boosted."

"I want you to try my Coffee"

DEAR friends:—After much hesitation I have at last consented to place my own blend of coffee in the hands of reliable commercial roasters for public sale.

But I have chosen a thoroughly competent firm, the Climax Coffee and Baking Powder Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., who have a splendidly equipped plant, modern and scientific, for removed from the flavor-destroying air of seaports.

Best of all, my blend will reach your breakfast table as fresh and full of tang and aroma as when it left the roasters, because it will come in the new wonderful, patented, Sanitary Triple-sealed package, non-aroma-leak (three sealed packages, one within another).

Unlike the average flavor-wasting package, this wonderful container, regardless of time, will keep the coffee as fresh and crisp as the day it was roasted. Without it I would never consent to market my coffee.

Cordially yours, Sarah Tyson Rorer

Dangerous Foes*

IT WOULD not be so bad to yield to a single temptation, if it were not for the fact that every such yielding increases the difficulty of the next resistance. Conversely, every resistance strengthens the moral fibre and makes one better able to meet and conquer the next temptation. If young people could only learn these two profound lessons, life would be immensely simplified for them.

In Longfellow's striking character poem, "Michael Angelo," a beautiful young woman, rich, gifted and courted, complains to a godly man that she is wretched; that restlessness and vague unhappiness possess her. He bids her think more of things above and less of those of the world.

She admits that she is confused as she tries to reconcile the two. When she hears the preaching of St. Bernard, she longs to be a saint, and feels it easy to be good; but when she comes to the point of renouncing the world, she is not ready to do it.

The good man accuses her boldly of unpardonable weakness in not resisting life's temptations.

You would possess humility within.
But not reveal it in your outward actions;
You would have patience, but without the rude
Occasions that require its exercise;
You would despise the world, but in such fashion
The world should not despise you in return.
In short, would lead a holy Christian life
In such a way, that even your nearest friend
Would not detect therein one circumstance
To show a change from what it was before.

Is not this subtle temptation upon us all? Are we not almost universally trying to compass the hard feat of getting the good gifts of true religion, without renouncing the glitter and charm of the worldly lures that lead the soul astray? And the stern words of the mentor of the young Italian girl should be taken to heart by every aspirant after spiritual peace.

Dr. Len Broughton tells of a Georgia hero who was present at the great banquet which Atlanta gave to Admiral Dewey, shortly after the conquest of Manila. His name was Tom Brumby, and he had been with Dewey in the Philippines.

When his health was to be drunk in champagne, he hesitated for a moment and then arose and spoke. His voice was manly and his manner was that of a true soldier. He said, "I hope you will not mind, my dear friends and fellow-citizens, if I drink water instead of champagne."

"There was not," adds Dr. Broughton, "a single glass of champagne touched at the table that night. It was the most tremendous sermon for temperance ever preached in Atlanta."

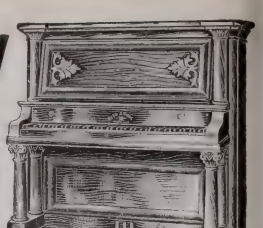
Tom Brumby, in relating the incident to a friend later, confided to him that he had "burned up more nervous energy in that one moment than during all the firing of the fleet in Manila."

But he knew that he had preserved his own integrity and had made it easier for other young men to resist similar temptations.

A certain traveler observed, as he passed along the Rhode Island State line, that a large clump of forest trees just within the borders of that little commonwealth was literally blackened with the nests of fish hawks.

"How does this happen?" he asked the farmer who was with him.

"Rhode Island alone," was the reply, "protects the lives of these hawks. They have found it out, and while on the Connecticut side for miles and miles scarcely a nest of this great bird is to be found, in Rhode Island they are everywhere."



The lesson is plain. Give nesting room to evil thoughts and they will flock into your heart. Resolutely drive them away and they will cease to come. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you."

The Vim in Oats

Why All Folks Crave It—Why Active Folks Must Have It

Since time immemorial oats have typified energy.

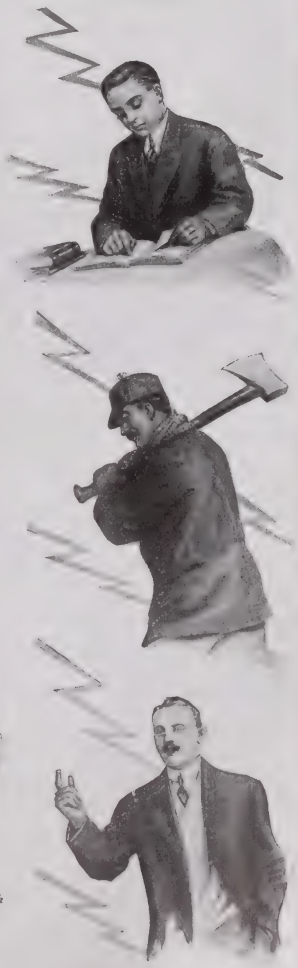
"He feels his oats" is said of men and of horses when they exhibit vitality.

"When we were young and full of oats" is the poet's description of youth's effervescence.

And the hardy Scots—brainy, brawny and vigorous—have always suggested their racial food, oatmeal.

For oats contain more energy food than any other grain that grows. The essence of oats is used as a tonic. A diet of oats, if continued a month, often multiplies vitality.

The harder one works, the more he craves oatmeal. The active child delights in it. Brain workers are almost universal users. Muscle workers, when rightly advised, are coming fast to depend on it.



For in no other grain does Nature store such vim and vitality as she gives to oats.

Did you ever know anyone to discontinue oatmeal after noting the results of this diet?

The Food for Play

The Food for Work

Some Interesting Facts

Oats contain more organic phosphorus than any other cereal food. Phosphorus is the brain's main constituent.

Oats are richer in lecithin than any other grain. Lecithin is the chief component of the nervous system.

We wrote 12,000 physicians, and we find that four in each five of them regularly eat oatmeal.

Out of 50 leading professors in one university, 48 make oatmeal a regular diet.

About nine-tenths of all college students are regular oatmeal users.

Athletes and athletic directors unite in endorsing oatmeal.

We canvassed hundreds of homes of the leaders in every walk of life, and we found that seven-eighths of them regularly serve oatmeal.

Among the homes of the ignorant, the wan and incapable, not one in twelve serves oats.

Their children at school show lack of concentration. Their future is bounded by lack of capacity. And all authorities agree that the lack is largely due to underfeeding.

A canvass of 61 poorhouses—housing 6,700 of life's derelicts—shows that not one in thirteen of the inmates came from an oatmeal home.

A concern employing 2,000 woodcutters lately consulted a high authority on energy foods. As a result, oatmeal is now given first place in the diet. The woodsmen start the day on a diet of oats alone.

Experiments lately conducted by two world-famous authorities indicate that oatmeal defers old age—perhaps by 20 years. It does this apparently, through effects on the thyroid gland.

Quaker Oats

The Richest One-Third of Choice Oats

The finest oats that grow are sifted 62 times to get the grains for Quaker Oats. We get but ten pounds of these rich, plump grains from a bushel.

These selected grains, when prepared by our process, form the finest oat food that was ever created. Its flavor is so beyond common oatmeal that Quaker Oats commands a larger sale than all other brands combined. On no other food sold in packages is so much money spent.

It pays to insist on the best oat food. For Quaker Oats, despite its rare quality, costs but one-half cent per dish.

Regular size package, 10c

Family size package for smaller cities and country trade, 25c.

The prices noted do not apply in the extreme West or South.

Aid for the Tempted*

AS LONG as life lasts, you will experience temptations. Those of youth are not like those of old age. Indeed, the temptations of any one year are probably never exactly like those of the next, but be sure that temptations will come.

Those who have read Miss Clara Laughlin's amusing and illuminative story, The Evolution of a Girl's Ideal, will remember how very different were the longings of the little heroine from one period of her life to another. According to the things which we desire, so run our temptations.

The greatest temptation which comes to Christians, and which includes many minor ones, is probably that of following prevailing customs and fashions; or, as the Scripture puts it, being "conformed to the world."

Because most of their mates pursue a certain course, wear certain harmful clothes, or acquire certain habits, seems to most young people a perfectly valid reason for doing the same thing. The stupid, unquestioning manner in which we sacrifice our freedom of opinion and take our orders from the crowd, would be ludicrous if it were not so tragic.

Few sometimes may know when thousands err.

In the first book of Samuel we read, "He that is now called prophet was beforetime called seer."

This is the true sequence. We must see before we can prophesy.

Let us look around from time to time and examine the current customs, and search for those that are wrong. Most of our friends may be following them "like dumb, driven cattle," without thinking whether such customs have a moral quality or not. But let us weigh them for ourselves; for everything is either right or wrong. If it is wrong even a little wrong (if there is such a thing as much or little in the measurements of ethics), let us put it from us, pass by it and turn away.

Is a habit filthy? Does it make your breath, your teeth, your fingers offensive? Is it said by the best authorities to be harmful to health? Does it add unnecessarily to your expenses?

If so, have none of it, no matter how you may be ridiculed, or how singular you may have to appear in consequence. You know Mark Twain said that "to be good is to be lonesome."

It is often true, but it is a wholesome kind of lonesomeness.

Do you feel that drunkenness is becoming the great curse of this nation? Do you feel that you do not wish by any sign or look or word or act to abet or encourage the awful traffic on which it feeds? And yet do you see your comrades entering the saloons, bragging of the large amounts of liquor that they can "carry"? Telling you that only cranks and "white livers" are total abstainers?

There your duty is plain. Do it, and God will help you.

Dr. Banks tells of a sailor on one of our warships who crept behind one of the big guns every night and prayed. Long he was alone. At last, another jack tar joined him. Many nights they met together and prayed behind the big gun. One of their mates, out of a number who had seen and ridiculed them, went and told the commander, who was a Roman Catholic, and, as the informer thought, might stop the daily prayer meeting.

But no. He was a large-minded man. He ordered a place curtained off for his praying sailors and said that no one must molest them. One by one their comrades came to them to be admitted into the little prayer tent, until thirty-two converted men gathered daily there to read God's Word and worship him.

Follow your conscience through all temptations, clasping God's hand closely. You know not how many may be nerved by your example to do the same thing.

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, March 5. TEXT: Heb. 2: 14-18.

Voting for Senators

IN a Lincoln Day speech at Grand Rapids, Mich., ex-President Roosevelt, while discussing several of the leading public questions of the day, had the following to say concerning the election of Senators by direct popular vote:

"One of the progressive policies upon which I think the great majority of Progressives are agreed is that United States Senators should be elected by popular vote. The Constitution should, in my judgment, be so amended as to provide for this.

"The insistence upon the election of Senators in some way which shall not permit the people to pass directly upon them is merely a relic of the same feeling which made the founders of the Constitution trust the election of the President to the Electoral College instead of to direct popular vote. The same fears of the people expressed now by those who are against choice of Senators by popular vote were expressed a century and a quarter ago by the good and wise men who erroneously felt that it was not safe to trust the election of the President to direct popular vote.

"A comparatively short experience convinced the nation that the President should be voted for directly by the people. And although the form of an Electoral College has been retained, the actual fact is that the vote for President is a direct vote, the electors having no function except formally to ratify the popular decree—and, if it were possible, even this slight function could with advantage be abolished.

"None of the evils prophesied has resulted from the change in the case of the President, and the same thing, I am perfectly sure, will happen when the change is made as regards Senators. It will be a change markedly for good—just as much for good as was the change in the case of the President. But the United States should under no circumstances surrender one particle of the control it now has as regards the election of Senators. To do so would be a mistake which might have grave and far-reaching consequences, and absolutely no argument worth heeding can be advanced in favor of such a change."

HE WILL HOLD ME FAST

I AWOKE in the early morning
After a restless night;
I was glad the darkness was passing,
Glad of the coming light.
For I felt the pressure of sorrow
Over my spirit cast,
And I did not know how to meet it,
But God was holding me fast.

I tried to think of some promise
From out of the precious Book,
That would open the door before me
And show me which way to look
For the comfort my spirit was craving,
Till out of the depths I passed;
But not a word did He answer,
But only held me fast.

Then I rested my head on His bosom
Amid the storm and blast,
For my spirit was bruised and broken,
But still He held me fast;
The arms everlasting, beneath me,
Around me in love were clasped;
And I looked up and said: "Don't speak, Lord!
Just hold me—hold me fast!"

YE SHALL BE COMFORTED

DESPAIR not in the darkest time—
The dawning soon will be;
Look up to Him with faith sublime,
Who loves both you and me.
Dry all your tears and weep no more
O'er friend or friendship dead—
Ye shall have joy more than before—
Ye shall be comforted.

Know this—God's promises are sure—
Trust on through all the days,
And ever patiently endure,
With love and prayer and praise.
With hope be ever in accord—
With strength and courage tread;
Your faith shall reap a glad reward—
Ye shall be comforted.

Then fling behind thee selfish woe,
Find lonelier hearts than thine,
Swift sympathy to others show,
And teach God's peace divine.
Learn how much joy for others' grief
Ye may bestow instead,
And ye shall find, with sweet relief,
Your own heart comforted.

Haddonfield, N. J. MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

Moving Pictures Speak

THE problem of synchronizing the cinematograph with the phonograph, which has been for a long time before the inventors of the world, has been solved, it is claimed, by M. Gaumont, a Frenchman and a member of the Academy of Science. Mr. Edison has been working upon the problem for fifteen years and has promised the success which this Frenchman seems to have achieved. The apparatus will not be put upon the market and will not become public property until M. Gaumont can secure patents protecting his invention. The difficulty of the problem has been to keep the phonograph from running ahead of or behind the moving pictures. A second difficulty was that when a picture subject with its sound accompaniment was being recorded the phonograph could not receive the sound clearly at the distance at which it was necessary to take the views. The third difficulty was that the speaking instrument was not loud enough to be heard by a large audience witnessing the moving pictures. These difficulties have now been obviated and synchronism obtained between the two instruments by a special system of connections, which conveys through the dynamos that control the action a speed which is absolutely the same. If by accident the two should diverge, a small crank operated by hand can re-establish the synchronism by advancing or retarding the displacement of the film, which always is subordinate to the action of the phonographic disk.

The Synchronizing Instrument

President Taft on Temperance

IN some 3,000 Sunday Schools throughout the country there was read recently a letter from President Taft addressed to "My dear Young Friends," in which he said:

"The excessive use of intoxicating liquors is the cause of a great deal of the poverty, degradation, and crime of the world, and one who abstains from the use of such liquor avoids a dangerous temptation. Abraham Lincoln showed that he believed this in writing out for his boy friends the pledge of total abstinence so often quoted. Each person must determine for himself the course he will take in reference to his tastes and appetites, but those who exercise the self-restraint to avoid altogether the temptation of alcoholic liquor are on the safe and wiser side."

Who Was There That YOU Knew?

Look slowly, searchingly at the faces in this strange old Civil war photograph.

Perhaps some one near and dear to you was in this group of the 93rd New York, just before Antietam ushered in the bloodiest day of the Civil War. Or perhaps he fought among the men in Gray under Lee and Jackson, whose dream of conquering Washington that same day was shattered.

You can look for the face you want through three thousand five hundred more photographs---like this, taken in the heat of the greatest struggle since Napoleon's time; like this, driving home to every American a sense of his personal heritage in that awful test, and pride that neither North nor South was found wanting in skill or courage, but that both cemented by their blood the brotherhood of the United States of America.

3500 Undying Witnesses of Our Great War

AMAZING but true—Our Civil War was photographed. From Sumter to Appomattox, Mathew Brady, foremost camera artist of his time, risked his life again and again, accompanying the armies and navies—under special protection of Allan Pinkerton, of the United States Secret Service, and with special permission from Lincoln.

The men in Blue or Gray serving the guns, tearing up railroads, laying pontoons; in the grim trenches, 'round the camp fire, on the way to the hospital; famous leaders and dusty, bloody soldiers, gallant fighters and ghastly dead passed before the eyes of Brady's cameras. Through his infinite pains in treating every negative, before and after exposing, by the elaborate "Scott-Archer" chemical processes just discovered, those thousands of eye witnesses of our terrible national tragedy have been preserved to this day. Chance has buried these almost unbelievable photographs from view for half a century. Now their resurrection comes, by another strange chance, just in time for the country-wide celebration of the semi-centennial of 1861.

THE United States Government paid $27,840 for the Brady pictures and promptly buried them in the War Department, as an important part of our secret records; but the great camera genius who took the photographs kept a duplicate set for himself. When he died these too were lost; until now, nearly fifty years after the war, they have been found again. How they were taken, how they were lost, how they were recovered---how the Review of Reviews secured them and put them into a superb set of books so that you and every other American would own them is a wonderful romance that can't be told here. Send the coupon and you will get the whole story.

It is most fitting that President Taft has been pleased to write a special letter for inclusion in the history that accompanies these photographs, for the work is no more dramatic in its illustrations than it is truly national in its text.

We have the privilege of offering this great collection for a limited time only. We suggest that you act promptly to avoid disappointment.

18 Photographic Prints FREE

Send only 10 cents for mailing

To give you some idea of the bigness of this enterprise, a monumental and absorbing work, not for this day only, but to be handed down to future generations of American citizens---your children---we have chosen 18 typical photographs, reproduced them carefully, and enclosed them in a handsome portfolio. These 18 we will give you FREE if you send only 10 cents ---the cost of mailing. Even these samples will be valuable acquisitions.

Not only are they of great historical importance, but they will make appropriate additions to your library walls. They show eighteen different aspects of the mighty struggle.

Let us hear from you before our supply is gone. Better send the coupon at once and make sure.

Hopelessly Waiting for Help

CHINA'S FAMINE CRISIS NEAR

"SEND MONEY QUICKLY AND SAVE 75,000 LIVES," SAY THE MISSIONARIES

LETTERS from Rev. W. C. Longden, chairman of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Relief Committee at Chin-kiang, China, indicate that the crisis of the famine is near at hand. He writes under date of January 23: "Dr. Patterson informs me that there are probably 6,000 families in Suchien and 20,000 more families in Pichow and Suining who need help. Besides there will be more help needed in the spring by twice as many more." The Shanghai Committee has apportioned 50,000 taels to these sections and it was expected to be available within a few days. The Chinese authorities also have made appropriation for the district, which is in the worst part of the province of Kiangsu, north of Chin-kiang. Dr. Patterson adds: "We wish to warn against sending foodstuffs up here in May. Nothing that starts from Chin-kiang later than April 20 will do us any good. It takes boats a month to get here and the people will be eating new wheat by May 28."

Chairman Longden's letter, commenting on this information, says: "This gives us an idea as to the length of time the famine will last. The great difficulty is that by the time this reaches you it will be near the first of March. However, that will leave time for money, but not for sending foodstuffs from America. The earlier help can arrive the more effective it will be. I go to Shanghai to-day and will make inquiries as to the probable supply of grain to be obtained in the East and will cable. It is certain that any sum of money up to $200,000 that reaches us before March 15 can be used so as to save perhaps 75,000 lives."

In view of these facts, clearly pointing to the conclusion that the famine is now entering upon its most critical stage, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which, as announced last week, had contributed 10,000 sacks of flour to the cargo of the troop ship Buford, in charge of the Commercial Club of Seattle, will, instead of adding to that contribution as the Seattle organization has requested, continue its remittances by cable through the State Department, making them as large as the contributions will warrant. This is with a view to affording quick relief and is the only course to be followed in order to save human lives, as Chairman Longden's message and the corroborative letter from Dr. Patterson of Suchien have sufficiently pointed out.

Famine Sufferers at a Relief Station on Distribution Day

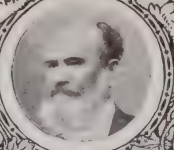
On February 23, the Chin-kiang Committee sent the following message by cable:

"CHRISTIAN HERALD, NEW YORK:

"Make appeal urgent. Famine conditions desperate. Terrible accounts received. Funds totally inadequate."

We trust that all of our readers who have not yet sent in their gift to the China Famine Fund will do so without delay. Chairman Longden's reminder that money sent now can be used to save 75,000 lives should give a tremendous impulse to the generosity of Americans at this particular stage of the relief work. We have received from Mr. John C. Ferguson of the Shanghai Relief Committee, a number of striking photographs of the famine, some of which appear on this page. These pictures tell their own story of the misery and helplessness and utter destitution of the Chinese peasants in the present visitation. Mr. Ferguson writes that both relief committees are working harmoniously and effectively. He corroborates Chairman Longden's warning that money cabled now will accomplish more good than foodstuffs sent at a late hour. "It would be much better," he writes, "to send the money to us, so that we can purchase a cheaper quality of food supply here in the local market."

Letters from our readers containing contributions to the Chinese Famine Fund continue to pour in.



One of the most notable contributors has been the Sabbath School Bode of Paterson, N. J., which has sent through Mr. James Tanis $807 to date, being the gift of the various Sunday Schools and societies in the Christian Reformed Church in America.

Acknowledgments will be found on another page.

FALSE AND TRUE FIRE

TEXTS—Lev. 9: 24; 10: 1, 2

WHAT a difference there is between fire and fire!

What a difference between the fire that warms the hearth and cheers the home, and the devouring flame that consumes the dwelling and leaves the homeless household shivering in the darkness and the cold!

What a difference between the lightning stroke that shatters the tree, or strikes down some fugitive from the tempest who has taken refuge beneath its branches, and the same lightning when it has been caught in the electric battery or conveyed along the conducting wires as the motive power that runs our factories, carries our trolleys or conveys our messages!

What a difference between the conflagration that sweeps away some mighty city and leaves its warehouses and homes a mass of smouldering ashes, and the lamps that light a thousand streets, or the fires that set in motion a thousand factories and all the peaceful industries of life!

Just as great is the difference between the true fire of the Holy Ghost and the flames of wild fanaticism—the strange fire which is kindled as its counterfeit wherever God is working. We have these two fires represented in our texts—the first representing the fire of the Holy Ghost, the second the false fires of the enemy. It is a timely thing to note some of the differences between these two fires and distinguish between divine fervor and dangerous fanaticism.

I. The true fire is kindled at the Altar of Sacrifice. The false fire ignores the blood. The flame which consumed the sacrifice upon the altar of offering also lighted the sacred fire of the altar of incense. There is much religious fire to-day which is merely the so-called "enthusiasm of humanity," or the emotion stirred by eloquence, art, or zeal for some human cause and some selfish interest. The two men who brought their offerings at the gate of Eden forever represent the two types of religion. Cain comes like a gentleman to present his compliments in a friendly way to the Lord, and make a social call. And God will have none of him or his complimentary fruits and flowers. Abel comes as a sinner and presents the bloody sacrifice which represents the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ; and lo, the descending fire strikes the altar, consumes the sacrifice, and bears witness to his acceptance. No religious emotion or experience which fails to recognize sin and the sacrifice of Jesus Christ is acceptable to God or safe for man. The blood and the fire can never be separated.

The Source of the True Fire

II. The true fire is always found in the golden censer which represents the priesthood of the Lord Jesus Christ. While the altar represents his earthly sacrifice, the censer represents his heavenly intercession. Only through his name and mediation can sinful man find access to the presence of a holy God. All worship, all prayer, and all religious feeling which fail to come through this, the only Way, are strange fire.

There is a beautiful custom in connection with the services of Easter morning in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem. After the announcement, "The Lord is risen indeed," a single taper is lighted at the open tomb, and displayed from the sacred altar, and then immediately all the priests light their tapers at this single flame, and passing down in procession light up all the lamps of the sanctuary until the blaze bursts into a glorious illumination and the echoes ring again and again, "The Lord is risen indeed!" So, every lamp of faith and hope and love in the believer's heart and the saint's experience must start from the open grave of Christ and the heavenly flame of his glorious censer as our High Priest before the throne. "I am the way, the truth and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me."

III. The true fire is kindled by the Holy Ghost and comes down from above. The false fire is earth-born and comes from mere human emotion, intellectual culture, heart-stirring eloquence, or selfish zeal. It may even come from a spirit of fear and a guilty conscience. The fires of remorse may bring the most awful sense of sin and yet have no saving or sanctifying power. All true spiritual fire must come from heaven. Until we receive the Holy Ghost we can have no true spiritual life or acceptable worship. No man can call Jesus Lord in the true sense of acknowledging him as our Lord without the Holy Ghost. The most eloquent and impressive preaching may be inspired by human genius, imagination and elocution and the tears which it evokes are not essentially different from the tears that are shed in the opera house under the influence of some brilliant actor or gifted singer.

IV. The true fire is fed by the fuel of God's Word. The strange fire depends upon human reasoning or interior revelations which come only from the ignis fatuus light of our own imagination.

Influence of the False Fire

The world is full of this kind of light and flame. We have the revelations of Spiritualism, the dreams of Theosophy and the fatuous fooleries of Christian Science. The desire of many people for a religion of feeling and a life guided by impulse rather than conviction and truth is the beginning of the same process and sure to lead eventually to the most dangerous delusions. There is no surer test of any religious experience than the simple Word of God.

V. The true fire not only descends from heaven, but goes back to heaven in a supreme purpose to glorify God, whereas the strange fire always seeks to exalt self and promote the glory of some man or woman. Nadab and Abihu, Korah and his company, all wanted to magnify their importance and show that they were just as good as Aaron and Moses. Jehu's zeal lifted up his vainglorious soul and made him say, "Come, see my zeal for the Lord of Hosts." And while God used him for a time as the instrument of his judgment upon the wicked house of Ahab and the priests of Baal, yet Jehu himself got little benefit and knew nothing perhaps of the true love and fear of God. Simon Magus wanted spiritual gifts, but it was wholly as a matter of personal ambition and pecuniary advantage. Many a minister would like a great revival and a baptism of the Spirit to make him a mighty preacher and build up his church and work. But God will have none of this. The more truly we are filled with the Holy Spirit, the more will we forget ourselves and seek the glory of him that sent us. Whenever you see a religious movement or a religious leader trying to promote his fame, to demand his rights, or to pose upon the stage of sensationalism and spectacular popularity, you may well say, "Strange fire."

Blessings of the True Fire

VI. True fire purifies, while strange fire manifests itself in unhallowed forms of sinful indulgence and excess. The fire of the Holy Ghost instinctively seeks out every sinful thing and all that is of the flesh and the world and consumes it by a divine necessity. The baptism of the Holy Ghost always tests the heart that receives it and reveals to it its own sinfulness in the most glaring and humbling light.

VII. The true fire warms and blesses, melts the heart into tenderness and inspires the soul with love. The false fire leads to criticism, division, censoriousness, harshness, and judgment. James and John are the types of the latter seeking to call fire down from heaven to consume the people who refuse to honor and agree with them. And the Lord Jesus quietly turned to them and said, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." Their race is not yet extinct. We are always coming in contact with young Elijahs that leap into a chariot of fire and hurl their anathemas against all who do not accept their revelations or agree with their positive and self-confident opinions. The fire of God is gentle, tender, loving, patient, free from self-assertion, strife and harshness, ready to make concessions, easy to get along with, and as sweet as it is strong. God give us a spirit not only of power, but of love and of a sound mind.

Channels of the True Fire

VIII. The true fire works along the ordinary channels of duty, while the false fire is apt to be eccentric, abnormal and extravagant. The true fire does not take people out of their place, but fits them better to fill it. It makes the mother a better mother, the pupil a better scholar, the employee a more faithful servant, the artisan a more skilful workman, the business man more efficient in his calling, the worshiper more regular in his pew and systematic in his contributions, and the Christian, whatever his place in the secular and spiritual world, more simple, practical, and efficient in every sphere of duty and place of service. When people are struck with the false fire they become eccentric. They want to give up their ordinary occupations and spurn honest labor as beneath a consecrated Christian. They go to preaching and prophesying. A good pastor, whose little flock has been visited with a very unusual religious awakening, and one that has developed some extraordinary manifestations of the Holy Spirit, including the gift of tongues, declares in a recent public statement that these very things, beginning, no doubt, with a genuine operation of the Holy Spirit, became so strained, exaggerated and abused, that they really became a great hindrance to the work of God, led to confusion, fanaticism, and bitter strife and division, and it was only after months of earnest, humble prayer on the part of the wise and the true members, that the work was saved from being arrested and almost destroyed. God give us that wholesome fire that runs along the wires, that keeps the wheels on the track, that kindles the heat which warms the hearthstone and fills the home with sweetness, and that kindles the furnace fires and moves the engines of every holy energy and consecrated service.

IX. The true fire burns on in spite of all opposition. The false fire burns itself out after its brief sensation and leaves only ashes and darkness. John Bunyan tells us of the flame which represented the grace of God in the heart, on which a demon hand was constantly pouring water, but still the fire burned on, and the spectator wondered until the Interpreter took him round behind the scenes where he beheld an angel constantly pouring oil upon the flame. We grow very tired of the religious excitements that last while the machinery is kept moving by a lot of human pressure, but dies out when the pressure is withdrawn; the revivals that are adjusted for the week of prayer and the busy season, but must be got out of the way when the summer vacation is on. Oh for the revival that will last till the dross of sin is all burned up, the work of God is finished, the world evangelized and the coming of the Lord prepared!

X. The true fire energizes and makes things go. The false fire is satisfied to watch its own blaze and hear its own report. Quaint Abraham Lincoln used to tell of a steamboat on the Mississippi that had a very loud whistle, but whenever it whistled the boat stopped, for it had only power enough to do one thing at a time. How many Christians there are that put their strength into their shouts and congratulations, and when we look for results, there is nothing but the whistle. The fire of God is an energizing force. A recent writer has given a stirring account of the fires of Pittsburg that are burning night and day, and carrying on tremendous operations and accomplishing results not only worthy of comparison with other cities, but greater than the combined output of whole nations. The fire of God kindled in the heart of Paul turned the world upside down. The fire of God in the heart of Luther brought about the Reformation. The fire of God in David Livingstone opened Africa to the world. The fire of God in Hudson Taylor burst the barriers of interior China, and started that mighty movement which to-day has turned that vast empire back in its course.

Baptize with fire this soul of mine,
Endue me with Thy Spirit's might,
And make me by Thy power divine
A burning and a shining light.

*Dr. Simpson is the founder and head of the Christian and Missionary Alliance (Evangelical).

Is It King Ahab's Palace?

IN THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of February 8, we referred to the reported discoveries by Professor Reisner of Harvard University in the ancient kingdom of Samaria announcing that many clay tablets and potsherds bearing inscriptions of King Ahab's reign had been unearthed. Now, in addition to these, comes the news that what is believed to be the ruins of the great ivory palace of Ahab, the pusillanimous King of Israel, who allowed himself to be led away from the worship of the true God to the service of Baal by his wicked queen, Jezebel, has been discovered. If this is so, if the ruins which have been laid bare are really the remains of the palace where Jezebel carried on her intrigues and entertained the priests and prophets of Baal and Astarte and from the window of which she was finally cast to pay the forfeit of her many crimes, then indeed we find of Professor Reisner will centre the interest not alone of Biblical students and scholars, but of students of history throughout the world.

Ahab was the eighth king of Israel and reigned from 915 to 895 B.C. He was a man of weak nature, incapable of moral resistance to those of a more dominant will than his own. In addition he was vain and vacillating, striving constantly after effect and ostentation but never long pursuing one course or the same policy. These defects of character might in some measure have been overcome had fortune been kind in giving him a consort who would have exerted a good influence of womanly dignity and queenly character over him, but as it happened his union with Jezebel, daughter of Ethbaal, the Tyrian king, intensified and emphasized the blemishes of his character and was without doubt the cause of his falling into the grievous sin of Baal worship.

When he coveted Naboth's vineyard and could not compel the owner to sell, he mockingly taunted him with the historical question: "Dost thou not govern the kingdom of Israel?" Then he forged letters and sealed them with the king's seal and sent them to the rulers, accusing Naboth of blasphemy, and the innocent man was taken and stoned to death. It was at this juncture that Elijah the prophet appeared as the avenger and witness of the true God. The holy man came before the trembling Ahab, and in tones of terrible import prophesied the end of the sinfully weak monarch: "In the place where the dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine." Concerning Jezebel the prophet foretold: "The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel." And the Bible informs us, these prophecies were fulfilled to the letter.

Any discovery which gives us more definite knowledge of the troublous period of Ahab's reign, of the conflict between the adherents of Jehovah and the upholders of Baal, will be welcomed by all who wish to study this, the most thrilling period of Old Testament history.

If the ruins uncovered are really those of the palace of Ahab and Jezebel as is expected many treasures will be brought to the surface. Of far greater importance than the inscribed potsherds which have been already found, would be the annals of the Israelitish people, and it is supposed that many of these were preserved in the royal house of the capital. It is known that when the "Book of Kings" was being written there was in existence another book called "Chronicles of the Kings of Israel"—a book which must not be confounded with the present Biblical book of Chronicles." What happened to this narrative of the reign? Is it not reasonable to suppose that it was stored away in some recess of the palace? If so, and if it should now be exhumed from beneath the débris of centuries, what a treasure it would prove and what a mass of information it would give us of those formative times upon which the civilization of mankind has been built.

The Man and the Church

By EUGENE THWING

II. THE MINISTER'S PART

IN A GREAT many churches, and in many preachers' meetings, pastors are asking the question, "Why do men stay away from church?" And constantly these same pastors are seeking reasons outside of themselves. Business men are not sufficiently interested in religion; attractions of sport and recreation which can be enjoyed only on the one day in seven free from business are more alluring; Sunday is the workingman's day for rest and for visiting with his family or friends.

The unquestionable facts in support of these and other similar reasons make so substantial a case against the non-churchgoing man that the pastor often probes no deeper into the problem. Least of all does he keep on searching until he finds the chief reason in himself. Yet it is possible for the consecrated minister to be so true a prophet of God and so genuine a brother to the men of his parish that all apparent reasons for non-churchgoing shall be swept away, and the pews shall be filled with the men because they want to be there.

MASCULINE absenteeism is not a universal condition. It is no more general than its chief cause. The church in Coffeyville, Kan., of which F. L. Geer wrote in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a few weeks ago, is not as rare a case as some would believe. There the "prayer meetings have an average attendance of 75, of which half are business men, and a business men's Bible class of 60 members contains many who are prominent in the business and political life of the city." In a suburban church about half an hour's ride from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, nearly every aisle seat on Sunday morning is occupied by a business man; most of them are engaged in the strenuous life of the great city, and the majority are able, if so inclined, to spend the Sabbath in their automobiles, or at the country club.

MEN, as a rule, will not go to church merely as a religious function. They demand something in the service that is worth while. The work of the week is absorbing and strenuous. Into it a man must put the very best nerve, and energy, and brain at his command. He sweats blood to accomplish the results he is after. He lays everything that can help him under tribute. Six days of the week he lives at high pressure—an exciting, throbbing, eager contest to overcome the difficulties and hindrances that surround him, and to achieve a strong man's victory.

What need has such a man of a luke-warm dish of religious platitudes on Sunday morning? Nay, what patience can he have with them? God's eternal truth is never a platitude, you may say, yet the most vital and urgent truths can be so weakly presented that they seem like platitudes to the tired man in the pew. And that is the point of the whole matter—not what is the intrinsic value of the truth the preacher brings to his people, but how close does it get to them.

THE message from the pulpit must be as real and as compelling as the clamorings of business. Theories, religious essays, doctrinal discussions do not meet the needs of the man in the whirlpool. The preacher must know life, and then he must interpret God's truth in terms of life. He need not be a merchant, or a banker, or a farmer; but he must make it his business to know the actual experiences, and struggles and aims, and disappointments of the merchant, and the banker, and the farmer, so that he can find in God's Word and in his own communion with his Master, just the message that will fit the need of these men and bring it to them in terms that will be familiar and convincing. The true pastor must both know and feel the things that are vital in the lives of his people. He cannot minister to them otherwise.

A young pastor in his first charge prepared a beautiful sermon of consolation intended especially for a mother in his congregation who had lost a darling child. After the service, the mother asked him, "Did you ever have a little one of your own?" He had none. "Did you ever lose any one who was very dear to you?" No, he had been spared such bereavement thus far. "Well, my son, you had better wait until you know what it is, before you try to preach such a sermon again," said the sorrowing mother, who had not been comforted. Jesus is the unfailing Comforter because he was "acquainted with grief."

THE man in the pew may recognize the learning and the long, conscientious study which the minister brought to the preparation of his sermon, but he is tired and does not need proof that the preacher is a student; he may appreciate eloquence and good pulpit manners, but the sound of the ticker, or the quick ring of the telephone in his office, is really more eloquent to him because it means something; he may concede that it looks respectable to sit at the head of his pew at least once a week, but a few hours' brisk ride through the country or a few rounds of golf will give him a fresh tonic for the strain of another week's work.

It is up to the minister to get closer to his men. Give them practical applied truth. Apply it to the things they are most deeply concerned with. Bring them light in their darkness, strength in their weakness, cheer and inspiration in their day of discouragement. Make the religion of Jesus Christ real to them as a thing for the shop and the counting-house. Bring home to them in plain, strong terms the essential fact that the Christian life and the business life must be so joined and blended that neither can be complete apart from the other; and that the largest, truest, most lasting success is reserved for the business man who consecrates the full tide of his life to the Master, without whose blessing and companionship no life is worth the living.

Next week: "THE CHURCH'S PART."

A New Lincoln Letter

IN General Dodge's recent speech at the Young Men's Christian Association, Council Bluffs, Ia., a letter, written by Abraham Lincoln, which has never been published, was read. The letter was written to the Friends who had opposed hostilities between the North and the South and who had written several letters to Lincoln concerning their principles. The letter is dated September 4, 1864, and is addressed to Eliza P. Gurney, and says:

"I am much indebted to the good Christian people of the country for their constant prayers and consolations, and to none of them more than to yourself. The purposes of the Almighty are perfect and must prevail, though we erring mortals may fail to accurately perceive them in advance. We hoped for a happy termination of this terrible war long before this, but God knows best and has ruled otherwise. We shall acknowledge his wisdom, and our own error therein. Meanwhile, we must work earnestly in the best light he gives us, trusting that so working still conduces to the great end he ordains. Surely he intends some great good to follow this mighty convulsion, which no mortal could make and no mortal could stay.

"Your people—the Friends—have had, and are having, a very great trial. On principle and faith opposed to war and oppression, they can only practically oppose oppression by war. In this hard dilemma some have chosen one horn and some the other. For those appealing to me on conscientious grounds, I have done, and shall do, the best I can, in my own conscience under my oath to the Lord. That you believe this, I doubt not, and believing it I shall still receive for our country and myself your earnest prayers to our Father in heaven.

"Your sincere friend,
"A. LINCOLN."

To those who have entertained doubts concerning the religious views of Lincoln, this letter will be regarded as evidence that he had very clear and definite spiritual convictions, and that he looked to God for guidance in the most trying situations.

Gladdens Three Homes

My CHRISTIAN HERALD gladdens three homes. After I read it, I pass it on to a neighbor whose circumstances are too straitened to indulge in any expenditure except for absolute needs. She says "her Sundays are brightened and she is refreshed by THE HERALD." I gave her Dr. Klopsch's picture and she had it framed and hung up. When she returns THE HERALD, I send it on to a friend in my old home—Virginia. She has thanked me most gratefully for it. I cannot close without a word of appreciation of your good, helpful paper. Whenever I read it over, I feel as if "it was good for me to have been there." MRS. H. W. J.

THE TROUBLE IN MEXICO

THE fires of revolution are still burning luridly in Mexico; as soon as they show any disposition to flicker, there is always some event which adds fresh fuel to the pile to feed the flame. There have been several severe clashes between the Federal troops and the insurrectos, with the results mostly in favor of the latter. Fighting for the most part has centred round Juarez, a town which takes its name from former President Juarez, the teacher and friend of Porfirio Diaz. The insurrectos have become so numerous and have taken such a bold stand, that the government army has become more or less demoralized and seems incompetent to cope with the military situation. It is also charged that the Mexican Federal soldiers have committed many wanton atrocities which have alienated hundreds from allegiance to the government and made them sympathize in secret with the insurrectos. Government troops have several times attacked and inflicted grievous injury on non-combatants, even in their vengeance assaulting defenseless women. Down in Southern Mexico, a wealthy planter, named Solonez, was suspected of being the treasurer of the Southern branch of the insurrectos. Federals seized one of his servants and tortured the man until he confessed that Solonez had money hidden in the cellar. They found the money and confiscated it; then took Solonez out and shot nineteen bullets into his body.

During an engagement at Mulata the Federals found four old white-haired men in a farmhouse. One was blind, another was a cripple, and a third was over ninety years old. The soldiers took out these four helpless old men and literally riddled them with bullets, in which state they were found by the insurrectos.

In striking contrast to such inhuman butchery is this incident: After the engagement of Mulata, a government soldier was found by insurrectos lying wounded on the field. As the latter knew of the fate of the four old men, the victims of the brutal Federals, they were naturally incensed and inclined to wreak a like vengeance by dispatching the lone Federal soldie... but the rebel co... mander, Orteg... stepped out and s... dressed his followe... A Famous Woman Visitor from the Orient

DR. YAMAI KIN, who is the most skilful and famous woman doctor in the Chinese Empire, and also one of the most intelligent of women along other lines, is in our country for the third time. She spent a year in America when she was five years old, having been brought over by an American missionary and his wife, who had practically adopted her after both of her own parents had died. At nineteen years of age she again came to America, this time for a long stay, as she had come to enter the Woman's Medical School of the New York Infirmary. The late Dr. Emily Blackwell was one of her teachers and she found in the little Chinese girl an eager and earnest pupil. When Yamai Kin left the Infirmary she carried a diploma with her, and spent two years doing post-graduate work in several medical schools. Then she went back to China and began work among her own people, confining her efforts chiefly to women and children. In time she became connected with the Chinese Hospital in Amoy. This is an hospital for women and children and it afforded Dr. Kin the opportunity of doing just the kind of work she wanted most to do. Here she attracted the attention of the Chinese Government, for which she has since done much effective work, especially in an advisory way for the Sanitary Department. There is no doubt that she to-day occupies a higher position as a physician than any other woman of her race. She is exceedingly progressive and is eager to have the women of China develop as fast as possible during the progress of what we call the "Chinese Awakening."

Dr. Kin thinks that Americans labor under a great deal that is false regarding the status of women in China. She is sure that they have much more liberty and are more progressive than they are commonly supposed to be. She cites with pride the fact that the women own and edit an excellent paper in Peking, and she thinks that the Chinese mother occupies a higher position than does the mother in America. The conservatism of centuries in China is giving place to a degree of progressiveness in the taking up of new ideas that affords Dr. Kin a great deal of satisfaction, since she sees in this more and more emancipation for the people.

Yamai Kin, China's Leading Woman Doctor

Dr. Kin brought to America a young ward of hers in Miss Pau Lan Pai, who is the first Manchu woman to come to America. Little Miss Pai comes here to study English, and as soon as she has mastered that language sufficiently she will take up the study of medicine in Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. Dr. Kin pays us the compliment of saying that she feels that she could hardly keep pace with the times did she not come to America to "freshen up" in all that is modern, particularly in what is modern along the line of the advancement of women. Christian Work in the Canal Zone

ALL the work of the Protestant bodies in the Canal Zone is exotic. The religion of the Isthmus of Panama is Roman Catholic; its priesthood is native and the church is an inheritance from the Spanish settlers. The first Protestant church built on the Isthmus was Christ (Episcopal) church in Colon. It was erected in 1864 by the Panama Railroad for the benefit of its employees who were largely natives of the British West Indian islands and adherents of the Established Church of Great Britain. This church was built with American money and consecrated by an American bishop, and was for a time under the jurisdiction of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States. In 1882, the Wesleyan Methodist Mission was established in the Isthmus, and later the Baptist Church of England brought over ministers.

During the French canal times, the church of Panama ministered to the spiritual needs of the employees. The hospital in Ancon was in charge of French and native priests and a company of Sisters of the Order of St. Vincent were brought over as nurses. The head of these Sisters was one whose name must ever be spoken in connection with the founding of Ancon Hospital, Sœur Marie Rouleau. It is to the initiative of this noble and self-sacrificing woman that the laying out of the beautiful grounds of the hospital is mainly due.

The real beginning of Protestant work in the Isthmus dates only from the American occupation in 1904, when, by the authority of the Isthmian Canal Commission, it was transplanted bodily to the Canal Zone along with the machines and other equipment of the labor camp, including a population of more than five thousand souls. The first authority for such work was made at an early sitting of the Commission when that institute passed a resolution providing for the appointment of fifteen chaplains for duty in the Canal Zone. It has been the policy of the Commission to distribute the appointments as much as possible among representatives of the different denominations. The present number includes two Wesleyan Methodists, two Methodists, one Presbyterian and three clergymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church. There are three Catholic priests in the service.

There is no mission among the white population. Ministers of all denominations agree that the real, abiding work on the Isthmus is among the negroes and natives of the Southern islands. The West Indian will hereafter form a large part of the population while at the end of three years there will be left but a scattering of white Americans. The army, the navy and such officials connected with the fortifications and marine stations, the government authorities, the hospital staff and the few employees connected with canal repairs will constitute the entire American white population.

Among the West Indians, the Baptist, Methodist, Wesleyan and Anglican churches are represented and most of the work of the ministers is now directed toward the establishing of missions, Sunday Schools and societies for the young, as well as regularly organized church and parish work. Meantime, young America is not being neglected and Sunday in the Canal Zone presents nearly the same picture, and has nearly the same essential features that mark Sunday in any town or village in the United States. There is a little more tendency to stay at home on one day in the week, but the energy of the Christian workers is rewarded by the response of the few faithful, and the Canal Zone may be reckoned a fairly church-going as it is a law-abiding colony of American citizens.

As further proof that the American people wish to identify themselves in a foreign country as representatives of a Christian nation, religious organizations have been formed at Culebra, Empire, Gatun and Cristobal, for the purpose of holding weekly prayer meetings and song services when there is no minister. The membership of these organizations is large. They govern the religious work where no denominational church is organized, and are active in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association, and also in the social life of the Zone, in arranging church sociables, sales and entertainments. Some of the leagues support scholarships in the Methodist College in Panama.

Besides the building of Christ Church on the beach at Colon—which is a beautiful little Gothic structure in stone—the concrete church buildings of the Wesleyans in Panama and the Baptists in Cristobal are the only finished church structures the cost of which has exceeded $3,000.

Primitive Farming in the Canal Zone

There are nine Sunday Schools in the villages, with a total enrolment of over one thousand pupils. These schools are federated in an organization under the title of the Isthmian Sunday School Association, and they work on the lines of the Sunday Schools of the International Association. The lack of libraries in the Sunday Schools is one that is keenly felt throughout the Canal Zone.

In the parishes for colored people some of the most amusing things occur.

One minister tells of being called upon to give a child a certain name. When he objected to such a name, the sponsors shamefacedly told him that they got it "off a medicine bottle," and that they "thought it was pretty."

Major Henry A. Brown
Chaplain, Engineering Corps

In bringing their children to baptism, the mothers dress them in the most elaborate fashion; laces and ribbons adorn the long robes that nearly sweep the ground, their fuzzy locks are tied with broad ribbons, and their bright beadlike eyes gaze solemnly out from the frill of a ridiculous cap! The Commission has taken rigid steps to overcome the lax conditions of the negro population and the laws requiring a marriage by the church or the civil authorities are strictly enforced.

A woman presented a child for baptism. It was elaborately dressed in white, with blue ribbons. Nothing strange was noticed and the service went on as usual, the other infants presented being duly named and baptized, but when the minister turned to this woman, and said, "Name this child," she returned his look with one of utter blankness.

"What is the name?" asked the minister gently.

"The woman courtesied and said humbly, "I don't know, sir."

"You don't know?" repeated the astonished minister. "Is it a boy or a girl?"

Again the woman courtesied. "I don't know, sir," she repeated.

"Why, aren't you the mother?"

"No, sir," was the humble answer.

"Who is the mother, then? Where does she live?" demanded the minister, still more puzzled.

"I don't know, sir," came the reply.

Subsequent questioning developed the story that the woman had been passing a house when another woman had come out and thrust the infant into her arms, begging her to take it to be christened on that day. The verger came to the rescue, cleared the matter up, and the child was duly baptized and registered in the parish register as "Elizabeth."

The government gives the utmost freedom to the Christian workers. Permission is accorded to the ministers of the Methodist Church in Panama to hold service in Spanish in the city prison, and to work among the poor.

A CHURCH BUILT IN A DAY

IN THE city of Waco, Texas, recently, within the short period of nine hours, there sprang full-finished upon a barren site a substantial church edifice. Rev. H. L. Munger, a Methodist minister, was the man who originated the idea and worked out the plans. On January 9 he purchased the lot that was to be the site. On the following day architects drew the plans. Mr. Munger also on that day let the contract for the interior finish, with the understanding that it was to be delivered on the following day. He then got his construction forces together and arranged that the work of building the edifice should begin on the morning of January 11. He arranged with the material men to deliver the stone and cement for the foundation, the lumber for the superstructure, the roofing and other material that was to enter into the building as fast as it might be required.

At 8 o'clock A.M. not a stick of lumber or a particle of other building material had been delivered. But a few minutes later, wagons began arriving and when most of the material was upon the ground. The stone and brick masons began work and at 9 o'clock the foundation was finished. In another hour the skeleton of the building was well advanced. Under Oscar Myer, forty carpenters, painters and helpers put the building material together with wonderful rapidity. The painters followed close behind the carpenters and the finishing touches were given to the different parts by noon. At that hour the entire frame was in place and part of the interior finished. The force was increased to more than fifty and the noise of saws and hammers resounded through the neighborhood.

Completing the Church That Was Built in a Day

The women showed their interest by serving the hungry workmen a substantial lunch at noon. At one o'clock work was resumed. By this time the rafters were ready and twenty-eight men started to work laying the rubberoid roofing. This was finished at 4.30. All the exterior was completed by that hour, and work on the interior was nearly finished. Flooring, ceiling and electric wiring had been done and paperhangers were at work. By five o'clock the building was in a completed state except a few minor details. These were accomplished a few minutes before six, and even the pulpit and the chairs were in place.

The public announcement was made by Pastor Munger at six o'clock that religious thanksgiving services would be held in the building immediately. The church was quickly filled with workmen and others and impressive services were held. Rev. H. D. Knickerbocker of Austin Avenue Methodist Church of Waco announced that the new building cost $2,500 and that a new parsonage to cost $1,700 was needed. He called for subscriptions and in thirty minutes about $2,500 was subscribed.

In order to guard against loss by fire, an insurance policy for $1,500 was in effect by five o'clock.

Tinkering the Decalogue

IN recent years we have had occasion to comment on repeated attempts to tinker the old Bible. These have invariably failed, for the Word has stood so long as a sacred unit for the spiritual guidance of mankind, and is so lovingly enshrined in the hearts of good men and women everywhere, that it cannot be altered or amended, defaced or perverted, to suit the passing whim of adverse criticism. Now, however, we have intelligence of an attack from an unexpected source. Members of the Convocation of Canterbury, in England, which includes in its list many divines more or less eminent, have decided to essay the reconstruction of the Decalogue. They take the ground that the Moral Law, which has been sacredly and reverently preserved to us from the time of Moses, is unsuited to the spiritual needs of this age, so they would reorganize the commandments to the extent, at least, of shortening the second, fourth, and last of the number. The Mosaic code, they gravely assure us, does not really belong to the Mosaic age but to the period of the early prophets, some holding that it originated in the days of Hammurabi, the priest-king of an early Babylonian dynasty, many centuries before Moses, and who was himself a great law-maker and codifier. Consequently, being bound to find some plausible excuse for Bible tinkering, they have taken this as a sufficient warrant for laying irreverent hands on the Ten Commandments, and, in the name of erudition, they now propose to present them in a new garb and considerably abridged. Their revised and edited Decalogue stands about as follows:

1. Thou shalt have no other gods besides me.
2. Thou shalt not make unto thee any (graven) image.
3. Thou shalt not take the name of thy God for a vain end.
4. Remember the Sabbath Day to hallow it.
5. Honor thy father and thy mother.
6. Thou shalt not kill.
7. Thou shalt not commit adultery.
8. Thou shalt not steal.
9. Thou shalt not bear false witness.
10. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's home.

This they plausibly profess would be no lowering of the moral standard of the law, but it would simplify and eliminate the unnecessary phraseology which had a peculiar application to the condition of the Hebrew people when Moses was their spiritual leader. They think the old law, as it originally stood when it was delivered on Sinai, is largely superfluous to-day. It is too personal and illbred, and needs to be tinkered to suit modern requirements and cultivated taste.

We do not believe for a moment that any such movement as we have described can meet with success. The Consistory may propose, but Christianity will dispose, of the matter. Three years must elapse before the subject could come up in the next Consistory and three more years before it could be enacted into church law. But were the years hours or centuries, the result would be the same. In the end, Christian opinion would reject the innovation as impious and absurd.

Some years ago, it is related that there was a certain church whose pastor belonged to what is known as the "modern school" of theology. In his sermons he gave less attention to the Gospel than to the historicity of the books of the Bible, and he spared no pains to convince his hearers that certain Biblical characters were myths, certain incidents allegories, and certain books of doubtful origin or authority. All the way down from Genesis to Revelation he set up landmarks of doubt and ambiguity. One day, a parishioner called upon him in his study. "Preacher," said he, "I'm in a quandary. I've sat under your preaching for the last twelve months," he added producing his Bible, "and here is the result. Now, what am I to do about it?"

"Why," said the astonished preacher, "these are only the covers. Where's the rest of it?"

"Well," said the other, quietly, "it's just this way. You began at Genesis, which you said was only myth and legend and tradition, and so out went Genesis. Then you riddled the rest of the Pentateuch, which went after Genesis. Then Kings and Chronicles were largely fabulous. You said Judges was a mere story book; and so on, and all through the others; and I tore them out and threw them away, as you seemed to think that was the proper thing. And now, preacher, there's nothing left but these boards. Tell me what I am to do about it."

Of course, we do not understand that the Westminister Consistory means to do away with the Commandments; it just means to do a little scholarly tinkering and then the Commandments will probably be known as the New Canterbury Decalogue.

Raising the "Maine" at Last

DUTY long neglected loses none of its obligations. A general sentiment of relief and approval greets the announcement that the work of raising the battleship Maine from the mud of Havana Harbor is actually under way. Exactly thirteen years ago, the proud American warship went down with all on board. Fierce controversy waged for many months as to whether the explosion which wrecked the battleship was within or without. All who care more for the truth than for personal satisfaction will hope that the facts can now be established, one way or the other, beyond all dispute. Probably of the 266 men who went down with the battleship, not enough remains for formal burial.

The national honor and dignity require that what is left of one of Uncle Sam's proud ships shall be gathered up and taken away from the scene of its destruction. The Maine perished in service and its end receives universal attention. A few days ago, the newspapers contained an account of the discarding of $150,000,000 worth of American warships which no longer are fit to hold places in the navy of so great a power as the United States. Think of it! One hundred and fifty millions of dollars of war machinery consigned to the junk yards in times of peace! Yet that is not disarmament. Other millions of dollars without number are constantly being expended to provide new engines of war of the most modern type. What marvels of benevolent science; what wonders of social advancement; what blessed miracles of human uplift can be accomplished with these hundreds of millions of dollars, when the nations stop rivaling one another in mighty engines of destruction, and the barbarism of war is at an end!

Foolish Annexation Talk

THERE is a good deal of talk just now about our annexing Canada. It has been set afloat by the opponents of reciprocity with the purpose of misleading public opinion in this country and elsewhere regarding the real object of the agreement. We have not the slightest desire to annex new territory in any portion of the globe, and all sensible Canadians and Americans know this; but there is always an element ready to accept as gospel any story the politicians or the sensational press may invent. Canada is our very good neighbor, and Providence has so arranged matters geographically, that our trade and social interests may run together, side by side, in most amicable relationship. Our markets and those of Canada, with certain proper limitations, should be open to each other for the freest trade interchange, which would benefit both countries and make life easier for all classes on this continent.

The Plain People and the Post Office

IT WAS Abraham Lincoln who made the famous remark that "God loved the common people most, because there were most of them." He kept the common people and their rights and interests steadily in view, and every really great American, before and since, has done likewise. Just now the common people have decided to make themselves heard in relation to the proposed prohibitive tax upon their magazines and periodicals. They naturally resent such a tax, which, though aimed at the publishers, would ultimately fall upon the own shoulders. They demand better post-offi business methods and the introduction of a parce post, instead of permitting sources of great reven to be monopolized by the express companies. I the inquiry broadens, and as the people begin realize the far-reaching nature of the proposed ta Congress is finding that the general sentiment the country opposes it for two very emphatic re sons: first, because it is an unpatriotic and u statesmanlike measure, inasmuch as it would i pose an undeserved and unnecessary hardsh upon the whole reading public; and second, becau with proper management and the introduction a parcels post, the whole problem of a postal defic would be met and overcome.

In a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Ho William Sulzer, Congressman from New York, h this to say concerning the proposed subjection the magazine and periodical press to an exorbita increase of postal rates:

> In the interest of the plain people of our country, I ha always consistently opposed any increase of postal rates newspapers, magazines and periodicals. They are published disseminate intelligence, and greatly benefit the people, a should go through the mails as cheaply as possible. The g ernment can easily put the Post Office Department upon a s supporting basis by Congress enacting into laws my bill fo general Parcels Post. I am reliably informed that this wo increase the postal revenues to the extent of fifty million doll a year, wipe out any deficit, and permit the government materially reduce postal rates and increase the pay of the pos employees.

As Mr. Sulzer made absolutely clear in recent speech in the House, the express compani have a monopoly of the profitable parcels tra while the post office takes the least profitable e of it. As a result, the express companies p 100 and even 200 per cent. profit, while the p office, through its own short-sightedness, creat a deficit. Moreover, the express companies a carrying parcels in violation of the Federal La Were the law to be enforced and the post office do its duty, the deficit would vanish and the would be no need of such a wild and impoli scheme as that to tax the plain people throu the publishers in the interests of the express co panies. Trades unions and labor organizatio are now sending protests to Congress against t proposed tax, which would throw tens of thousan of men out of employment. These men are t employees of printing establishments, trade peri icals, paper mills, and printing press manuf tories. We cannot believe that Congress, in vi of all the facts, will support this ill-advised me ure, which, besides being a gross injustice to t publishers themselves, would be a blow at all t industries allied with the publishing busin throughout the country.

New Panama Railroad

THE Panama Congress has determined that the railroad from Panama to David shall be built. President Arosemena objects to the construction of this railroad upon the ground that the republic would burden itself with an undertaking which could not be made to pay expenses for a long time to come. The friends of the scheme insist that its construction would not only be of immense convenience to the people as a means of transportation, but would also have an untold influence in developing the resources and industries of the republic. The promoters of the new scheme are also encouraged by the announcement that the canal engineers are providing for the building of a permanent railroad bridge across the canal. Ever since the canal was undertaken by the United States the bridge question has been a puzzle. There is little doubt that one or more bridges will be built, which will cause no obstruction to commerce on the canal and no menace to the canal's integrity. There will probably be one bridge at Panama, one at Colon, and one somewhere between them in the course of time. The bridge will not only bind the two parts of Panama, but will also furnish a link in that great chain of international railroads which is likely to extend without a break from the United States to Patagonia. Of that chain the new railroad proposed from Panama to David will be an important part and may fill up the longest gap which now exists between the Rio Grande and the canal. The stretch is practically complete through Mexico, and Guatemala is rapidly carrying it to the border of Salvador, while Nicaragua and Costa Rica have long lines in operation. The Congress of Panama has planned for the new railroad to be finished about the time the canal shall have been completed. Roads through all history have been great promoters of civilization. The roads cut through the forest, thrown up in marshy places and constructed over the mountains have ever promoted travel and trade. Roads first made of dirt and then paved by one kind of material or another, built by local authorities and from the national treasury, have through all the ages been the channels of social, industrial, intellectual and moral life. The railroad of to-day is the evolution of the highway systems of communication and commerce of the centuries of the past. Moses in sending messages from Kadesh to the King of Edom thus refers to the royal public road:

Let us pass, I pray thee, through thy country; we will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells: we will go by the king's high way, we will not turn to the right hand nor to the left, until we have passed thy borders. (Num. 20:17.)

Wins Bet, but Dies

Charles Munchler, retired boss barber of Brooklyn, entered a saloon the other evening and getting a little jolly made a bet with a patron in the saloon called Mike that he could drink a quart of whisky in less time than Mike could. Mike took the bet and the two went into a back room of the saloon, carrying a quart bottle of whisky under each arm. A crowd of saloon loungers followed them into the room and witnessed the contest. Munchler lifted his glass to his lips and chuckled, but the chuckle did not last long, for he set himself down to the serious task of speedy consumption. Both were silent, sipping, swallowing and comparing one another's bottles. The crowd was in great glee and joined in the betting. At last Munchler, very pale, with his eyes large and red, choked down the last drop, having finished his quart in fifty minutes, while Mike had only disposed of one-third of his bottle. Munchler twisted his neck about, loosened his collar and toppled over. They stretched him out on a table, where he slept, breathing heavily. When the saloonkeeper wanted to close up he got some man to carry the drunken man to his home. They told his wife that he had been drinking heavily and would sleep off the effects of it. Mrs. Munchler put her husband to bed, and when she went to his room at eight o'clock the next morning she found that he was dead. This poisonous drink did for this poor man suddenly what it does for more than a hundred thousand men each year as certainly but more gradually. The party began with much fun, but it was a tragedy whose last act was death.

Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder. (Prov. 23:31, 32.)

The Thief and the Coffin

It is often the case in pestilences and in war that the dead are robbed of their treasures or ornaments. This vile kind of theft is abominated by all nations, and ordinarily the thieves are shot down at once without waiting for the process of the courts. A theft somewhat akin to this occurred the other night at the home of Julius O. Lange at Mamaroneck, N. Y. While the crape was on the door and Mrs. Lange lay dead in the house a burglar pried open a rear window. He passed through the room containing the corpse and gathered up from the first floor clothing and jewelry amounting to $15,000 and made away with them. The burglar with mask and skeleton keys and dagger and pistol is not credited with conscience or sentiment, but this theft in the Lange home is savage and diabolical. Among some nations to-day they would chop a man's head off as a penalty of the law for such a robbery. This, however, is only one of the myriad forms that a cruel avarice takes to satisfy its craving. This sin is condemned everywhere in the Old Testament and the New.

Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbor, neither rob him. (Lev.19:13.)

Mountain-Climbing Fatality

Every year a large number of mountain-climbers fall to their death. One of the American consular agents in South Germany reports that there were ninety deaths within the past year in the Swiss and Italian Alps and almost as many serious accidents besides. The causes of the fatalities were climbing mountain peaks without a guide, landslides, the breaking of ropes, and sudden appearance of fogs. During the year 1910 Switzerland leads the list of those in the mountains, followed in order by Germany, England, Austria and Italy. In climbing the steeps of earthly success or spiritual endeavor, there are many dangerous places, and many people slip and fall. This prayer of the Psalmist is a becoming one:

Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not (Ps. 17:5.)

Apponyi's Message to Congress

The House of Representatives at Washington took a recess the other day to hear an address by Apponyi, the celebrated Hungarian statesman. In presenting him, Speaker Cannon said: "It affords me great pleasure to introduce to you one who has had forty years' service in the House of Representatives of Hungary, who for many years was leader of that body and now is not only a member of that body but of the Cabinet, the Minister of Education." Count Apponyi, after making eloquent reference to what we had brought from and left in the Old World, said: "We of the Old World, desiring to come out of the devouring waste of the ancient spirit of animosity and distrust, appeal to you for assistance to do away with the hateful legacy of hatred and war and antagonism between men who ought to be brethren. This is the object of my mission in America. This is what I think the spirit of the Old World has to say to the spirit of the New World; and having delivered to you this message, let me again thank for the high honor which you have done me." It would be difficult to conceive of a more becoming bearer of the olive branch of peace or a more befitting manner of its presentation. The count's mission and message are bound to have a profound influence in the promotion of universal peace. His remarks were received with intense enthusiasm by the members of Congress. He seems to be happy in his ministry of love.

To the counselors of peace is joy. (Prov. 12:20.)

An Old Fire-Horse

Michael Marcunus of Greenpoint Avenue fell from a trolley car and injured himself. The police officer called up Dr. Rosenberg, a surgeon of the Eastern District Hospital in Williamsburg, Brooklyn, who with John Dalton, the driver of an ambulance, went after the wounded man. The doctor went into the station, and the driver started to fasten his horse to a telephone pole. Just then a trolley car came along, whose gong the motorman was sounding in a vigorous manner, when the horse broke away from his master and ran off with the ambulance. He was an old fire-horse and thought that the sound was a fire gong, and that he had to put in his best speed to get to the conflagration in time. Not forgetting his old tricks, he ran first to this side and then to the other, avoiding trolley cars, carriages, wagons, automobiles and pedestrians, until he had raced two miles and a half at breakneck speed, and, failing to find the fire, he concluded to go back to the hospital, where the doctor and driver found him at the post as gentle as a lamb, himself and ambulance entirely unhurt. It was habit in the horse which made him do as he did; and habits in men drive them to their acts. Each movement of the body or act of the mind or soul calls for another just like it. Thoughts grow into deeds, deeds into habits, habits into character, and character into destiny. The apostle makes a declaration of this solemn law.

Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. (Gal. 6:7.)

Worth Many Times the Money

The books, Calendar and picture came yesterday, all in good order, and I wish to thank you for making it possible for people of limited means to receive so much for so little. There are lessons in some of those books that would well be worth the sum paid for all, to put in the hands of the youths of our land. Many thanks for the beautiful premiums.

Last Service Over Wrecked "Maine"

Building the Caissons Around the Wreck

Rear Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee

THERE took place in the harbor of Havana, Cuba, on February 15, a memorial service which attracted an unusual interest, as it may be the last which will be held on those now peaceful waters to pay tribute to the faithfulness of the sailors and marines who were killed by the explosion of the Maine thirteen years ago. The service was conducted under the auspices of the Havana Camp, United Spanish-American War Veterans. The Havana Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, participated in the ceremony, and about two thousand people looked on from the decks of steamers. This was the first time Cuba had shared officially in the anniversary ceremony. Vice-President Zayas made the principal address, and representatives of the Cuban army and navy and of the various government departments were present.

At sunrise the American flag was hoisted at half mast on the mainmast of the wreck and early in the day a vessel carrying veterans circled the Maine and placed wreaths upon the wreckage.

The service, which took place at nine o'clock, was opened by the reading of an ode and a selection by the Cuban Artillery Band. Then through the hush that attended the touching prayer of Bishop Albion Knight, through the rendering of Chopin's Funeral March and through the tributes, prayers and orations that composed the service, came the solemn booming of the minute-guns from Cabañas Fortress. The service closed with the last long dying notes of "Taps."

Dr. Damaso T. Lainé, in behalf of the Havana Camp, United Spanish War Veterans, said: "This evergreen is cast upon the waters over the bodies of the brave sailors and marines whose lives were sacrificed in the terrible explosion of 1898. It is emblematic of the undying love which a country owes its defenders and the affection which we as comrades feel for their memory." Then Clarence L. Marine, in casting white flowers upon the water, said: "This symbol of purity we offer in testimony of our comradely love and affection and as an emblem of the better life which has come to our comrades." On board the steam launch Gypsy were Daughters of the American Revolution, who literally covered the waters surrounding the wreck with flowers that rested on the placid water as if conscious of their mission. A bronze shield from the Spanish War Veterans was placed on the mast of the battleship by Colonel Gihon, and the Cuban gunboat Hatuey hoisted the American flag. Marines from the same vessel served as honor guards. The ritual of the United Spanish War Veterans, which formed part of the service, was conducted with great solemnity by the representatives of the Havana Camp of that organization.

In his prayer, Dr. L. S. Harvey, the chaplain, said: "Heavenly Father, our prayers ascend to thee, with whom there is no death. Soften our hearts that we may understand the celestial words, 'I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.' As comrade after comrade departs and we march on with broken ranks, help us to be faithful unto thee and to each other. We beseech thee to look in mercy on the widows, children and relatives of those martyred dead, and with thine own tenderness console and comfort those bereaved by the sad event which calls us here. Give them the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. Heavenly Father, bless and save our country with the freedom and peace of righteousness, and through thy great mercy may we all meet before thy throne in heaven, and to thy great name shall be praise forever and ever. Amen."

Vice-President Zayas was the last speaker. He paid glowing tribute to the dead of the United States warship and said that the memorial interested Cuba as much as citizens of the United States who came to give tribute to their heroes, while Cubans were there to show their reverence and gratitude. He said he was in Havana when the Maine was destroyed, saw the flash and associated it with his country's future. He said he did not think it was a treacherous hand which had committed the crime of blowing up the vessel, but rather believed it was one of those accidents, sealed by destiny, which sometimes change the history of nations.

The Close of the Memorial Service in Havana Harbor for the Dead of the Maine

This memorial service is looked upon as the last which will be held over the wreckage of the destroyed battleship. The United States government has undertaken the momentous task of exposing the tangled mass of wreckage which now obstructs Havana Harbor. A little over a year ago Rear-Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee, former commanding officer of the Maine, wrote on the subject of this proposed reinvestigation of the cause of the disaster: "Three methods of exposing the wreck have been proposed." The third is that of "building a coffer-dam around the wreck, and pumping out the contained water and mud, thereby exposing the vessel to full view and without the least disturbance of the parts. . . . It is hardly to be doubted that a suitable coffer-dam could be built."

This is the view that has been taken by the Navy Department, for the operations that are now being carried on are modeled after this method. The illustration at the top of the page shows the present state of the work with several of the individual caissons of the coffer-dam wall nearing completion.

The opinions of engineers differ largely as to the advisability of this procedure, for since it was first proposed much has been learned of the conditions at the bottom of the harbor. This has been found to consist of a peculiarly soft mud. The task of sinking caissons here in such a way that they will, when the enclosed space has been pumped dry, withstand the pressure of the water on the outside is conceded to be very difficult. Some who may be considered qualified to judge of this matter do not hesitate to say that they fear for the success of the venture. Under these circumstances its achievement will be a triumph for the engineers in charge of the work.

The Late Dr. A. H. Bradford

THE Rev. Dr. Amory H. Bradford, pastor emeritus of the First Congregational Church of Montclair, N. J., who has been in ill health for some time, died suddenly in that city on February 18. Dr. Bradford was one of the best known ministers in this country. Although repeatedly called to take the pastorate of various churches in England, where his sermons had become famous, he refused to leave the only charge he ever had, the church of which he was the pastor for forty years. He was born at Granby, Oswego County, N. Y., in 1846. He was graduated from Hamilton College in 1867, Andover Theological Seminary in 1870, and completed a post-graduate course at Oxford University in England. In 1891 he was a delegate to the International Congregationalist Convention held in London, and later a delegate to another convention in Japan. He was a most eloquent and convincing preacher, a graceful writer and a lovable and earnest pastor.

The Jerry McAuley of Honolulu

Phares W. Rider's Great Work Among the Slums of the "Paradise of the Pacific"

P. W. Rider

AN immigrant woman from Asiatic Russia landed at Honolulu. She was penniless and carried a baby in her arms, while two other small children clung to her skirts. It was early in the spring of 1910. About a thousand mujiks left their homes in Siberia and in Manchuria and went to Hawaii, where, they had been led to believe, high wages were paid on the sugar plantations.

The woman had joined the band of immigrants, hoping that she might better her lot by going to a strange country. She fell into the hands of the Federal immigration officers, who soon learned that she could not speak a word of English. They were about to send for an interpreter when the woman began to open a bundle of miscellaneous wearing apparel. Piece after piece was peeled off the roll of garments and in the middle she found a fragment of crumpled paper. Somewhere in the Orient a stranger, anticipating her difficulties, had given the woman a note which read: "If in distress when you arrive in Honolulu, go to P. W. Rider. He will see that you are taken care of."

That brief epistle gives us a partial introduction to Phares W. Rider. He is an interesting person. You do not stay in Honolulu more than ten minutes to find that out, for any resident of the city can tell you about the unofficial ruler of Kakaako, until very recent years probably the lowest slum in the world.

In the spring of 1899 Rider left Merced, Calif., and went to Honolulu. He was a carriage trimmer by trade, and he soon found employment in the Paradise of the Pacific. On a Sunday afternoon he took a walk through Kakaako, a small but populous district situated between the executive buildings and the beach, and separated from the rest of the city by an invisible though nevertheless real barrier.

Honolulu is a sort of half-way house for globe-trotting adventurers; a rendezvous for ne'er-do-wells, criminals and the destitute poor. On that Sunday afternoon Rider observed conditions which staggered him. Disorder and rowdyism were rampant. Even in daytime, women and children from elsewhere in the city did not dare go alone through Kakaako. The better class of citizens went about their daily tasks unmindful of what was going on in Kakaako. If somebody was killed the police took notice; if there was a riot, the police quelled it; but organized, persistent effort to preserve order in that district, there was none.

Phares W. Rider resolved to undertake a reform. He decided that only the Gospel could save the people and purify the district. He had had little or no experience in that kind of work, but he had courage enough to begin. For three years he worked at his trade six days in the week, and on Sundays he and his wife conducted religious meetings in the streets. Mrs. Rider sang and played a portable reed organ and her husband begged small crowds, mostly pagan, to accept the religion of Christ. Friends went to him and told him he had better quit, for he was not only wasting his time, but running the risk of being shot down or beaten by thugs. Frequently organized bands of rowdies overturned Mrs. Rider's organ and broke up the meetings. Rider never fought back. If he could not find a policeman, he and Mrs. Rider would move on to another street corner and start another meeting. Occasionally a threat of assassination was conveyed to Rider, but even that did not frighten this man who talked about the Christ.

Admiring Rider for his pluck, the late John Magoon, at that time owner of most of the "shacks" in Kakaako, gave him the use of a small room in a tenement. Here there was less disorder than at the street meetings, but occasionally the lights were put out and the meetings broken up in a fight. During all of this time Rider was accomplishing a little, but not much. The promise of personal salvation did not appeal strongly to the people. In 1902 he decided to change his tactics. John B. Atherton became interested in his work and furnished the money to build a commodious mission house to be called "The Kakaako Mission." Dying shortly afterwards, Atherton bequeathed to the mission an endowment sufficient to maintain it for many years. No longer compelled to work at his trade, Rider began to devote all his time to uplifting Kakaako. But he no longer depended solely upon preaching to accomplish the desired result. He began to visit the sick, feed the hungry, shelter the homeless. Kakaako Mission became a modern settlement.

Rider himself did most of the work, and is doing it at the present time, though he is never without plenty of assistance. Whenever a stranger moves into Kakaako, Rider makes his acquaintance. The newcomer, whether American or Fijian, is told that he is always welcome at the big square building in the centre of the district. Rider himself is a plain person, without affectation, and the people among whom he lives and works look upon him as their very good friend, rather than as some one hired by people in a higher walk of civilization to improve their uphappy conditions.

Rider organized a Sunday School, which has grown rapidly. He established a free milk dispensary to save babies that were dying almost daily from lack of wholesome nourishment. He organized a brass band and singing society. Kakaako Mission House was opened to a kindergarten, requiring five teachers. Uptown people became interested in the institution, and to-day Rider could get all the funds necessary to carry on the work, even if the Atherton endowment were cut off.

At the present time the Kakaako Sunday School has a membership of two hundred and fifty. It is probably the most cosmopolitan institution of its kind in the world: it represents thirty-two nationalities. There, as well as in all the city, five popular languages are spoken—English, Hawaiian, Japanese, Chinese and Portuguese. Religious sects are almost as numerous as nationalities. A Buddhist temple is situated just across the street from the Mission House, and until July, 1910, a saloon stood on a corner opposite. For thirteen years Rider fought the saloons of Kakaako and his efforts were finally crowned with victory.

And Kakaako is not so bad as it used to be. It has been getting better ever since a certain carriage trimmer came to town.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—TWENTY-SIX NEW YORK STATE legislators were brought face to face with several hundred suffragists and anti-suffragists on February 22 in the Assembly chamber at Albany, and the same old arguments for and against the "votes for women" amendment bill were presented. Out of consideration for the Assemblymen the suffragist leaders decided long ago not to try to gather a large crowd in Albany for the hearing of the bill before the joint Judiciary Committee this year. But despite there being no special train for them the eager yearners for the ballot flocked from all parts of the State. The anti-suffragists, one hundred strong, arrived by special train from New York and were joined by delegates from other cities. By three o'clock all the galleries were filled and the aisles packed. Senator Bayne announced that the suffragists and anti-suffragists would have one hour and a half each to present their arguments, including the summing up. When the arguments had been completed Senator Bayne stated that the measures would be taken up in secret session by the committees within a short time.

—RECENT INTIMATION from members of the House and Senate that the President would not stand by his statement that he would call an extra session if the reciprocity agreement was not put through brought the immediate response, through Senator Root, that not only would there be an extra session but that it would come almost at once after the end of this Congress. Monday, March 20, was the date tentatively set for its convening. It was thought possible that the session would be called immediately after the return of the President from Atlanta, but the indication is that he will allow another week in order that members may attend to personal affairs and incidentally afford the new Ways and Means Committee of the House an opportunity to decide upon its committee arrangements. Senator Root carried the word from the White House, where he had been to report to the President that the reciprocity agreement could not reach a vote at this session. The President is satisfied of the genuineness of public sentiment back of him in calling an extra session, not only to ratify the Canadian reciprocity treaty, but to carry out the idea of revision downward on the necessities of life.

—PRESIDENT TAFT recently sent to the Senate the new treaty with Japan, the negotiations for which have been occupying the attention of the State Department and the Japanese Embassy for the last two months or more. This treaty is but a temporary convention, providing for only the least important questions interesting the two nations. It will be replaced within a year by a permanent treaty. It was certain that Japan would desire a new treaty rather than a renewal of the old one because of one provision in it which is extremely distasteful to her. That provision is one which specifies that "the stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances, and regulations with regard to trade, the immigration of laborers, police, and public security which are in force or which may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries." A storm of protest throughout San Francisco and California has been engendered by these new treaty negotiations. The objection is based upon the absence of clauses definitely restricting Japanese immigration. The labor leaders of the State are indignant, the members of the legislature are aroused, and on every hand is heard criticism of the treaty.

—PREMIER ASQUITH received a tremendous ovation from his supporters in the House of Commons of Great Britain when the famous Veto bill, the measure designed to curtail the power of the Lords, was passed on its first reading by the government's full majority of 124. The Nationalists first rose in their places, cheering wildly and waving their hats. The Liberal members quickly emulated the Irish members' example. This exhibition of enthusiasm was repeated a few minutes later as the Prime Minister quietly left the scene of his victory in his initial action against the Lords. In introducing the bill the Prime Minister denounced the House of Lords for the rejection of the budget of 1909, characterizing their action as political suicide, and he concluded a long explanatory statement with the remark: "The government presents this bill as the first and most urgent step that it can take toward the attainment of perfection." The Unionist members cheered again and again when Mr. Balfour declared he would fight against a revolution on which the people had not been consulted, carried out not at the bidding of the real majority of the House but at the bidding of the Nationalist minority. The chief speakers after Mr. Balfour were the Right Hon. Sir Robert Bannatyne Finlay, the Unionist member for Edinburgh and St. Andrew's Universities, who roundly denounced the bill as a bad measure precluding all compromise, and the Right Hon. Joseph A. Pease, Liberal member for the Rotherham division of Yorks.

FIGHTING ISLAM IN EAST AFRICA

PORTUGAL has recently arrested the attention of the world. Her political, educational and religious conditions have become known more clearly than ever before. That there is a great and crying need for immediate occupation by those forces which tend to uplift the people, there is no question. The conditions existing there present to the Church a challenge. What is true of Portugal is true, but in a more striking way, of her African possessions, and in remembering the mother country, provinces in the Dark Continent should not be forgotten.

Portuguese East Africa presents to-day unparalleled opportunities for missionary work. There is not a centre that is adequately manned. The particular work referred to in this article has its headquarters at Inhambane, a small port situated on the tropic of Capricorn. Three missions are at work here: The Church of England, the Free Methodist Church of North America and the Methodist Episcopal. The parish extends from north to south for 500 miles and from east to west for 300 miles. There is a native population of 3,000,000, composed of three principal tribes—the Batswas, Batongas and Bachopis—and to meet the needs of these three million heathen there are fifteen white workers, or one missionary for every 200,000 people. The Laymen's Missionary Movement set a standard of one missionary for every 25,000 of the non-Christian world, which means that we should have in this field 120 missionaries, or eight times more than the present number. Let us not forget that one-fourth of the Mohammedan world is in Africa, or 57,500,000. They have taken some parts of Africa, because the Christian Church has not been fully alive to her responsibilities, opportunities and privileges. It is the work of the Church to keep them from taking any more of Africa.

With only fifteen missionaries on the field there is a great scope for work on the part of native evangelists and teachers. They are doing much to redeem this part of Africa from its awful heathenism and to keep Islam from entering and occupying the field.

Bishop Hartzell, Missionaries, and Native African Teachers at Inhambane

A sample of a monthly report of one of our pastor-teachers will give you an idea of the nature and the amount of work done by one of these men, who has not long been out of heathenism. This particular pastor has seventeen baptized members and forty-six on trial, where the latter will remain for at least three years. He has sixty scholars in his day school and sixty-seven in his Sunday School. The day school pupils are taught two hours of each day simple religious and secular studies and the scholars of the Sunday School study the International Sunday School Lesson. He conducts prayers morning and evening of each day. The heathen visitors for this month at these prayer services numbered 262. He preached twice each Sunday, at which times not only the native Christians are present, but also an average of sixty heathen at each service. In addition to this work he preached in forty-two heathen villages to 4,991 people. A conservative estimate for the month shows this man reached with the Gospel message 6,217 people. This man does his work for five dollars a month, which means that for a little less than one-twelfth of a cent per man he gave the Word of Life to his fellow-countrymen.

The great need of Inhambane is a picture of the needs of the entire possession of Portugal in East Africa. Lourenzo Marques is no doubt the best equipped centre and Inhambane comes next. Farther north, Bartholemeu Diaz, Beira, Chinde, Quilimane and Mozambique are untouched. There is not a single agency in these places for righteousness, either for the European or native populations.

Inhambane, E. A. WM. C. TERRILL.

THE KLOPSCH MEMORIAL

ALTHOUGH March 7, the great Rally Day towards which we have been all working for the Memorial to Dr. Klopsch, has passed, it is yet too early to announce the result of our efforts. It was agreed that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would contribute one-half of the money for all new yearly subscriptions mailed to us on or before that date, and of course some of those mailed March 7 will not have reached us by the time this paper is in the hands of its readers. In fact we shall not be able to announce the whole number of subscriptions received, or the whole amount of money resulting therefrom for the benefit of Mont-Lawn, until at least two weeks from this date, inasmuch as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press nearly two weeks in advance of the day on which it reaches its readers. This is not only because it takes us, even with our facilities, a goodly number of days to print over 300,000 copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, but because it also takes a number of days to bind and send those copies by mail so that they can reach our subscribers all over the country on the same day.

In the meantime, however, the plan for making Mont-Lawn a Memorial to Dr. Klopsch has met with the approval of probably every one of our friends, inasmuch as we have received letters of assurance from thousands who have been working for the Memorial. Of course it is but natural that most of our friends should wait until the last week before sending in the complete list of subscribers secured by them. This was not necessary, as we give credit to each one who sends us a subscriber.

Those who have kept track of the progress of the Klopsch Memorial week after week, must have noticed the growing list of subscribers we have published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The number we are able to announce in this issue, two weeks in advance of the closing date, is 2,289. But we have received so many assurances from friends who state that they have been working hard for us, that by the time this copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches you the list will be many times longer than these figures show.

Our friends seem to have considered it a distinctive honor to be able to have their names inscribed as Patrons upon the tablets which will be placed upon the walls of the Children's Temple at Mont-Lawn. And of course it is.

There have been many others, however, who, feeling themselves not able to send in ten subscriptions, have asked if there was not some way in which, with less than ten, they could become Patrons. But to allow them to become Patrons with less than ten would hardly be fair to those who have worked so hard to secure the whole number.

Still other friends have asked for an extension of time. One lady writes: "I have secured six subscriptions, but do not believe I can secure the other four before March 7. If I had more time to work I am sure I could secure a list of ten, and then, of course, I would be a Patron. Could you not extend the time in my case so that I could be sure of having my name in the roll of honor?"

Now, of course, we cannot all be Patrons, much as we would like to, yet here is a difficulty, and withal a reasonable request which we would like to consider.

Here is another letter which we have received. It reads as follows:

"I am very much interested in the plan for endowing Mont-Lawn, and I would like to have my name on the list of Patrons. However, I have been working to secure as much money as I can for the China Famine Fund. I have felt that I would rather contribute money to the starving people of China just now, and later on do as much as possible for the Endowment of Mont-Lawn. Could I not make an agreement with you to get you ten subscribers during the forthcoming summer, and so have my name among the list of Patrons, you on your part agreeing, of course, that half of the subscription money secured by me would go toward the Endowment Fund?"

Now, this friend has evidently felt that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been asking its readers for donations to the China Famine Fund, and for subscriptions at the same time. But this has been farthest from our purpose. We have said all along that we wanted your influence, and not your money. We have been asking our friends to help us extend the influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by getting us as many new subscriptions as possible, and in return we have promised to give half of the money so obtained to Mont-Lawn.

The returns up to date show that wonderful results have been obtained, and no doubt still more wonderful results could be obtained if we felt it would be fair to those who have succeeded in having their names placed upon the roll of Patrons, to extend the time limit beyond March 7. However, we do not think it would be right to do so. Those who have worked hard to get in their list of subscriptions by March 7, could hardly be blamed for feeling that they had expended needless energy upon a cause which at the last moment had been opened to any one whose zeal had been less ardent at a time when it was most called for.

As we stated before, it will be a couple of weeks before the full account of the Endowment Fund can be published. In the meantime, however, we take pleasure in printing a list of those who are entitled to be called Patrons up to date.

Patrons who have sent in ten or more subscriptions and whose names will be inscribed on tablets in the Children's Temple at Mont-Lawn:

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER

Serial Story by FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

CHAPTER XXIV—Continued

I CALLED loud to David; but he didn't turn around," chattered Jimmy, "but the lady, she looked t me, 'n' she said——"

He broke into a nervous laugh.

"It feels funny in my mouf," he omplained. "Will my new toof come n right away? Will it, Barb'ra?"

Jarvis drew a deep breath.

"If you'll put the boy to bed," he aid, "I'll—wait."

He sat down by the fire, a grim look f patient endurance on his face. In he room above he could hear the light read of Barbara's feet, and Jimmy's igh, childish treble upraised in exited speech.

"He's telling her all he knows," nuttered Jarvis, a sick distaste for his wn hateful task coming over him.

It was long before Barbara returned. Jarvis had decided that she vished him to go away without speakng, when he heard her re-enter the oom.

He sprang to his feet.

"Sit down, won't you? And let me xplain."

Barbara lifted her head proudly.

"I think I—understand," she said.

He gazed steadily at her, a frown of ain between his eyes.

"I have known for a long time," she went on, "that it was all a dreadful nistake; that he—did not love me."

"And you?" leaped from his guarded ips.

She looked away, a slow crimson tained her white cheeks.

"I could not bear it, if—" she murmured, and was silent.

"I hope you will believe me," gravely said Jarvis, "when I tell you that what took place was not intentional on Whitcomb's part. I know him, perhaps, better than you think."

A shadowy smile touched Barbara's tense mouth.

"Nothing — was ever — intentional with David," she said.

After a long silence she looked up at him, her eyes dry and bright.

"Will you tell me," she asked, "just what happened?"

He drew a hardly controlled breath.

"I will tell you what I know," he said reluctantly. But he seemed unable to go on with his shameful story in the light of her proud eyes.

"I already know," she said quietly, "that he abandoned Jimmy early in the afternoon, and that later he was seen with——"

"The woman was a waitress at the Barford Eagle," Jarvis admitted reluctantly. "She has attended Whitcomb at table during his stay there; and so, of course——"

"I know who the girl is," Barbara told him, in a low hurried voice.

"He met the young woman on the fair grounds quite by accident," Jarvis went on quickly. "You ought to believe that; and what followed was also, I am convinced, wholly unpremeditated."

"Well?" urged Barbara steadily.

Jarvis clenched his strong hands on his knees and bent forward to stare frowningly into the fire.

"Whitcomb backed his own horse heavily and won," he said slowly. "Shortly afterward an altercation arose between himself and—a young man who had previously been interested in the girl, Jennie Sawyer. This person, Bamber, became very much incensed, and——"

Jarvis' voice, which had been dry and caustic, as if he were reviewing unsavory circumstantial evidence, suddenly broke.

"Barbara!" he cried. "My poor girl, must you hear it all?"

"Go on," she said quietly. "Some one will have to tell me. I—would rather hear it from—you."

The sweat of agony glistened on Jarvis' forehead.

"If I must," he said hoarsely; "it was an accident, Barbara. It would never have happened if David had not been excited, wild, with success; Bamber attacked him first, without due provocation, it would seem, and Whitcomb retaliated—struck him, in self-defense."

Barbara heard his voice as if from a great distance. She seemed to herself to be drifting away on a sea of strange dreams. Then she roused suddenly to find herself supported by Jarvis' arm. He was holding a cup of water to her lips. She sat up, her face white and wan, her hands clutching the arms of her chair.

"You were saying——" she murmured.

"I ought to have told you in the beginning," he reproached himself, "Bamber was not killed by the blow; but he fell and struck his head against the edge of a stall."

"And David?" she breathed.

"The girl dragged him away from the accident, and he—escaped. You know he had a fast horse."

She was looking at him dizzily through a mist of pain.

"The girl went with him," he said, reading aright the question in her eyes. "There was talk of a pursuit, of an arrest. But unless Bamber should—— I think I may assure you that David will not be molested."

He did not tell her that he had used all the official power at his command to shield the fugitives from the fury of the crowd; and further that the injured man had already received the best medical attention procurable in the county. Barbara learned these things long, long afterward, when the pain of that hour had been assuaged.

It was more than three months afterward, and the first snow was flying past the windows in big, feathery flakes, when a letter came to Barbara from a town in the Far West. It was from David, she saw, with a painful throb of surprise, and postponed the reading of it for a difficult hour, during which she reviewed once more and for the last time all the futile anguish and passion of a love that had bruised and hurt her from its beginning. Then she opened the letter with fingers that trembled not at all.

"Dear Barbara," he wrote, "I suppose by this time you have set me down as a poor skate of a fellow. It probably hasn't occurred to you that it is entirely your own fault, that you will never see me again. If you had gone with me to the fair that day, as I wanted you to do, I should not have met Jennie, nor gotten into a squabble with that unutterable cad, Bamber. I hear he got off with nothing worse than a crack in his foolish skull to remind him what it is like to try conclusions with a gentleman.

"I want to tell you, Barbara, that I've married Jennie, and, so far, neither of us is sorry. She is a dear little wife, sweet-tempered, and entirely devoted to your humble servant. And I don't find myself so deucedly uncomfortable in her company as you used to make me feel sometimes. Let me tell you, Barbara, that you'll never

A Splendid Opportunity for "LIVE WIRES"

to Become Local Agents for the Oliver Typewriter

Our present force of over 15,000 agents must be heavily reinforced immediately in order to take care of the tremendous increase in business which the popularity of the Oliver Typewriter has created.

We want an agent at every point in the United States and Canada, where a post office is located—a man on the ground—to represent the Oliver Typewriter and give practical demonstration of its merits to prospective purchasers. Such agents, whether devoting all their time to the work or making it merely a side line in connection with their regular business, can easily make the Oliver Typewriter agency an important source of income.

Resident Agents in Towns and Villages

The Oliver Typewriter sells just as readily in the villages as in the larger cities. The small town tradesman, the teacher, the local real estate and insurance agent, the minister, the doctor, the lawyer succeed well as local agents. No previous experience necessary. Every local agent for the Oliver Typewriter receives a Free Scholarship in the Oliver School of Practical Salesmanship.

Add to Your Present Income by Work in Spare Time

You can act as Resident Agent for the Oliver Typewriter without interfering in any way with your present occupation. You can give as much time to the agency as you choose. The more agency work you do, the larger will be your income.

Resident Agents who demonstrate exceptional sales ability will be given opportunities of advancement to important positions in the Oliver Sales Organization.

The OLIVER Typewriter

The Standard Visible Writer

touches the highest point of efficiency yet reached in mechanical writing. It leads in sales all over the world by giving unparalleled service.

No other typewriter has ever been able to overtake its speed. With several hundred less parts than other standard typewriters, it has the advantage of startling simplicity, and almost unlimited endurance. It writes in sight. It rules horizontal or perpendicular lines. It makes as high as twenty clear carbon copies at a time. It writes on any form, from a postage stamp to the widest insurance policy.

The catalog, sent free on request, explains in detail all its unique advantages, and the many brilliant innovations that have made it supreme in sales.

You Can Buy—and Sell—the OLIVER for 17-Cents-a-Day!

The Oliver Typewriter—the $100 machine—the very latest model—is now offered to the public on the popular selling plan of "Seventeen-Cents-a-Day." Oliver agents, in addition to other advantages, can buy the Oliver and sell the Oliver on these astonishing terms.

The "Seventeen-Cents-a-Day" Plan is a wonderful aid to our agents.

For anybody and everybody can easily pay Seventeen-Cents-a-Day!

The Cozy Corner

MY GARDEN

I had a Garden when a child;
I kept it all in order:
'Twas full of flowers as it could be,
And gillyflowers its border.

Soon as came the pleasant Spring
The singing birds built in it;
The Blackbird and the Throstle-cock,
The Woodlark and the Linnet.

And all among my flowers I walked
Like a miser 'mid his treasure,
For that pleasant plot of garden ground
Was a world of endless pleasure.

GARDENS ALMOST ANYWHERE

SO MANY letters have come from Cozy Corner boys and girls asking about the planting out of gardens that we have decided to give some general rules and a few definite plans for gardening in a small way, and to offer a special extra $5 cash prize and five supplementary prizes of $1 each, in order of merit, to boys and girls sending in the best photographs of their own gardens by the first week in July.

General Rules

TO SUCCEED with a flower garden you must be in earnest about it; love each plant for its own self and do your best to make every one thrive and bloom.

Keep your flower-bed free from weeds in the beginning while the plants are little and you will not be much bothered with weeds later on. Weeds are greedy and use up the richness of the soil. Be sure to thin out all young plants. This will make the ones you keep strong and hardy.

Flowers are appreciative little folk; they will do a great deal in return for your patience and will surprise you constantly with their mysterious wonderful ways and will keep you busy being happy over them.

Plan it right and your garden will be bright with blossoms from May until November.

If you have never had a garden before, plan for a small one; 8 x 12 feet is a good-sized flower garden.

To prepare the ground: Spade up the earth to the depth of a foot with rich stable manure and a good sprinkling of sand. Mix it well. If you prepare the soil thoroughly in the beginning it will save you much work later on.

My Flower Garden in Mid-Summer

Just after the frost was out of the ground I planted double asters, zinnias, poppies, pansies, nasturtiums, candy-tuft and mignonette. I gathered sweet bouquets in it every other day from June until October and I kept my garden weeded and watered. I feel now that I shall never be another summer without a garden.

Gardens, Gardens Everywhere

AGAINST the back fence, along the lines of the barns and out-buildings, in fence corners, prepare a strip of earth 2½ feet wide and plant hardy shrubs at the back. Then set among the shrubs last year's seedlings of double hollyhocks and rudbeckia (golden glow), about 16 inches to the front, sew peonies, phlox, bleeding heart. To the front again set lily-of-the-valley bulbs.

Along the line that joins your neighbor's lawn, try planting delphinums (the blue and white varieties are hardiest) and iris bulbs (common flag variety), columbine, orange tiger lilies and funkias. Border the bed with moss pinks and small native asters. This will make a beautiful mass of color all through the summer, and far into the autumn.

For beds in the centre of the lawn, set tall-growing plants, such as scarlet sage, plumed coxcomb, tall fox-glove in the centre, then amaranthus, zinnia, dahlia, calliopsis, petunia, phlox and balsam. Let the borders be dwarf nasturtiums, pansies, dianthus, low-growing marguerites and candy-tuft.

Along wire fences and hedges, plant sweet peas, canary-bird vine, morning-glories or Mexican potato.

In Front of the Veranda

ALONG the veranda bed, make a border of low-growing daisies and a narrow line of pansies next to them. Back of the pansies plant mignonette and scatter poppy seeds plentifully. Poppies are light and do not draw the ground. You will be delighted all summer with the bright poppies peeping here and there among the other flowers. I should plant some fast-growing vine nearest the veranda to grow up as a background to your porch garden.

Gardening Boys Will Like

BOYS usually like to specialize. It is a very good plan to give what time you have for gardening to developing a certain kind of rose, chrysanthemum, pansy, dahlia, carnation or any flower that especially appeals to you. Some boys have made great successes of fern gardens. Ferns are always interesting to garden-makers. One of their chief charms is the rapidity with which most varieties develop. Two boys whom I know have within two years collected and developed 170 varieties of ferns in what they call their Fern Grotto, in the valley of Virginia. They make it pay, for there is a very good market for such ferns as they raise.

Gardening for Little Folk

IF ALL the garden space has already been claimed and staked off by the older brothers and sisters, then choose some little bit of ground off in the sunny corner of the meadow, or down by the spring or the old well, in which to plant some flowers and care for them. Ask mama for some bachelor buttons and petunia seeds, some marigolds, clarkia and sweet alyssum. You will be surprised what a pretty bunch of blossom you will have. The flowers will grow quickly and it will be such fun to watch the bees and the humming-birds among them in mid-summer.

Nasturtiums, zinnias, Canterbury bells, lady slippers, four-o'clocks, all of these grow so easily, and will repay you a hundred times over for ever so little care and sunshine.

A Little Round Garden

IN THE outside circle, set pansies and candy-tuft. The little white feathery bloom of the candy-tuft is especially lovely growing along with the bright-colored pansies. In the second circle plant varicolored low-growing asters; in the third, mignonette and blue bells; in the very centre put tiny moss pinks. This truly is a love of a garden, for it is the plan of my own first garden when I was a little girl, so I know.

Be sure to have some wild flowers in your garden. Go to the woods early, carefully take up roots and all, violets, anemones, jack-in-the-pulpit, may-apple, purple asters, ferns. Wild flowers are especially fond of leaf-mould, so fill your wild flower baskets with it and put plenty of it in your garden. The little stranger flowers will feel at home then in their new world.

If there are any bare, unsightly places, an old fence corner, for instance, a heap of stones, an abandoned pump, or a rubbish heap, take the trouble to plant out a few morning-glory seeds near by, madeira vine, scarlet runner, moon-flower, or honeysuckle. You will be delighted with the pretty bunch of bright-colored blossoms in place of an ugly scar.

Remember, all bright-colored flowers are more effective against the background of shrubs.

Our Good-Night Verse: I am the Lord, I change not, my presence shall go with thee and I will give thee rest.

Mellin's Food

will

Solve Your Problem

Your baby is a new problem in infant feeding. He is individual in his requirements. If he is to develop as he should he must have a food that not only contains all the elements required for his proper nourishment but one that may be readily adapted to his needs.

Mellin's Food is such a food.

Mellin's Food is to be used with fresh cow's milk. By simply varying the proportions of Mellin's Food, milk and water, according to our carefully prepared directions, you can exactly meet the individual needs of your baby.

Why then should your baby worry along on a food that is not suited to him?

Be fair with your baby; start him on Mellin's Food —today.

We have a very helpful book, "The Care and Feeding of Infants." We shall be glad to send it to you, together with a Trial Size bottle of Mellin's Food, if you will write us.

How Is Your Own Church?

Still Another Instalment of Letters in this Remarkable Discussion

IT IS refreshing to note the frankness and the kindly Christian spirit with which our readers continue to write in response to the invitation to church members to discuss conditions as they exist to-day in city and country churches. We give several letters below, but have a number in reserve, to be printed when space permits.

Causes of a Church's Decline

The old-time pastoral visits among the flock and sharing in their joys and sorrows and speaking a word of warning or of sympathy, are things of the past. One good brother in another church said: "My wife and I have been here six years, and not one of our church people has ever put a foot in our house." One in my own church said: "My wife lay sick three months and only two of our church people came to see her." I know this brother was a regular attendant at church and Sunday School. A poor woman told me: "We sent our little child to Sunday School. We gave her a penny every Sunday and thought we were doing well, but her teacher said to her: 'You bring a quarter next time.'" The idea seems not so much the saving of souls as making a financial success.

Few are joining our church, and they come from parents who have long been in the service. There is a great gulf being made between the church and the common people, and many of the more wealthy who are not religiously inclined. We have nice oratory and lectures, but no religious spirit in it. Our poor, sick and cast-outs are left to the care of secret societies and charitable associations.

Chickasha, Okla. MEMBER.

A Vigorous Church

I am a Sunday School superintendent in a Southern M. E. church. My church is gaining constantly along the lines which go to make a strong, vigorous, healthy, effective church; the membership has increased twenty-five per cent. in the last two years. We have an "all-round pastor," a good preacher, who believes the Bible and preaches it and lives what he preaches, and who is always busy along some line of useful work. We are making good progress spiritually, evidenced by the fact that the church services are well attended. The Sunday School and prayer meeting are live and interesting, and each year we have deep, heartfelt, old-time Methodist revivals.

Monroe, N. C. R. B. CUTHBERTON.

Spirituality Lacking

There are in the village of Ossining a Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, and two Episcopal churches, besides a Baptist and Methodist church for the colored people, and one Catholic church. There are about 600 members in the Presbyterian church, of which I am a member. We have a good pastor, who preaches the Gospel with earnestness. As a general thing on Sunday mornings there is a full attendance; but in the evening very few are out. Of all the membership, fifty on the average attend the Wednesday night prayer meetings. About five years ago, we had an adult Bible class with an average of twenty-five men, all very much interested in Bible study. Our leader resigned and the class disbanded. It seems nowadays church people think if they go to church once in the day, they have a right to seek their own pleasure the remainder of the day. A few years ago, the week of prayer in January was observed and many souls were saved as a result and joined the churches; now nothing of an evangelistic nature is attempted. There are a large number of children who attend the Sunday School. There is also a Christian Endeavor Society, but few members. The Baptist church here which used to be filled each service, now has no stated pastor, but depends on supplied preachers. The Methodist church has an active, earnest preacher, but they are constantly having receptions, sociables and concerts for the raising of money. When everything is taken into consideration, there seems to be a great lack of spirituality among the churches.

Ossining, N. Y. ROBERT L. PALMER.

Prayer this Church's Weapon

Our church is gaining in membership. There is at least a sincere effort to preach the Gospel faithfully. Spiritual progress is rather slow, but seems to be in the right direction. We have the inspiration of some who during the last year have "turned from the power of Satan unto God," working with us to help others also. A considerable number of young people have begun the "new life" during the past year. Some who have started in God's service have turned back; the alcohol and tobacco habits seem to have caused the older ones to backslide, and the dance and other worldly pleasures beguile those who are younger. We lose many every year by removals, most of them going to larger places; but after all, the church has gained in membership and influence on the community. The key to such success as we have had, has been believing and sincere prayer on the part of Christians of various denominations who work in our church. We belong to the Methodist Episcopal denomination; but the members of four or five other churches are working with us. READER.

Allentown, Ky.

Steadily Gaining Ground

The Hebron Evangelical Lutheran church is gaining in membership steadily every year. The Gospel is regularly and faithfully preached. The church is making spiritual progress, through the combined efforts made by the faithful and prayerful members. We are contributing more to the cause than at any time since erection, January 21, 1854. MRS. WM. G. GRAVES.

Bullettsville, Ky.

Good Church but Small Progress

I am a member of the First Reformed church here. Our pastor gives excellent sermons. We find, however, in common with most other churches, that it is very hard to hold the interest of the rising generation, and this I have attributed to the fact that the church seems to be very far behind in its grasp of the principles which it is trying to teach.

Passaic, N. J. JAMES S. ALDEN.

A Church of Spiritual Growth

In real spiritual life and activities our church is improving all the while. We have a pastor who is faithful, efficient, conscientious and very much alive spiritually. He neglects no part of the church work. He has the hearts of the people. He preaches a plain, simple, practical Gospel. In five and one-half years he has trebled the membership and has had the church property greatly improved. He tells his people they are slack in real earnest prayer, appealing to the Lord for greater blessing upon our work. As to the congregation, we have 240 members enrolled; 300 in the Sunday School, besides those in the Home Department. We have a good morning attendance at services. It is a united congregation, a harmonious, working membership. The prayer meeting is a lively one, far better attended than the average. There are evangelistic services in prospect, but these are the fruitage of the pastor's and the members' work throughout the year. There are other departments, missionary and the like, visiting committees, boys' and girls' clubs, etc. Ten times the church work is done now that was done years ago, and our church is in better spiritual condition than it ever was before.

Spokane, Wash. DANIEL P. GROSSCUP.

An Unexpected Awakening

Our little church is situated among the hills in the rural district of Bradford Centre, Melvin Mills, N. H., organized in 1803. For many years this has been a flourishing Congregational church, but for the past twelve years not a member has been added. The old ones passing away only a small remnant remained. The few left felt we were sinking out of sight. We had preaching a part of the year, generally from May until January. Meantime we did not cease to pray and keep the church doors open. All at once nine in different parts of the parish came forward with a desire to confess Christ and become members. In September last they were taken into the church. Who can say that God was not in the work? MRS. P. B. CRAIG.

Melvin Mills, N. H.

Real Church Progress in Nova Scotia

Pictou County and its towns of Pictou, New Glasgow, Westville and Stellarton and other towns are largely Presbyterian, though there are many others as well, besides the Episcopalian, Methodist, Baptist, and Roman Catholic Churches. I have had a fair knowledge of these churches for the last fifty years, and I may confidently state that there is a vast improvement in every respect. The material, the social and moral work of the several churches and associations, are not only better, but the spiritual ideals of both clergy and laity have been climbing up against all odds, so that we have a more significant meaning of Christianity than in the times of yore. The Sunday School and complementary Mission spirit have been enlightened and enlivened, so that all of us realize that the whole world must be brought into the kingdom of heaven—that we cannot afford to delay this, the most important of all issues. Men of means, and poor men, and all that are included between these extremes, are now evidently competing and co-operating in the glorious service of Jesus Christ.

Pictou, N. S. JOHN MCKAY.

OUR COMFORT CORNER

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A Needless Burden

FAR too many grown people suffer from youth to age from a burden of constraint and awkwardness in society. They are diffident in the presence of strangers and very much afraid that they will not make a good impression if they venture away from the shelter of their own home. Bashfulness is a burden hard to bear. It has its origin in self-consciousness, in anxiety about the impression we are making, and in a fear that we may not say the right word or do the right thing in the proper place. Babies are seldom self-conscious. In the first year of its life an infant looks out on the surrounding world with eyes utterly undismayed, and as Emerson has pithily said: "The baby's hands pull the hair of laureled heads."

Unfortunately, parents early begin the work of teaching children to be conscious of themselves. As soon as the little one begins to toddle about on its tiny feet, to talk in its pretty broken speech, and to manifest pleasure or dislike, father and mother call attention to everything the child does. Before long very small children find out that they are on the stage and that they have parts to play. If they are naturally bold and forward they enjoy the little drama in which they act, and lose no opportunity to display all that they know.

"When are you going to talk about me?" inquired a child of five, after vainly endeavoring to attract the notice of her mother's visitors. She was accustomed to be talked about and felt neglected when the visitors passed her over.

IF children are naturally modest and shy, or if they are very sensitive, this premature notice results in early making them too retiring. In any case it does harm whatever the childish temperament happen to be.

A second fatal error made by parents, one that inevitably binds fetters around them that in future will be chains hard to break, is in reproving children in company. No matter what a little culprit may do, rebukes and punishments should be deferred until there can be privacy. If a child must leave the room in consequence of wrongdoing, a mother should manage tactfully to send the delinquent away, without drawing upon the small head the amazed or sympathetic looks of every one present. No one enjoys the position of witness when a child is reproved or disciplined. The habit of disciplining children in public is far more general and much more cruel than parents imagine. It almost certainly follows that children thus reproved become diffident and awkward.

ATTENTION should not be focused on a child's defects or disfigurements. If a boy or girl has grown rapidly or is conspicuously undersized there is no occasion for telling the neighbors anything on the subject. If a child comes in with torn clothing or muddy feet, that, too, should be passed over in silence. Children should exist in a tranquil and happy background during the first ten years of life. They acquire so much through imitation and learn so readily by example, that precept upon precept and line upon line are always supplemented and aided by the personality of their parents.

Why should we not take pains to keep childhood free and sunny?

A Wife's Embarrassment

"WHAT would you do," inquired a friend, "if, being a Christian woman, you were married to a man who had no respect for religion, and not only neglected everything connected with it, but made your own path difficult? For example," she went on, "I have a neighbor who tries to bring her children up to love and serve the Lord. When she asks a blessing at the table her husband unfolds the newspaper and reads it without the courtesy of attention to her, and certainly with irreverence to the Lord. He whistles and sings and tramps noisily about the house when she is reading the Bible, and hearing her little children say their prayers. Although he possesses horses and a comfortable carriage there is always a reason why she cannot ride on Sunday, and so in order to go to church, she and the children are obliged to take a weary walk over a rough road for nearly two miles. What do you think will be the end of this?"

"Evidently," said the one addressed, "that husband needs very much to be prayed for. He cannot really love his wife and children as he ought or he would not put stumbling-blocks in their path in the way he does. Yet hard as his heart may be, God's spirit can touch him. The wife should persevere, doing the best that she can in humble faith, saying to herself every day, 'God will help me.'"

In a similar case of which I have heard, a mother's consistent life and true consecration were rewarded by the coming into the church of her six children as they reached maturity, and before his death her husband also was converted and confessed Christ.

The Advice of Experience

A YOUNG girl, who was accustomed to express herself on most occasions with unnecessary vehemence, was talking one morning with her great-aunt, who had passed her ninetieth year. The keen old eyes had seen much in their day, and could still flash with fun and help to point the sharpness of a repartee.

"You would hardly think," said the old gentlewoman, "that I was once as emphatic as you are, my dear, in contradiction of anything that I did not approve. I learned in the course of time a bit of wisdom that I recommend to you. One does not always have to express an opinion or to insist on saying the last word. Silence does not always mean consent. There are times when it is much better to let a subject drop than to keep on talking. Somebody has to stop, and if the thing is of no consequence, why should it not be one as well as another? It is really not worth while to talk in italics."

When the Birds Come Back

LET the winter be ever so long, ever so inclement, ever so cold, there comes a day when we wake in the morning and find that spring has arrived. Here she is with her magic wand and lo, the green grass appears, the flowers bloom, the trees are in leaf, and the birds come back. The dear little song-sparrow, the brave bluebird, the cheery robin, and all the glad host of little friends whose flitting wings, joyous love-making, and pretty nest-building add bliss to life, are within our sight and hearing again. How sweet are their songs!

Robert Browning, in Italy, longed to be in England when the spring came back. If any of us wandering away from home yearn for the old familar lane, highway and field, with a longing that tugs at the heart, it is sure to be in the spring. When the birds come back we are conscious of a new thrill and a new ecstasy. Those of us who love them have taken pains to give them food during the stormy weather, if they have chosen to winter in the North, but the joyous migratory host who come flying back with the spring earn their own living. Let us grudge them nothing of our store of fruit and grain by and by. They are the farmer's best allies, and our homes would be robbed of a great charm were the birds to stay away from us. What a shame it is that they are ever killed for brutal purposes of commerce, slaughtered for the table, or done to death for the adornment of women's hats!

Change of Work

NOTHING is less satisfactory to one of active temperament than to sit down with folded hands for the sake of resting. Equally tedious is a walk taken merely for exercise without an objective point. The doctor may tell a woman that she is overworked, and that she must drop her tasks and rest every afternoon. The same good adviser may enjoin upon her the necessity of a daily walk. She may follow his counsel in both cases and be little improved. What she really needs is rest through change of occupation, and exercise with an object in view that repays the effort. Try the plan of doing a different kind of work in successive periods of the day, and of taking indoor and outdoor exercise that serves two purposes instead of one.

Formal Receptions

AT a formal afternoon tea a table may be set in the dining-room with tea at one end and coffee or chocolate at the other. Friends of the hostess will be asked to assist her by pouring. At a large formal reception, waiters may be engaged to serve the refreshments. Usually a white-capped and aproned maid or the sons and daughters of the home will pass the refreshments. These are usually limited to sandwiches delicately made, to cakes and bon-bons, although a hostess who desires to do so may serve salad, sherbet, and ice cream. The simpler menu is sufficient.

When afternoon tea is daily served as part of the home routine, the intimate friends of a family are aware that if they happen to drop in between four and five they will find a cup of tea ready and waiting as a matter of course. We are so much by way of losing the sweetness of informal hospitality in the dull routine of our lives, that we ought not to forego the privilege of thus wooing it back and keeping it among our blessings.

Meeting Misfortune

AMORE legitimate reason for worry is anxiety about our loved ones. If a dear one is meeting with misfortune, is the victim of temptation, is in a false position, is ill-started in life, or has incurred trouble of any sort, it is hard for the loving to stand by and not worry. Here, too, we should erect a breakwater against worry. Let us invoke the aid of Jesus Christ, casting our care upon him. We shall realize that he cares for us.

The Sermon on the Mount should be read from beginning to end several times a week by the Christian who is tempted to worry. It will prove a better panacea with its heavenly consolation than all the New Thought books in the world.

Next to the strength and comfort which arm us against worry by the aid of religion, let us not despise good wholesome fun. Most of us are much too serious. We go about with solemn faces. We are impatient with the gleeful laughter of children, and forget that "a merry heart doeth good like a medicine."

The Best of All Home Papers

I received the Red Letter Bible and I am more than pleased with it. I hope the time will come when your splendid paper will be in every home, for I know of no other paper that is so good for a home paper as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I should not know how to get along without it. T. W. T.

HONEST CONFESSION

A Doctor's Talk on Food.

There are no fairer set of men on earth than the doctors, and when they find they have been in error they are usually apt to make honest and manly admission of the fact.

A case in point is that of a practitioner, one of the good old school, who lives in Texas. His plain, unvarnished tale needs no dressing up:

"I had always had an intense prejudice, which I can now see was unwarrantable and unreasonable, against all muchly advertised foods. Hence, I never read a line of the many 'ads' of Grape-Nuts, nor tested the food till last winter.

"While in Corpus Christi for my health, and visiting my youngest son, who has four of the ruddiest, healthiest little boys I ever saw, I ate my first dish of Grape-Nuts food for supper with my little grandsons.

"I became exceedingly found of it and have eaten a package of it every week since, and find it a delicious, refreshing and strengthening food, leaving no ill effects whatever, causing no eructations (with which I was formerly much troubled), no sense of fullness, nausea, nor distress of stomach in any way.

"There is no other food that agrees with me so well, or sits as lightly or pleasantly upon my stomach as this does.

"I am stronger and more active since I began the use of Grape-Nuts than I have been for 10 years, and am no longer troubled with nausea and indigestion." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Questions and Answers

R. L. C., Culloden, W. Va. Please explain I. Cor. 7: 9, 36, 37.

In the revised version, which is in many instances the clearer translation, I. Cor. 9 reads: "But if they have not continency," etc. This makes the remainder of the verse clear. In verses 36, 37 and 38, in the revised version, we find the word "daughter" appearing in each case after the word virgin. Verse 36 might be liberally translated as follows: "If any man believe that he is acting unfairly or harshly toward his daughter who is of a marriageable age, by not allowing her to marry, and if he think it wise, let him consent."

L. J. B., Creston, Ia. What is the attitude of the various States on the liquor question? Is prohibition gaining or losing?

The fact that half the people of the country are living in territory in which the liquor traffic has been forbidden by law tells eloquently that the drink traffic is being fought in dead earnest. Twenty-five of the thirty millions of people of the Southern States have abolished the saloon either by local option or by State prohibitory law. The following States are prohibition: Alabama, Georgia, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma and Tennessee. In about twenty-four States there is local option. There is no doubt that the good work of putting down the liquor traffic is making headway, and it is to be hoped that before another generation the saloon will have no place in our enlightened Christian American civilization.

M. H. D., Lima, O. In Elijah's victory over the prophets of Baal, where did the twelve barrels of water come from that are mentioned in I. Kings 18: 33-38?

Travelers who have visited the traditional site of this scene on Carmel, tell us that 250 feet below the altar plateau, there is a perennial fountain from which even in seasons of drought Elijah and his followers could have procured the water.

K. G. T., Elmira. What have been the most destructive fires in the world's history?

In 64 A.D. Rome burned eight days and almost all the city was destroyed. In 1088, 1212, 1666 and 1794 there were fierce conflagrations in London, each time extending over square miles of territory, destroying millions in property and sacrificing thousands of human lives. In 1812 Moscow was fired and burned from September 14 to 20 with a loss in property of 150 million dollars. On December 16, 1835, fire destroyed fifteen million dollars' worth of property in New York and again in 1845 seven and one-half millions. Hamburg was almost destroyed in 1842; a fire raged for three days involving a loss of thirty-five million dollars. Tooley Street in London burned from June 22 to July 22, 1861, and twelve millions in dollars were lost. The Communists set fire at Paris in 1871 and destroyed over $150,000,000 in property. In the same year Chicago burned two days, the fire covering an area of 2,124 acres and destroying over $200,000,000 of property. In 1872 Boston had a fire loss of $75,000,000. In 1903 Baltimore suffered a loss of $10,000,000.

Subscriber, Charleston, W. Va. Please explain I. Cor. 5: 5.

This was advice how to deal with persistent sinners, whose determined adherence to evil courses brought the Church to shame. They were to be excluded from the congregation, shunned and avoided. "Delivered to Satan" means the complete withdrawal of all spiritual relations and leaving them to the consequences of their own evil courses. It was designed as a severe measure of discipline to bring them to their senses.

Subscriber, Blue Mountain, Miss. Is there on record a case of a fixed star having disappeared from the heavens within the last century?

Yes; several stars have disappeared. Among the most noted are the following: On May 12, 1866, a star of the second magnitude, in Corona Borealis, suddenly disappeared and has not since been seen. Ten years later, in November, 1876, a star of the third magnitude in the constellation Cygnus passed from the sky and has not since been visible even through the most modern telescopes. Another star visible to the naked eye, in the constellation Auriga, passed from sight on February 1, 1892, reappeared in July, 1893, then passed again from sight and has not since been seen. The explanations of these phenomena may be found in World Making, by Dr. Leland, professor of astronomy, Seabreeze, Fla.

Mrs. N. M. H., Charlestown, Mass. Will you kindly tell me the difference between the Pilgrims and Puritans?

The Puritans were a party which had its rise in England in Queen Elizabeth's time and which held that the English Reformation had not gone far enough in its separation from the Roman Church, but that there were many ceremonies and forms still retained in the worship, which was too suggestive of the papacy. Some of them taught that the only right form of church government was that laid down in the New Testament, and that the civil authorities had no right to interfere in church affairs. This view was repugnant to the government, which set about to suppress its expounders, whereupon they formed a Separatist or Independent party, with the Congregational system as a basis. This party was dealt with so severely that many of its members left England, and went to Holland. In 1620 a number of the Separatists embarked on the Mayflower and came to Plymouth in New England. These are known in history as the Pilgrim Fathers. Other English Puritans came over eight years later and settled in Boston and Salem. They called themselves the "true Puritans." All are now known under the one generic name "Puritans."

M. G., Arlington, Pa. Please explain Heb. 2: 14-17.

Paul was here explaining that Jesus could only have made the atonement by taking upon himself the nature and form of man. As God, he could not have undergone death; nor could he have accomplished his ordained mission in any other capacity than he assumed.

P. D., Glendale, Calif. What is the present attitude of the Mormon Church towards polygamy?

In 1890 the then president of the Mormon Church, Wilford Woodrow, issued a manifesto against polygamy. The Mormons are anxious to make the outside world believe that plural marriage has been discontinued since that date, but there is little doubt that polygamy is still secretly practised among them. In fact the Salt Lake Tribune, one of the ablest papers in the West and inimical to the spread of Mormonism, has undeniably proven that plural marriage still prevails. Within the past two years this paper has published records of 224 polygamous marriages and the Mormon Church has made no attempt to deny the statements. It is almost safe to assert that for every polygamous marriage thus made public ten at least have taken place in secret; for the Mormon Church may be regarded as a great secret society anxious to keep its workings from the public. Basing our assertion on facts, we would say that since the so-called anti-polygamous manifesto in 1890 there have been probably as many as 2,000 polygamous marriages among the Mormons.

C. W. B., Burbank, O. Is it still possible to secure land on the homestead plan either in the United States or Canada?

Yes; land may be secured in both countries, though there is probably a better selection in Canada. For detailed information, address United States Land Office, Washington, D. C., and the Crown Land Office, Ottawa, Can.

Mrs. M. E. W., Wilbur, Ore. Who are the Plymouth Brethren?

The Plymouth Brethren originated in Ireland in 1827. Edward Cronin left the Catholic Church and every Sunday morning gathered a number of sympathiers to his house in Dublin for the purpose of "breaking bread." Soon there was a large following, among them Rev. J. N. Darby, who entered into the cause with much spirit and went to Paris, Cambridge and Oxford to promulgate the doctrines and finally came to Plymouth, where he established a congregation which became known as "the Brethren" there, but in other places as the "Plymouth Brethren." The characteristic of this school is an endeavor in view of divided Christendom to keep the unity of the Spirit. They are sometimes called Darbyites.

Mrs. J. M. H., Mount Vernon, Ia. Is it not wrong to teach children that there is a Santa Claus?

The whole matter of allowing children to read fairy stories has been much discussed. The tradition of Santa Claus is a species of fairy story and it has been called, on that account, a foolish and wrong one to tell to children. But it is a tradition that appeals strongly to the childish imagination. We think, however, it should be told simply as a tradition.

D. A. A., Springfield, Mass. Please tell me something about the Moravians; their nationality, faith, etc. Had John Wesley any connection with them?

The Moravian Brotherhood, which now consists of three different branches, originated in Bohemia in 1459. This body preserved the true spirit of the Hussite movement after the martyrdom of the leader John Huss. The beliefs of the sect are evangelical. A detailed statement of doctrines, etc., will be found on page 812, Vol. XVI., Encyclopædia Britannica, ninth edition. John Wesley was not directly connected with the Moravians.

M. P., Portland, Ore. Explain the harvest moon. Why does she shine longer than any other?

The moon revolves round the earth in an easterly direction and in general it rises some forty-eight minutes later and sets forty-eight minutes earlier for every day of its age. But this retardation, as it is called, is not uniform; it depends upon the inclination of the moon's orbit to the horizon, and is the least when this angle is least. Fortunately for the farmer this occurs near the autumnal equinox, September 23. At about this date the full moon rises and sets for several evenings with a daily retardation of only fifteen to twenty minutes, and the increased period of moonlight thus given has earned for this moon the title of the "Harvest Moon."

P. T., Kalamazoo, Mich. How did Peary know when he reached the North Pole?

Here is how he would know: When the North Magnetic Pole of the earth is reached (which is one of the two points in the earth's surface where the lines of magnetic force are vertical, in other words, it is one of the ends of the axis of the earth's magnetic polarity and is determined by the needle), the needle begins to point south. The North Magnetic Pole is hundreds of miles from the geographical Pole; to be exact, it is in North British America, in latitude 70½ degrees north and longitude 97 degrees west from Greenwich. As soon as this point is passed the needle swings back towards it. The explorer would then be traveling south by his compass, continuing on over a section of the earth where there is no north, east or west—only south. Observations of the sun would then tell the tale. When the sun's elevation above the horizon remained practically the same for twenty-four hours it would be proof positive that the Pole had been reached.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. H. H. H. Thanks for the passage noted.

Mrs. S. M. F., Garrison, Neb. Probably the passage to which you refer is Ex. 10: 21, also 20: 21.

W. G. T., Schenectady, N. Y. Thanks for your well-meant criticism, which is by no means out of place.

A Friend, Wilkesbarre, Pa. Small amounts may be sent through the mails in coin cards which can be had of almost any stationer.

Mrs. C. F. G., Dade City, Fla. There is no such expression in the Bible. Paul tells us that Christ brought life and immortality to light, and elsewhere we read that it is the gift of God. (See II. Cor. 5: 1; II. Tim. 1: 10; Rom. 2: 6-8.

E. W. R., Jefferson, O. Your questions are purely speculative, and the opinion of one authority would be as good as that of another. They do not come properly within the scope of THE MAIL-BAG, which is for information and not for debate.

Mrs. Joseph G., Dover, N. J., writes: "I have been a member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family for a number of years and do not know how I should get along without the paper. It comes next to my Bible." We are always glad to enjoy the good opinion of our readers.

F. F. F., Oshkosh, Wis. 1. There is a single text which will answer your question, and it is a Christian's duty to follow the advice it gives on all things, the use of liquor included. (See Rom. 14: 21.) When we see the evils wrought in the world by intemperance, we do not need to go far to apply this text. It is clearly the duty of the Christian, even were there no other Scripture on the subject, to abstain from anything that brings so much misery and wickedness into the world. 2. Consult a lawyer; the laws may vary on the subject in different States. 3. We answer such letters as we can, but cannot guarantee to answer all.

L. D., Springfield, Mo. Of the three great problems, the past is the scroll that lies before us, for instruction, example and warning. The present is the most difficult in a personal sense, as it relates to our duty, and it is the most important and most imperative. The future is the unsolvable, which we must confidently trust in God's hands, who will unfold its hidden mysteries in his own good time.

L. F. B., Sebec, Me. 1. Presumably the Garden of Gethsemane in which the betrayal took place, was in semi-darkness at that hour, as the evening was well advanced (see Mark 17), so that recognition by the soldiery might not have been an easy matter. 2. The ground which was bought with the price of the betrayal is still shown on the outskirts of Jerusalem and is known as the Potter's Field.

Mrs. L. J. B., Creston, Ia. We are in the midst of a great saloon fight here. We have one paper, a saloon organ, which publishes everything it can find against prohibition. The saloon "petition of consent" was circulated, also a remonstrance, and the temperance people gained a victory. They thought we had defrauded, so they appealed to the circuit court and they lost there. Now they will circulate another petition, according to the law in Iowa. Ours will be a bitter fight for a purer town.

E. B. M., Marshalltown, Ia. You say that it is "inconceivable that John should have been permitted to baptize the Son of God without being able to distinguish him from the common multitude." John answers this question very clearly: "And I knew him not" (John 1: 33-34). Mere relationship and acquaintance would not suffice. Nothing short of divine revelation, divine authority attested by the Holy Ghost, could give John authority to say, "Behold the Lamb of God."

G. Y., Williamsville, N. Y. 1. Pray for greater faith; seek the company of God's people and their encouragement and assistance; read a portion of the Gospels daily and open your heart freely to your own pastor. 2. Acts of necessity and mercy are permissible on the Lord's Day, and this would seem to belong to the latter category. 3. What you state is fatalism. God has given us the power to choose between good and evil. 4. It is a dangerous profession, but she might use her talent otherwise, with propriety and profit. 5. Skating in a rink in promiscuous company should be avoided. 6. Immersion or sprinkling, whichever you prefer.

Old Reader, Lindenhurst, L. I. "For more than fifty years I have searched the Scriptures, but have not yet found one clean statement when taken with its context that teaches I must not expect to be saved from sin, natural or inbred, or of any other kind, while in this life. The uniform command is to put away sin, to purify the heart, to purge out the old leaven, to seek to be sanctified throughout—spirit, soul and body. Nor do the Scriptures encourage me to hide myself under a robe of righteousness while the filth of sin remains. Nor do they warrant me to mock myself, by lifting an 'ideal standard' to which I must never attain. In II. Cor. 7: 1 it is taught that the entire cleansing from inward sin is instantaneous, while the 'perfecting holiness' is a progressive work."

Among the Workers

—AN EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN was begun in the First Baptist church of Cambridge, Mass., on February 8, and was continued for three weeks from that date. The work was carried on by the pastor, Dr. J. L. Campbell, with some special assistance in the singing. God's presence and power have been present in a remarkable way from the very beginning. During the first week a large number of decisions were made for Christ. The meetings closed March 1.

—THE SUNDAY evening services of the First Presbyterian church of Vineland, N. J., was of the special nature of an anniversary celebration on January 1, to commemorate the completion of twenty-four years of continuous pastorate by Rev. David H. King, D.D. The ushers distributed souvenir cards on which was printed a hymn prepared for the occasion by Dr. King and also a record of his work in connection with the church for his entire long period of service.

—A GREAT MISSIONARY and a good man passed to his eternal reward when Dr. John E. Clough, of the Indian Telugu Mission, died a few weeks ago. For over forty years he was an indefatigable worker in the vineyard, during which time he was the means of bringing thousands to Christ. He was born at Frewsburg, N. Y., in 1836, and early in life was a surveyor on the Western plains. He joined the Telugu Mission in 1865 and soon was recognized as the most earnest worker in the Indian field. By 1878 he had made ten thousand adult converts. On one occasion 2,222 were baptized in a single day by six native evangelists with only two of the latter baptizing at one time.

—PASTOR TH. BRIEHM of Hafnafiordur, Iceland, writes: "There is now in Reykiavik a regular Sunday School with Mr. Ziemsen as superintendent and twelve teachers, among whom Mr. Gislason, B.D., is a good help. Rev. Fridriksson is teacher for the infant class. The rest of the teachers are mostly from the Young Women's Christian Association, with Miss Olafson at the head. The work has been taken up in faith and love as the Lord's work. Here in Hafnafiordur (1,500 inhabitants) we have a small Sunday School, of which I am leader. It will be necessary to get a committee to establish Sunday Schools in every parish where there are believing Christians."

Like a Breakfast of Toasted Nuts

That's one way to describe Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice.

The grains are so nut-like that children use them in candy—chefs use them to garnish ice cream. Nearly all use mix them with bananas or berries. Cooks use them in frosting cake.

When you serve them with cream for breakfast—or for supper in a bowl of milk—the crisp, brown grains will suggest toasted nut meats, ready to melt in the mouth.

Four people in five like Puffed Wheat or Puffed Rice better than any other ready-cooked cereal. We have proved this by hundreds of lunch-room tests.

Nothing Else So Easy to Digest

By no other process are cereal foods made even half so digestible. Here the millions of food granules are literally blasted to pieces. The digestive juices act instantly.

One gets all the food value of the whole grain without any tax on the stomach. There is no other way to do that.

That's why Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice form such ideal foods for between-meals and bedtime—or for people who need to be careful—or for business men who want a light lunch.

They are often served, like bread or crackers, in a bowl of milk. For these puffed grains are as crisp as crackers, and four times as porous as bread.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

These are Prof. Anderson's foods—the famous foods shot from guns. The moisture in the grain is turned to steam, then the grains are puffed by exploding it.

Thus the food granules are literally blasted to pieces. The grains are puffed to eight times normal size. Yet the coats of the grain are unbroken.

They are far more delicious, far more digestible, than wheat or rice were ever made before.

Eighteen Million Dishes Every Month

The homes that know Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are now consuming 18,000,000 dishes per month. You ought to know them, too. Tell your grocer to send one package of each so you can find them out. Cut out this reminder and lay it aside so that you won't forget.

Pastor Fights a Leopard

THE Rev. Dr. G. A. Wilder, a missionary of the American Board in Rhodesia, in a letter, written from Silinda, tells how he and two natives and dogs hunted and killed a leopard after the animal felled him and inflicted four poisonous wounds in his head.

"The leopard could not be seen," Mr. Wilder writes, "but soon he came rushing toward us and stood at twenty paces. I fired and got no response. Kaziboni climbed a tree hard by and the dogs made a fresh start. Nyuswa fired, but the leopard lay hidden close to the ground. One dog advanced and retreated with its ear ripped open. We formed a close line and marched with rifles ready. Then the dog uttered a low growl, which the leopard answered, and a bullet that struck him was followed by a terrific roar. He stood a while a few yards below a large anthill, to which we went as quickly as possible. Kaziboni climbed a small tree, and seeing the leopard, fired, breaking a limb. As I could not see the beast I handed Kaziboni my rifle and he fired again. The dogs repeated their attack and the men rushed on with spears. The brute fought desperately for a few minutes before he died. With broken limbs and bullets in his chest, he fought with one paw and his mouth."

Cat Joined Church Choir

THE choir as well as neighborhood of Grace Episcopal Church in Jamaica, L. I., is relieved over the retirement of a volunteer member of the choir. It joined the choir practice Saturday and came near breaking up two Sunday services, although a boy vainly hunted it with a brick. The next day a half-starved cat was found in the spire rafters and the mystery was solved.

Winter Lightning's Pranks

A SEVERE electrical storm visited Long Island and the lower part of New York City early in February. The storm, which was preceded by a light snow, was accompanied by a driving rain which continued for hours. The thunder came with terrific peals. In Mineola, one of the Long Island towns, near New York lightning caused considerable damage.

The cupola of the Hyde Park school house was splintered. A large piece of the sheetiron roof was torn off and thrown to the road, a distance of two hundred feet, just missing two men who were going to work.

Kidnapped by Tidal Wave

THE three-year-old son of Charles Woodson, of El Dorado, Tex., was carried away at Bolivar ten years ago by the great tidal wave and not found by his parents, who moved to Kansas City. A traveling salesman recently heard of the finding of a boy in a pasture after the flood and, being a friend of the Woodsons, made an investigation. The boy, now fourteen, was identified as the lost baby and returned to his parents.

Landowners and Aviators at War

THE ownership of the air is in controversy about Chateaufort, France, and frequently pupils of Maurice Farman, who has a school of aviation, look down from their aeroplanes to see a farmer aiming a gun at them and warning them to keep off his land.

The mayor of the town and several farmers have brought a suit to restrain Farman and his fledglings from flying over their land, unless they are more than 200 metres (572 feet) up.

Pending a decision of how far up a man's ownership extends, the Farman clan is flying where it pleases and taking chances against the bird shot.

The main excuse of the farmer is that the unskilful young aviators are liable to fall on them while they work in the field, and that they frequently lose control of their machines and scare the horses.

Trees Made into Newspapers in Two and One-Half Hours

A RECENT trial made in Austria decided in how short a space of time living trees could be converted into newspapers. Its result is truly the annihilation of time. At Eisenthal, at 7.35 in the morning, three trees were sawn down; at 9.34 the wood, having been stripped of bark, cut up, and converted into pulp, became paper, and passed from the factory to the press, whence the first printed and folded copy was issued at ten o'clock; so that in 145 minutes the trees had become newspapers.

Church is Organized for Children

THE Original Children's Church of America, organized along the exact lines of the larger ones, has been established at Park College Church, Worcester, Mass., by the Rev. C. F. Hill Crathern. The service is similar to that for adults. The Scripture lesson is read from one of the versions of the Holy Writ which is in story form. A choir of boys has been organized, and at least one hymn is sung by them at every service. The girls of the church have organized themselves into a society which has been called The Lambs of the Flock, whose duty is to look after charitable work.

Deer Fights Off Eagle

A WILD deer on the ice on the Hudson River, a short time ago attracted the attention of thousands of persons along the bank. The animal was about half a mile off shore on a floe that was being carried up the river by the tide. Grand Duke's Auto-Sleigh

A CURIOUS and picturesque spectacle was seen the other day on the Isle de la Jatte in the Seine. It brought into contact, so to speak, the latest phase of modern inventive production and one of the most characteristic rites of the Greco-Russian Church. The Grand Duke Cyril of Russia has caused to be constructed for his use an automobile sleigh, propelled by means of a turbine wheel, which acts in relation to the air as a steamship screw does in water. It is designed to travel across the snow-covered Russian steppes at the rate of sixty miles an hour. The ceremony performed on the Isle de la Jatte was the blessing and baptism of this machine by clergy of the Russian Church. Two popes in their archaic robes officiated. The Grand Duchess Victoria was present.

Patriotism Demands Abstinence*

Quarterly Sunday School Temperance Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

The Evil of Intemperance

THIS story of an ancient nation defeated by drink is strikingly paralleled in our own time. All around us we see the evils of intemperance, dragging not alone individuals, but nations to the abyss of ruin. Wise and good men, looking on the peril, raise their voices and sound a warning, they see the danger ahead and tremble for the consequences. Emperor William takes statesmanly recognition of the fact that the excessive drinking by German soldiers, workingmen, and college students may prevent his country from competing successfully with Great Britain and the United States in the markets of the world.

Prohibition by Indian treaties in Minnesota, a subject of recent discussion, reminds us that, in the opinion of our government, the use of intoxicating liquors makes savages still more savage and retards in every way their evolution into civilized manhood. The enforcement of such prohibition treaties by men who are not afraid to stand up for the right and to their duty toward God and their country, should put to shame those cowardly officials who take solemn oath to enforce all laws, but who, when put to the test on prohibition, try to condone their lack of manhood and moral courage by saying: "It can't be enforced." The Indian treaties were of a wide social and patriotic significance, being intended to prevent the extermination of the noble race of red men and at the same time to protect the white race against the intensification of their native vices by indulgence in strong drink.

The shallow and inexperienced who either are not able to give, or do not wish to give, consideration to the great problems of the time, and who know nothing of the social ethics of their country, will tell you that people cannot be made moral by law; but those who have studied the social problems and base their reasoning on experience, will tell you that the law can decrease, if not wholly eliminate vice by abolishing the evil resorts which foster it. We reduce disease by removing the poisonous cesspools of the streets, which generate germs and give rise to noxious odors and miasma. It is wrong for a man to keep filth in his backyard that will poison not only his family but his neighbors, and perhaps cause a plague which may devastate a whole city or even a whole nation. By a similar analogy it is wrong for any one to maintain a resort for gambling, or for the sale of intoxicating drinks and harmful drugs, or that will in any way cause moral pollution or endanger the spiritual health of the community.

Danger—Material and Moral

The well-being of any country depends upon the determination of its people to safeguard their vital interests by having such laws enacted as will guard against both material and moral danger. China had no laws relating to a modern system of sanitation, nor had she any which interdicted the pernicious drug habit, and, as a consequence, she became the victim of plagues and pestilences and her people sank so low that they became an easy prey for the hardy Japs, who neglected neither their physical nor social well-being. But as soon as China prohibited the opium traffic the change for the better was manifested. The prohibition of the drug was a patriotic act, not prompted by the injury of opium to the individual, but by the feeling that only through abolishing the drug could China ever hope to become strong and take her stand on the same level as her neighbor, Japan. Twenty thousand Chinese have now signed a petition to the British Government for the abrogation of the British opium treaties. This petition has done much to weld into one patriotic nation the different provinces of China, hitherto so much isolated in their common interests.

In shameless contrast with China's work, which has cut down the opium traffic eighty per cent. in three years, is the fact that many American officials connive at the smuggling of opium into this country for the bribes they receive from those engaged in the nefarious trade. Alcohol is the twin drug of opium, yet in the nation as a whole its consumption has not been reduced per capita, largely because of our neglect of law enforcement. In a manner, we have only been "playing" at temperance, as if we were only engaged in a sham battle. This lesson is to remind us that it is a real warfare and one which requires the best efforts we can put forth.

The Loss Involved

In grappling with the drink evil we must not depend solely on the law; we must call to our assistance other help, the help which is found in the Gospel of Christ. Let us consider the temperance question from the point of view of the two great commandments which tell us to love God above all and our neighbors as ourselves. To obey these commandments we must abstain from intoxicating drinks. We must abstain for Christ's sake, if we would follow him; for the sake of our neighbors, whom we are bound to set a good example and assist to the best of our ability; for the sake of our country, to which we owe fealty and allegiance; and for the sake of the world, that we may benefit it and leave it better for our having lived.

A man cannot be true to himself if he does not hold the baser passions of his nature in control, especially the desire or craving for spirituous liquors. The drinking man cannot bring out the best that is in him and his efforts become weak, compared with those of his sober brother, for he saps both body and brain by his indulgence; therefore he cannot compete in the life race, he loses his place and falls so far behind that, eventually, he is lost sight of altogether. Many a man through strong drink has lost a good position and found himself on the broad road of ruin, traveling with an accelerated velocity down to the Avernus of temporal and eternal ruin. The sparkling glass entices many a bright youth to throw away his chances and his opportunities and sink helpless in the mire of intemperance, never to rise again. Fortune, health, happiness, hope, all are sacrificed to the demon of drink. And the value of these things is not realized until they are lost. Often a person unknowingly casts aside or throws away something of great price. Silas Morgan, living on Whidbee Island, Wash., found several dozen cans containing a substance resembling paint, and believing that a case of red paint had been washed ashore, he painted his old barn with the material. On taking a sample to town, he learned that the sticky fluid was pure opium worth $300 a can. As he had used thirty cans in painting the barn, the job cost just $9,000. Fortunes are thrown away daily in painting the stomach with alcohol. We hear of people swallowing needles, pins and other indigestible materials,

Style is in the Figure and Poise and Not in the Gown

A Woman Should Never—

Be Satisfied without Perfect Health
A Good Figure
A Clear Skin

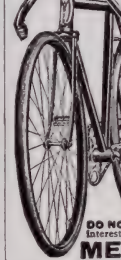
She can attain these by Scientific Means in the Privacy of her Own Room

I WISH I could put sufficient emphasis into these words to induce any woman, whose health is not perfect, or whose figure does not please her, to write to me. My pupils are among the most refined, intellectual women in America. They are my best friends and the strongest possible testimonials for the value of natural, hygienic principles of cure as opposed to the drug habit.

At least one-third of my pupils are sent to me by those who have finished my work.

I no longer need to claim what I can do, because I have done it. I think I do not exaggerate when I say that I have relieved more chronic ailments and reduced or built up more women in the past nine years than any physician; the best physicians of America endorse my work. I could fill hundreds of magazines with testimonials; the following from letters on my desk as I write, indicate a few ailments I have relieved.

"My weight has increased 30 pounds." "My kidneys are much better." "My eyes are much stronger and I have taken off my glasses." "I have not had a sign of indigestion or gall stones since I began with you." "I weigh 83 pounds less and have gained wonderfully in strength. I never get out of breath, the rheumatic twinges have all gone, and I look and feel 15 years younger." "Just think of it! To be relieved from constipation. Entirely free after having it for 30 years." "Have grown from a nervous wreck into a state of steady, quiet nerves."



If you are suffering from any chronic ailment, if your figure does not please you, or if you will tell me the particular difficulty you wish to correct, I feel sure I can help you. If I cannot, I will tell you so. Your correspondence will be held in strict confidence. Many a woman has surprised her husband and friends by improvements she has made by just 15 minutes a day in her own room.

I want to help every woman to realize that her health lies to a degree in her own hands, and that she can reach her ideal in figure and carriage.

I have published a booklet, "Health, Character and Beauty," which tells you how to stand and walk correctly, and gives other information of vital interest. This booklet has helped hundreds of women, even though they never studied with me. I will send it to you free, and tell you all about my work on request. Write now. If you do not need my work, you may be able to help a friend.

but how many swallow houses and farms and lands and estates, not realizing the enormity of their appetites until they have nothing left to appease them!

From a Patriotic Standpoint

In considering the drink question, we must not lose sight of the interests of our common country and what is involved in the issue. The argument for abstinence deserves a special emphasis on the ground of patriotism. The greatness of any nation depends for the most part on the sobriety of its people. Greece and Rome were among the mightiest of the early empires, but as soon as they began to give free rein to their indulgence in drink, they declined and in a short time their glory and splendors were but memories of the past. In our time the French Academy attributes the decline in the birthrate of France, the real national peril of that country, to the daily habit of its women tippling in wines, and of its men indulging in absinthe and other strong spirits. In fact, their systems are in a state of chronic poisoning. Scientists tell us that the leucocytes or minute particles which swim about in the blood destroy the germs, microbes and other bacteria which would prove dangerous to life. When drink, however, is taken into the system, these health-preserving agents are wholly incapacitated from performing their functions and the microbes have a free field for their ravages. The habit of tippling, while it may never develop into outright drunkenness, is equally as bad, even worse, for it lays hold of its victims so insidiously that they do not realize they are in the clutch of a demon until they can no longer tear themselves away from its deadly embrace. The women and men of France, the former by their tippling, the latter by their excesses, are sinking their country to the lowest level in the scale of nationhood, and if there is not some reformation soon this drink evil will obliterate France from the map of Europe.

France, however, is not the only country at the present time which is threatened by the universal destroyer. In fact the whole world is imperiled by the stealthy encroaches of this foe of the race, whom so many are running to embrace as a friend. The United States is in danger and the watchmen on the towers of Zion should sound a warning in time. That the drink evil has been checked in the rural sections of the country, is no reason why the moral guardians of the people should relax their efforts to exorcise the rum demon and drive it forever from the land. Let no one think that the war on King Alcohol is over and the battle won. On the contrary, he is still mighty in his evil and we must concentrate all our forces to combat him.

The lesson, in which we are told how the mighty kingdom of Syria was defeated by "the young men" and the "people of Israel," because the commanders of the Syrian army were "drinking themselves drunk in their pavilions," suggests that the new organizations of men in the churches are the forces by which alcohol should be repulsed and overthrown. In many cases the Men's Leagues have not gone beyond Bible study, but this very study should impel them to become successors of Christ in "destroying the works of the devil." "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested." For this purpose, also, was the Church constituted. Can any one proceed to destroy the works of the devil and overlook the saloon and the gambling table? The destruction of these evils is a man's job. It is not fair to put all the labor on the preachers and the women. They need assistance, the help of strong men. Let the Men's Bible Classes unite to study civic problems, and to speak unitedly to the government officials of city, state and nation, by petitions, by letters, by deputations, working for temperance, righteousness and judgment to come. It is not a foreign foe that is losing by drink, but our own firesides, homes and country. Let all true Christians, then, young and old, but especially the men, become the "princes" or "people" by whom shall be won the conclusive victory that waits only for the coming into the fight of the main army of the Church of God.

New 1910 Dictionary for Home and Business

A Dictionary which admirably combines the qualities of accuracy, clearness, and conciseness, and includes the greatest worth in the smallest compass, is the Funk & Wagnalls' Comprehensive Standard Dictionary.

For the ready purposes of the average reader, this Dictionary is unsurpassed. Its vocabulary will be found to be exceptionally comprehensive and exact. It defines more than 38,000 words and phrases, and contains over 800 instructive illustrations, which were made especially for this edition. The book weighs thirty-six ounces. It is 8½ by 13½ inches when open, 1½ inches thick. It is beautifully bound in De Luxe Limp Leather, equipped with the Dennison Patent Thumb-Notch Index.

If you do not know the meaning of a word, seek it—avoid drawing it by inference from the context. As you find a new word, or an unfamiliar one; a word used in a new sense, or an archaic one, run it down to its source, and it will leave a lasting impression on your mind. This stimulates the habit, and thus, almost unconsciously, a thorough education in English is acquired.

The Comprehensive Standard is the best ready reference for the busy man and woman, for the professional man, the school teacher, and the children at school, because it has been abridged from the famous Standard Dictionary, which is known as being complete—succinct—authoritative.

By an exceedingly fortunate arrangement, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is enabled to include this valuable Dictionary in one of its new 1911 offers.

For only $2.50 we will send you the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year (new or renewal), our 1911 Calendar, a photogravure of Dr. Klopsch, and a copy of this beautiful and necessary ucceed in making any man happy till ou get off that high horse of yours, nd stop trying to run the universe. ut I don't suppose you'll care for hat I say, any more than you cared r me, and I don't flatter myself that as a little bit.

"Just one thing more, before I say ood-by for always. If you want to now who your master is, I'll tell you. 's old Jarvis. I knew it all along. ut I let you go on deceiving yourself, nce you seemed to prefer doing it. ou can settle it with him any way ou see fit, and I shall be satisfied.

"With best wishes for your future appiness, I am, my dear Barbara,

"Yours faithfully,

"DAVID WHITCOMB."

Barbara read this letter once; then he thrust it deep down among the rning logs and watched it blaze and rivel into a black and scarlet shred. She was still thinking soberly rather an sorrowfully of David, when mmy dashed into the room, his yellow hair standing up around his rosy face like a halo as he pulled off his warm cap and threw his books and mittens on the table.

"You're home early, aren't you, Precious?" asked Barbara, glancing at the clock.

"Yes, 'course I am; I met Mr. Jarvis, Barb'ra. He was drivin' that horse wiv a short tail, 'n'—'n' he asked me did I want to get in and drive him, 'n'—'n' he let me, Barb'ra; 'n' I don't b'lieve that horse cares if his tail is short. He's comin' in the house now."

"Who—the horse?" asked Barbara in pretended alarm.

"'Course not!" shouted Jimmy in fine scorn. "Mr. Jarvis is. He said he was bringin' you a book to read. I like Mr. Jarvis, don't you, Barb'ra? Don't you?"

Jarvis himself, entering at the moment, heard the little boy's insistent question. He stood before the fire, tall and grave, drawing off his gloves and looking keenly at Barbara. She had grown only more beautiful in his eyes, since the day when he had first noticed her youthful loveliness, like a windblown spray of blossoms against a dark sky. Now he perceived that something untoward had happened to disturb the quiet friendship which had been slowly growing up between them in the peace of the past months. Her candid eyes avoided his, and a fluttering color came and went in her soft cheeks.

"What is it, Barbara?" he asked, when Jimmy had gone exultantly.

"I have just been reading a letter—from David," she said, without attempt at postponement or evasion. "He is married."

"Well?" said Jarvis gravely.

"I was glad to know that," she went on. "I have been afraid—for that poor girl."

She was silent for a long minute, while the logs purred comfortably together in the fireplace.

Then she met his questioning eyes, her own filled with a deep, mysterious light.

"He told me what I had sometimes—thought might be true," she hesitated; "that you—were the unknown person, who— That I really—belong to you."

Then the significance of her words flashed over her, and her face glowed with lovely color.

"I am quite rich now," she went on hurriedly, "and you must let me—give you—pay you——"

"I will, Barbara," he said, with a quiet smile. "If you will only give me—what you have acknowledged really belongs to me. Will you, Barbara?"

She turned to him, all her woman's soul in her sweet eyes. "To the highest bidder," she murmured, and laid her hand in his.

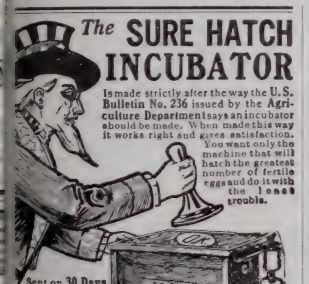
THE END

HID IN CHRIST

IN THE second century they brought a Christian before the king, who wanted him to recant and give up Christ and Christianity, but the man spurned the proposition. But the king said:

"If you don't do it, I will banish you."

The man smiled and answered: "You can't banish me from Christ, for he will never leave me nor forsake me."



The king got angry, and said: "Well, I will confiscate your property and take it all from you."

And the man replied: "My treasures are laid up on high; you cannot get them."

The king became still more angry, and said: "I will kill you."

"Why," the man answered, "I have been dead forty years; I have been dead with Christ, dead to the world, and my life is hid with Christ in God, and you cannot touch it."

"What are you going to do with such a fanatic?" said the king.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BOOK DEPT., Bible House, New York City

Young People's Societies

The Equipment*

IN whatever part or in whatever light Christ's Gospel is studied, one great feature always strikes the attention: it is for everybody. It fits equally the soul of the millionaire and of the pauper. It is good for festival seasons and good for the daily grind. Old and young find in it just what meets the need of each. "Whosoever," "all who hunger," "the whole world," and phrases like them abound throughout the New Testament.

Therefore we are not surprised when we find that the armor prescribed for the Christian, complete and even elaborate as it is, is within the reach of all. Any one can have it.

In primitive man, the absence of effective moral armor is as noticeable as the absence of the means of physical defense. In time of war, says Frazer, the anthropologist, the women of certain wild tribes dance all day and all night, until their strength fails. They believe that this course brings success to their warriors. In another tribe, one man stays at home when his brethren go forth to battle, and two lads are chosen by lot to be beaten by this man during all the time that the army is absent. This cruel act, they think, insures the victory of their arms. Their moral armor is equally absurd, and largely in consequence of their blind helplessness, tribe after tribe has been swept from the earth.

Thus, from the crudeness of untaught peoples, through the rising steps of increasing civilization, through the high refinement of the Egyptians, the Babylonians, the Ninevites, the Greeks, and the Romans—none of them coming to the true knowledge of sin and its redemption, we arrive at the analysis and the solution offered by Christ, of this great riddle of human life.

Fearlessly he told men of the nature of sin. They could not serve God and Mammon. They must observe honor in the marriage relation. They must forgive wrongs, even loving those who persecute them. Read the long, keen list, as given in our Lord's sermons. Then read of the cures and the aids which he provides, and see how marvelously every emergency is met. The most profound treatise upon ethics could go no further.

Some of our people think that in education of the mind lies our great defense. They say, "Teach everybody to read and write. See that geography and grammar and arithmetic are understood, and then the nation is safe."

Never was there a greater mistake. Education is good and necessary. Dr. Lyman Abbott has eloquently said, "Equip a man with all the powers that education can provide, and you simply give him power with which he can carry on selfishness more skilfully than before. The hope of the world is not in education; it is in God. It is not in public schools, unless the public school learns how to educate the conscience as well as the intellect. There is no more hope in an educated people than in an ignorant people, unless their education has taught them right and wrong, and God as the interpreter of right and wrong."

That just and great ruler and general, King Gustavus Adolphus, lived by prayer, and strove ever to wear the armor of his God. A good song for us all is that which he taught his soldiers to sing:

As true as God's own word is true,
Nor earth nor hell with all their crew
Against us shall prevail.
A jest and byword are they grown;
God is with us. We are his own.
Our victory cannot fail.

Money: Dangers and Uses*

IT IS to be noted that there are few agents of great good that are not capable of being equally harmful. Thus fire, one of our greatest blessings, is also, if not kept strictly in the place of a servant, a merciless and destructive master. Water is the same; and money is much like them. Keep it in its place, and it is an invaluable source of good. Let it once permanently obtain the mastery, and the soul that serves it is lost.

Our perils as a nation arise largely from our wealth. We may well take to heart the warning which Moses gave to Israel in the daily reading for March 14. During the two decades between 1860 and 1880, it was computed that our wealth increased 170 per cent. In the two decades between 1880 and 1900, it increased from 43 billions to 107 billions.

"The material progress of the United States from 1870 to 1880," says Dr. Josiah Strong, "is without a parallel in the history of the world. . . . Mammonism," he continues, "grows more and more intense and infatuated. It corrupts morals, it blocks reforms, it corrupts the ballot box, and by reason of our enormous wealth we are threatened with a gross materialism. When life becomes only a ministry to enlarge wealth, there is perversion and degradation."

As to the individual man wealth is likely to bring the perils of luxury, so with the nation. Charles Sumner said truly that avarice and luxury had been the ruin of every great State. "The material splendor of Israel reached its climax in the glory of Solomon's reign, in which silver was made to be in Jerusalem as stones; but it was followed by the speedy dismemberment of the kingdom. Wealth has no conserving power. It tends rather to enervate and corrupt."

Said Dr. Howard Crosby: "The danger which threatens the uprooting of society, the demolition of civil institutions, the destruction of liberty is that which comes from the rich and powerful classes."

Not many of us are subjected individually to the dangers of wealth; but as citizens of our beloved republic, we are all threatened by them, and we cannot too deeply and faithfully consider and combat them.

"But where," you ask, "shall I, as an individual, draw the line in the pursuit of gain? When I get property enough to yield an income upon which I can live, shall I stop earning, and rest back upon my savings?"

No one can advise any one in such matters. Some men apparently cannot help making money. They are gifted with a sort of second sight which shows them the value of investments and the openings for capital. Until some statute or other influence stops them, such men will continue to roll up vast fortunes. Others will be made by lucky chances. No important signs appear as yet of any restrictions upon the making of great fortunes. And when such wealth is expended upon good objects, like that of Andrew Carnegie, John H. Converse, John S. Kennedy, and many others, it is hard to condemn it.

Undoubtedly it is the duty of every man to put forth his best efforts to make not only a good living for his family, but to provide adequately against the possible mutations of fortune and the disabilities of sickness and old age. He wishes to have enough in hand also to bear his share in the support of his church and all good causes. He must help to care for those who have laid aside self-interest in order to take up some department of the Master's service with small pay or none at all.

INVESTIGATION OF ALL SEPARATORS EMPHASIZES IHC SUPERIORITY

You cannot afford to buy any separator before comparing it with others. You should not take chances. The closer you investigate all separators, the more you will be impressed with I H C superiority. You will then know how much closer the I H C skims, how much longer it lasts, how much easier it is to clean, and how much easier it is to turn. There are no weak spots in an I H C Cream Harvester.

I H C Cream Harvesters are the only separators with dust-proof and milk-proof gears, which are at the same time easily accessible. The frame of an I H C Cream Harvester is entirely protected from wear by phosphor bronze bushings. The I H C has large shafts, bushings, and bearings; it has a perfect oiling system; the flexible top-bearing of is the strongest and most effective found in any separator; it has only one spring. I H C Cream Harvesters always run steady—without vibration. I H C Cream Harvesters are equipped with a patented dirt-arrester which removes the finest particles of dirt from the milk before the milk is separated. The crank is at the right height for easy turning, and the tank is at an easy height to fill.

The I H C local dealer will be glad to point out the above features and many others, or, write direct for catalogues. Made in two styles — Dairymaid and Bluebell—in four sizes.

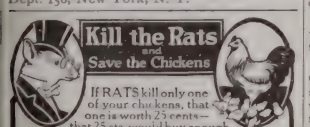
MUSIC TAUGHT FREE

Home Instruction

Special Offer to Readers of The Christian Herald

In order to advertise and introduce their home study music lessons in every locality the INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC of New York will give free to our readers a complete course of instruction for either Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, Guitar, Cornet, Banjo, Cello or Sight Singing. In return they simply ask that you recommend their Institute to your friends after you learn to play.



You may not know one note from another; yet, by their wonderfully simple and thorough method, you can soon learn to play. If you are an advanced player you will receive special instruction.

The lessons are sent weekly. They are so simple and easy that they are recommended to any person or little child who can read English. Photographs and drawings make everything plain. Under the Institute's free tuition offer you will be asked to pay only a very small amount (averaging 14 cents a week) to cover postage and the necessary sheet music.

No one should overlook this wonderful offer. Tell your friends about it—show this article to them.

The INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE has successfully taught others and can successfully teach you, even if you know absolutely nothing whatever about music. The lessons make every point clear.

Write today for the FREE booklet, which explains everything. It will convince you and cost you nothing. Address your letter or postal card to INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC, 98 Fifth Ave., Dept. 156, New York, N. Y.

Mrs. Mills, wife of W. J. Mills, Brooklyn, was called higher while on a visit to her native land, after an absence of over fifty years. She died in Londonderry, Ireland, but her husband brought back the remains and she sleeps in Greenwood Cemetery. She was a Christian woman of rare qualities, much beloved by a wide circle of friends.

Charles H. Covell (82) died recently in Worcester, Mass. In early life he had many stirring adventures by sea and land. He first went out as a whaler. He was in the navy during the Civil War. After this he traveled in South America and Europe. For nearly half a century he was engaged in preaching and secular work in the line of lecturing about his travels and experiences.

Mrs. Charles M. Pepper, who recently passed away in Washington, was a member of the Federation of Women's Clubs, District of Columbia; of the Women's National Press Association and other organizations. She was greatly beloved in a large literary and social circle and both she and her husband, Hon. Charles M. Pepper, of the American-Canadian Reciprocity Commission, have long been active figures in the official life of Washington.

Rev. James Rollinson (70), who passed away at New Virginia, was an indefatigable worker in the vineyard, winning souls to the Master by his intense earnestness and his genial and kindly nature which attracted all to him, the sinner as well as the saint. He was born in Staffordshire, England, and came to this country in 1868, and was shortly afterwards licensed to preach in the Methodist Church. He was a power for much good in the community, and the light he shed shall show the way to erring feet for many years to come.

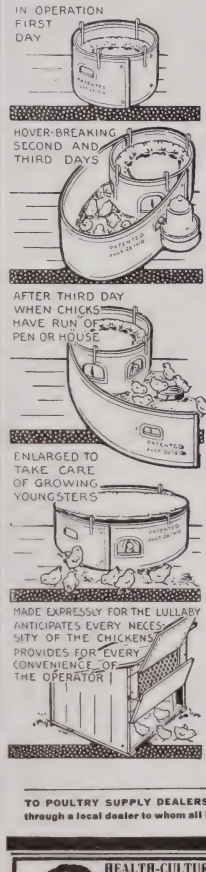
DEAR CHRISTIAN HERALD:



As I am one of the thousands who loved Dr. Klopsch and were in hearty sympathy with his philanthropic achievements it affords me great pleasure to add my endorsement to the splendid and fitting monument proposed for him by endowing Mont-Lawn, which he so dearly loved.

It is indeed an inspiration to read the life of our lamented Dr. Klopsch. His noble example of love and self-sacrifice should stimulate us all to higher ideals and better service.

Very truly yours,
JAMES BALEY.

The Lullaby Brooder

See how it grows with the chicks

¶ Always furnishing plenty of pure, fresh air, with no chance for over-heating, which is killing thousands of chicks every day.

¶ Always preserving an even temperature because of the natural warmth of the chicks.

¶ Always brings the chicks to the colony house or roosting age, strong, healthy, and vigorous.

¶ All danger of contagion from one brood to another is avoided. Simply burn the brooder and "forget it" because they are so inexpensive.

¶ Whether you have 25 or 10,000, the Lullaby will take care of them in flocks of 25 each, and positively stop the 50% loss of the past.

¶ Easily adjusted to the different stages of chick life.

¶ Place it in any sort of a structure that is waterproof—dry-goods box, piano box, barrel or out-shed coop.

Cheswick, Pa., June 14, 1910.

DOING THE WILL OF GOD

An Unpublished Sermon by DWIGHT L. MOODY, America's Greatest Evangelist*

This is the eleventh of twenty remarkable sermons by Moody, never before published, and the existence of which was disclosed only a few months ago. The absolute authenticity of the sermons is vouched for by the evangelist's son, Wm. R. Moody, who cordially approves their publication in this paper. The sermons are the exclusive property of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. One will appear each month.

I WANT to call attention to the fifth chapter of Hebrews, the ninth verse: "And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."

Eternal salvation means eternal life, eternal safety, eternal deliverance. And we get that by obedience. We are told that "without faith it is impossible to please God"; and you may also say, "Without obedience it is impossible to please God." All the wretchedness, misery, woe, and sin in this world come through that door of disobedience. If man will only obey God there will be no trouble. There is where our trouble comes from. Let me give that text again. I want you to get the text if you don't get anything else to-day. I am glad the word of God has made some people mad. Nothing will cut a wound like the Word of God. Here is something true, whether you believe it or not.

Dwight L. Moody

What Obedience Really Means

Mark, it doesn't say "all that feel him," but "all that obey him." How did the angels fall? By disobedience. How did man fall? By disobedience. That is how he fell. A man is going to rise on the spot where he fell. Let man obey God and all is peaceful; everything comes right then. And did you ever notice that everything else in this world but the heart of man obeys God? All creation obeys God. He said in the morning, "Let there be light," and there came light. Darkness disappeared. He spoke to the earth, "Let the earth bring forth," and the earth obeyed instantly. And one of the proofs that Christ was God manifest in the flesh is that everything but the heart of man obeyed him. He spoke; the wind obeyed him, and the sea; and the fig-tree instantly withered away. He spoke to disease, and disease fled before him. He spoke to death, and death fled before him; and to the grave, and the grave instantly obeyed. He spoke to man, and man said, "No, I will not obey him." And that is the trouble. And there will be no peace on this earth until man learns the lesson of obedience.

Man says he doesn't know why God should be so strict about his laws being obeyed. Why, you know that many a man has been shot in the army because he disobeyed—shot down at once. Man wants his laws obeyed, and hasn't God got a right to say that his laws shall be obeyed? Obedience is the best test after all of loyalty to Christ. You cannot have a better test of love than that. If my child says he loves me and never will obey me, I don't care for his love. You don't want any better test of love than obedience. You remember, when Christ was on earth, they came to him and testified to him, and said his mother and brothers were outside and wanted to see him; and he looked around and said, "Who is my mother? Who is my brother? They that do my will; they are my mother and my brother." The man that is nearest to God is the man who obeys the Master fully. That is the one that is nearest. And the one farthest away from God is the one that obeys the least. That is all there is to it. If you want to be brought into the closest fellowship with the Lord, all you have to do is to obey him. He takes us into the closest fellowship with him, if we will obey him.

Now, there is another passage in the First Book of Samuel, fifteenth chapter, twenty-second verse; if you have your Bibles, it would be a good thing to read it: "And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king."

Works of charity will avail nothing, if there be disloyalty and disobedience to God. It is much easier to bring a bleeding lamb and lay it upon the altar than to bring yourself; it is much easier to give a thousand dollars to India, to an institution, or to some church, than to resign your will to God's will. But God doesn't want the money unless the will and heart go with it—unless the man is right with him. If a man persists in living in disobedience, there is nothing he can do to please God.

There would have been no need of sacrifice if it hadn't been for disobedience. It is much easier to bring a lamb than to come yourself. God wants you. There is a story told of an Indian who was troubled about his sins and he brought his tomahawk, but the Lord wouldn't have it. And he brought his blanket, and his dog and gun, bow and arrows, and the Lord wouldn't have any one of them. But, at last, he brought "Poor Indian" himself, and the Lord took him at once. And that's what the Lord wants. He wants you, your will, and he will give you power to do right when he gets control of your will.

Now, you could not, perhaps, have a better illustration of two men, of one who was disobedient and the other who was obedient, than in two ancient scenes. They were about a thousand years apart. Both men belonged to the tribe of Benjamin. One had a kingdom given him and a crown set upon his brow. He was the favored of the whole nation—lifted up above every man in the whole kingdom. He had the loveliest son that ever father had on this earth—Jonathan, one of the loveliest characters in history; so unselfish, so little jealousy about him! He had one of the grandest sons-in-law in history—David; and had as a friend one of the finest prophets that ever lived—Samuel. Samuel was true to Saul and was willing to hand over the kingdom to him, and Saul had the favor of heaven and earth. But by one act of disobedience he lost everything—his kingdom, his lovely Jonathan, his life, and the friendship of Samuel; he lost everything. How many are there who have done the same thing? You have lost because you have been disloyal to him.

Another Saul had no kingdom, no crown. He was a persecutor of the righteous, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against every one who called Jesus the Christ. At last Christ spoke to him, and what did he say? "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." And he won a crown. He won not only the friendship of Samuel and the prophets, but the favor of heaven and the smile of God. The first Saul lost all by disobedience, but this man won it all back. Thank God, we can do the same if we will. How? In obedience to the heavenly vision.

The Penalty of Disobedience

I think we have been having some heavenly visions. I don't believe that a great crowd of men would come surging up at midday, leaving business and dinner, to hear words. I believe their idea is to hear from another world, and many of these men are becoming obedient to the heavenly vision. Others will brace themselves, and say: "I will not believe. I will not obey." Then you will die in your sins. That is all there is to it. What would God do with a disobedient man in his kingdom? We have got to learn obedience down here or we will not be fit for the kingdom of God. "To obey is better than sacrifice." God wants obedience. Mark you, it is not picking out a few things that we like to do and leaving some things we don't like to do. That is not obedience. If I told my boy to do six things and he went and did five and not the sixth, it would be disobedience. That's all the size of Christianity to-day—willing to do the easy things; but when it comes to sacrifice, to personal sacrifice, to give up the ballroom, to give up progressive euchre, to give up certain kinds of society that are dragging you down, to give up things that you are sure embarrass your testimony, hindering your progress toward heaven and your influence, then you go against the law of God and you lose the friendship of God. You are going the way that Saul did.

I will read a passage in the eleventh chapter of Deuteronomy: "Behold, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse; a blessing, if ye obey the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you this day; and a curse, if ye will not obey the commandments of the Lord your God." I will challenge you to find on earth a man or woman who has obeyed the commandments of God upon whom the blessing of God has not rested. I am throwing down that challenge. Let the infidels come and pick it up. Man may profess to obey. Profession is one thing. I may profess to be a prince of the royal blood, but that does not make me one. Does it? I may profess to be a millionaire, but that doesn't make me one by a good deal. When a man becomes a real child of God and obedient, the smile of God comes and the blessing of God comes. Let me read that again: "And a curse, if ye will not obey the commandments of the Lord your God, but turn aside out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods, which ye have not known."

The Blessing That Follows Obedience

Now, I ask you a question: If a man turns away into the path of licentiousness, doesn't the curse of God come upon him? If he turns into the path of the gambler, doesn't the curse of God come upon him? If he turns away into the path of drunkenness, doesn't the curse of God come upon him? If he is a dishonorable and dishonest man, doesn't the curse of God come upon him? But if a man will obey God, as Joseph did in Egypt, or Daniel in Babylon, wouldn't the favor of heaven come to him? Hasn't God been true to every one who has been obedient? Can one deny that statement? If you want to be blessed, and want the blessing right here, make up your mind now that you are going to obey God as far as you know his will.

You will have no trouble about the Bible and things so mysterious, if you are willing to do the will of God—to give literal, true, prompt, cheerful obedience to the will of God. Martin Luther said he would rather obey than work miracles. It is a sign of being a child of God to obey in little things from day to day rather than to perform miracles. A man may profess, like Balaam, and not be right; but when I see a man or woman who is willing to do the will of God as far as they know, whether they feel like it or not, then you may know that God is with them. God has a few living, true, faithful witnesses yet.

Did you ever think that there is no record of a man who got a blessing when Christ was on earth who didn't get it in the act of obedience? He said to the man who had the palsy, "Rise, take up thy bed and walk." The man might have said, "If I could have done that I would not have been carried here by four men." But when the Lord commanded, he enabled him; he gave power; and when the man willed to do what the Son of Man told him to do, he was made whole. He might have said, "I don't believe I have got the power. I won't attempt it." Do you think the Lord would have healed him? Not by a great deal. He said to the man born blind, "Go to the Pool of Siloam and wash, and you shall get your sight." The man might have said, "Nonsense! What's the use of filling my eyes with mud? Wash in the Pool of Siloam! I've done so many times." But he went, and as he went, he got his sight.

A Practical Lesson in Obedience

There is a story told of Girard, one of the first millionaires, who lived at the beginning of last century. It was when a great many men were coming over from Ireland on account of the famine. An Irishman turned up at Girard's place of business and wanted work. Girard liked the looks of him, and he said, "Do you see that pile of bricks in the yard?" "Yes, sir," he said. "Well, pile them up in the other end of the yard." He did it, and the work was done. "Can you give me work to-morrow?" "Yes, come back." The next morning he told the man to go and pile up the bricks where they were before, where he found them. Work the next day? "Yes. Go pile up the bricks at the other end." And he kept him piling up the bricks, and at the end he said, "I want you to go down to the wharf and bid for some sugar." The man smiled, but he went and bid for the sugar. They said, "Are you Girard's agent?" "Yes." They scraped and bowed, and he was a great man then—the man who had been obedient.

Some people wonder why they can't get into the kingdom of God, and why it is so hard to get in. It isn't hard at all when you are really willing to submit your will to God's will. People are afraid of the will of God. I would rather have the will of God done than my own will. Why, I can't see an hour into the future. I don't know what is ahead of me. God knows all. The past, present, and future are all alike to him, and he knows what is my highest and best interest, and he loves me more than I love myself. And he wills me good, and he wills for my highest and eternal interest. It is much better to submit to the will of God, and just let his will be done in us, than to be trying to carry out our own thoughts and our own plans. Let the boy, ten years old, have his own way, and where does he go? Before he is twenty-one he has gone to destruction. There is not a mother or father here who does not know that if you let your boy have his own way he goes wrong. God wants us to turn over to him our wills, and then we find love, peace, joy, and eternal salvation, not only for this life but for the life to come.

Go back to the fact that every one whom Christ blessed on earth was blessed in obedience. To the man with the withered hand he said, "Stand forth!" and the man got up and stood before all the Pharisees, and stretched out that hand. There was a withered arm hanging lifeless for twenty years, and the Lord said, "Stretch your hand out!" The man might have said, "I have not the power"; but when he willed to do it, the arm was as good as whole. Blessed in the act! He said to the lepers, "Go, and show yourselves to the priest"; and as they went they were healed. As they went! I spoke to a man in New York some years ago about his becoming a Christian, and he made up his mind he would go home and pray, and settle the question; and on his way home it occurred to him, "Why not pray now?" and he began by making the prayer that the publican made, "God be merciful to me a sinner"; and God was merciful and saved him.

The question for you to settle is: What is the will of God? "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." That is to be the condition. "Seek first." Will you do it? "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Will you come? God says, "Come." You say you are not fit to come. He knows all about it. And what is his business? To receive you. He promises to do it. "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." Will you do it? That is obedience.

A man said, "I don't like your kind of preaching; you get a man into a corner and force decision. You spring the question on him. Why not give him time to consider?" But surely, if it is a question of obedience, you had better obey at once. Some of you have grown gray and have not obeyed him yet. Some of you are living on borrowed time, and yet you talk of "springing the question" upon you. It is a temptation of the devil. A child has been taught to lisp the name of Christ. Children know enough to obey Christ. And now the question comes to you: Are you willing to do it?

The Man and the Church

By EUGENE THWING

III. THE CHURCH'S PART

EVERYWHERE the Church is facing this vital problem, but not everywhere with confidence or success. The few churches that have a large, active membership of men prove that the problem can be solved. They may, in some cases, have exceptional advantages of leadership, or location, or community; but, regardless of all qualifying conditions, it must be insisted that no church, under any pastorate, or in any place, is too small or too weak to put into operation and keep in operation some specific plan to reach, hold and benefit the men.

So many plans are tried a little while and then abandoned; so much time and energy are expended in profitless discussion of the problem; so many prayers are uttered and apparently remain unanswered, that pastors and official boards and church workers become disheartened, and the church drifts on with the great work unaccomplished. What is the reason? Is it not partly that the plans and discussions and efforts have to do too much with the details of method rather than with the fundamental principles upon which these plans and efforts must be based?

THERE is not space here for any detailed description of plans. They may be varied infinitely to suit varying conditions, but before any plans are adopted it will be wise to consider frankly and intimately, first, why does the Church want the men? The natural answer, which comes without hesitation from pastor and people, that the men are wanted in the Church in order that they may be won to Christ, does not strike deep enough in many cases. Bishop McDowell once declared in a sermon on "The Man at the Desk" that we go after business men for money only, while they are hungry after personal acquaintance with Christ.

It isn't pleasant always to have our motives too closely analyzed. The acid test hurts, but it reveals the truth. Many churches are constantly struggling with financial needs. The men are the earners, and from the men, in large degree, must come the financial support of the church. The man inside the church is more likely to give his due share for support than the man outside the church. The financial secretary constantly reports to the board or to the finance committee the number of regular contributors on his books.

Usually they are not enough, and the committee runs over the names of men outside but "affiliated" with the church through members of their families who attend the church or Sunday School. "If only we could get So-and-So to attend regularly he would make another good contributor." And in countless cases the man outside the church is measured solely by his probable money value to the church "if we can get him." It was for no such purpose that the Master said, "I will make you fishers of men."

Of course the finance committee must plan; of course the men must pay. These things are right and necessary; they can not be neglected; but the church that seeks to bring men into membership, or even attendance, with the money idea in the foreground is not likely to do much for their spiritual welfare after they come in. The official board or the finance committee of the church may well hang in its meeting-room the words of Christ, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God [for the men you would win], and all these things shall be added unto you."

THE church must carefully consider, also, the tastes and temperaments of the men, their likes and dislikes, their real, serious interests, and their deeper feelings. Many plans of work for men are found to be misfits and have to be given up after a disheartening struggle, because the men do not respond. The workers wonder why and, of course, blame the failure on the indifference of the men rather than on any lack of appropriateness in the plan itself. A men's club or brotherhood may be just the thing the church ought to have, but it may be organized and conducted in just the way calculated to drive men away instead of to attract them. Men must have their own exclusive gatherings, where they will be free from the embarrassment which some of them feel at a function overwhelmingly female in patronage. Men's meetings, and banquets, and social hours may be very helpful if carefully planned in full recognition that the men do not part with their normal masculine interests and feelings when they attend such an occasion. Trivial small talk and perfunctory entertainments are likely to bore them, and they will not come again. Subjects of real value to men should be discussed. Rev. S. B. Anderson, D.D., of Portsmouth, O., held a series of meetings for men which revolutionized his church and the town with reference to men in the church. There were addresses on such subjects as Banking, Deposit, Circulation and Protection of Money, by a banker; Wages, How to Invest Small Savings, by a manufacturer; The Personal Care of the Human Body, by a physician, etc. Sunday afternoon meetings for men naturally followed, and the same appreciation of the masculine attitude toward life entered into the spiritual work.

THERE is never a real need to let down the bars to anything that will lessen the honor and reverence belonging to God's house. Some churches have thought to attract and hold men by permitting smoking and other accompanying indulgences at men's meetings in the social rooms of the church. Men who come as visitors to such meetings are not likely to be attracted by the spiritual work of the church, if it has any. On the other hand, the men who already are members of the church feel a distinct lowering of their own standard as they join in the soiling of the sanctuary.

The Church must have a high and earnest purpose in its work with men; it must give the men themselves serious and earnest work to do; it must treat them as men; it must set before them in its own membership the ideals and examples of Christian gentlemen; it must make the fellowship of the church clean, vital, brotherly; and then the men from without shall come in and bear their part, that they may receive their share of the blessing which belongs to God's house.

Is It King Ahab's Library?

NOT long since, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published a short account of the discovery of what purports to be the royal library of Ahab, King of Israel. Further details of the discoveries are now available, as in a comprehensive article in The Jewish Chronicle of January 27 Dr. A. S. Yahuda of Berlin reviews the progress made in excavation in the Near East—in Assyria, Babylonia, Asia Minor, and Egypt—and then gives particular attention to the very latest, possibly the most important, discovery of all—100 clay tablets written in ancient Hebrew, dug up in Samaria. The discovery was made by Professor George Andrew Reisner. Of it Dr. Yahuda writes in part as follows:

"On one of the tablets is reported to have been found a letter from an Assyrian king to King Ahab of Israel. The language is Assyrian, but the writing, according to one report, cuneiform, according to another, old Hebrew. As to the name of the Assyrian king, nothing is so far known, but should the letter be really that of an Assyrian king there can be no doubt that it must be Assurbanipal (B.C. 884-860) or his son Shalmaneser II. (B.C. 859-825), who were contemporaries of Omri and Ahab, (B.C. 900-854). In any case, the discovery of the letter gives ground for the probable belief that the whole find emanates from the archives of King Ahab himself or from those of a royal scribe.

"This probability is strengthened by the fact that a number of the tablets contain an exhaustive inventory of the furniture of the royal palace. As to the contents of the remaining documents, which include some sale and commercial contracts, we shall probably learn soon from the lucky finder himself. Taking it all around, this find may be described as the most important discovery yet made in the Holy Land.

"Perhaps one day from the ruins of Samaria men may succeed in finding the remains of those castles and palaces of which Amos and Hosea gave such a vivid description—perhaps even an ivory palace which the architectural zeal of Ahab himself had erected (I. Kings, 22: 39). But primarily our eyes are not directed to the remains of such Israelitish monuments. In the Holy Land we expect less the discovery of colossal buildings and gigantic royal statues, and still less boastful inscriptions, in which the most shameful deeds of unprincipled vandalism are apostrophized, such as we are accustomed to read on the monuments of Assyrian and Egyptian usurpers. Such inscriptions, which are in some cases the only sources for our knowledge of the history of those rulers, can hardly have been used as sources by the authors of the Biblical records.

"What, then, we expect from the new finds in the Holy Land is the discovery of documents which will augment our store of the spiritual treasures of ancient Israel. For neither palaces nor temples, neither pillars nor statues cut out of the solid rock and hewn into shape by the hand of men, constituted the greatness of Israel."

Traveling in Ceylon

See illustration on cover page

OUR cover is a picture of Professor James Ricalton, an American photographer and traveler, as he journeys through Ceylon on one of the primitive bullock carts still in use on that island. The tall Cingalese, standing by the animal, is an elephant-keeper for a native dignitary. He has consented to pose for the picture. As the animal is fat and lazy, the mode of transit is necessarily slow, especially in the hill country, where the roads are rough and narrow, winding sinuously through dense forests.

PITTSBURG'S PENNY LUNCHES

A GROUP of charitable women have started a new philanthropic movement in Pittsburg. This takes the form of penny lunches for poor public school children. There are over one million people in Allegheny County, Pa., and it is in some respects the most wonderful industrial centre in the world. The great coal, coke, iron, steel and glass industries bring hundreds of thousands of new people, especially immigrants, to Pittsburg and its surrounding towns. Hard times and business depressions that cause the shutting down of mills and factories, bring hardships and suffering to the poorer sections of this great community. So it happens that many children who attend the public schools are not well fed. Hundreds go to school without any breakfast. Many lack food because of the dissipations of the father. Hundreds of mothers go to work away from home early in the morning, leaving the children alone. The result is they get no breakfast or shift for themselves, have very little food, and even that miserably prepared. The poor are often ignorant of the value of foods, and they are easily led to buy inferior food-stuffs, so that their children, though perhaps not hungry, are poorly nourished.

A group of physicians recently visited our public schools and examined each child physically. Many were found to be suffering from inanition, which is exhaustion from lack of nourishment. This has excited the sympathy of many public-spirited women, and remedial agencies have been set in operation. The penny lunches for the poor children in our public schools are the tangible evidence of this sympathy. The Columbian Council of Jewish Women inaugurated the movement. The scheme was recently tried out in the Springfield public school. A separate room in the school building was fitted up by the board of control with a row of cupboards for the dishes and cooking utensils, tables, chairs and benches. The Springfield school is in one of the poorest sections of the city, where there are many poor families and many of foreign-speaking people. Of the two hundred and fifty children in the school fully one hundred and fifty or more patronized the first of the penny lunches. As the school board and the public school teachers are in hearty sympathy with the movement, the children were dismissed at 11.45 A.M. so that they could go to the lunch-room. This was open to all, whether from well-to-do or from the poorest families. A penny is charged for the lunch, so that the poorest child will feel that he is independent and is paying for what he gets. The food is good and wholesome and sold much below cost. But the whole thing is worked so that the children do not realize that it is a charity. Think of these prices! "Hot meat sandwich for one cent. Cup of cocoa, one cent. Ginger-snaps and a banana, one cent."

The Penny Lunch in the Springfield School

It was a scene of bustle and delight when the children trooped gaily into the big lunch-room. Smiling women delivered the delicious edibles into the outstretched hands of the children, who varied in age from six to fifteen. The next day the menu was changed to a bowl of hot soup and piece of bread, a baked potato, an orange and a big cup of fresh milk, each to be had for a cent. Every child who goes to the new restaurant is furnished with a tin cup, a spoon, and a plate, and is advised to sit down and eat slowly. The children are as delighted with the hot and delicious food as when they attend a picnic. Their exclamations of joy repay the ladies for all their hard work. Many of the children seem famished, and it is a joy to see them eat this wholesome and nutritious food.

At the range stood an accomplished cook, whose duty it was to serve the viands piping hot. Scores of children asked with incredulous looks: "Is it goin' to be as good as this to-morrow?" "Just as good, my dears," was the answer. Those in charge hope that this is just the beginning of the penny lunch project in Pittsburg. Each women's club in the city will be asked to do the same philanthropic work in those public schools in the city where there are children from poor families. It is believed that the penny lunches will lessen truancy, as they have done in Chicago and Philadelphia. The health of these underfed children will improve, and as a result their mental faculties will brighten. There is great hope that the board of education will help in the passage of a law providing for the lunches in all schools in the city. The noon hour of hundreds of children has been joyless; now it will be filled with gladness and fun.

This is a true philanthropy, for the children of the poor have many heavy burdens to carry on weak and immature shoulders. Truant officers in Pittsburg tell pitiable stories of hunger and want keeping many children from attending school, driving many of tender years to seek work, and preventing the progress of hundreds of others who are too weak to study or to work. The generous and kind-hearted Jewish women who started the first penny lunches in Pittsburg were fully paid in seeing the children of every race and color crowding the feast-room and satisfying their hunger with the good things provided. This is practical Christianity, and means much for the future of these children, physically, morally, and intellectually. Jesus said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me." And we must remember that Christ also fed the multitudes, and there were in those crowds thousands of tired mothers and hungry and crying children. "He left us an example that we should follow in his steps."

FESTIVAL DAYS IN OLD JAPAN

customs, etc., is sure to strike the visitor as soon as he learns anything of the life of the people.

At a recent great religious festival, the entire town took part in a great celebration. From one end of the main street to the other, both sides were lined with cherry trees, whose foliage the autumn winds had already driven away, but which the Japanese, of dexterous fingers, had beautifully decorated with many-colored maple leaves. This display in the little, narrow, clean streets, with crowds of gayly dressed grown people and happy children running to the bazaars and shops, formed a typical festival scene of this great land of little things. But equally gay was the presentation at night, when great glowing lanterns, like fiery racemes, strung thickly on either side of the street, reminded one of some fairyland. There was but one house on the main street which by such decorations did not manifest its sympathy with this idol festival. At our chapel we opened all the front, and four of us preached alternately for hours to the passing crowds.

Farther on, in the temple courts of the god in whose honor this festival was held, old and new Japan met in conglomeration. Here in booths were cinematograph shows and graphophone concerts, and over yonder zealous devotees at the shrines, with clapping of hands, were striving to wake up the gods. A few steps away the performers on the old-fashioned Japanese banjo, the samisen, though with but a monotonous thum-thum, like spell-binders, held the crowds. On top of a high scaffolding, composed of slender pine poles, sat a man pounding a barrel-shaped, unmusical drum, invoking the favor of the gods in behalf of the burly wrestlers performing in a compound just below. In other little booths cheap candies, toys and gaudy little novelties were sold for a few pennies each to the eager, pleasure-loving crowds that thronged into town from the remotest villages of the interior.

I must not slight the modern brass band. Their predecessors are yet known, marching tandem through the streets, beating various-shaped metals and a drum or two. The whole outfit reminds one of youngsters beating tinpans. This modern brass band, however, has somewhat improved upon things and seems to be a better drawing force. Such a band usually consists of three or four instruments, a bass and a snare drum, a bass horn, and sometimes a cornet. The music is various and often at variance.

A few days before this festival began, I caught three or four men practising on a band-stand in the park. The two men with the drums were quite adept, but they needed just one more instrument, and the cheapest they had found was a little baby accordion. They were evidently taking great pains to initiate a third man into the art of playing upon it. Their instructions were to draw it back and forth in accompaniment with their drums! I did not linger till they got through. The efforts of this new performer were a little too original for me.

Of course these brass bands cannot be very "choicy" since their selections are usually confined to "John Brown's Body" and "Marching Through Georgia," with a few Japanese ditties, and as some one has said, "They play them with a fine disregard of appropriateness, as wedding marches as well as funeral consolations." By no means are all Japanese unskilled in music, for one sees some here and there who with the proper culture would, in vocal as well as instrumental music, prove themselves very proficient. Among the Christians and their pastors, where such a musical deficiency exists, it is more than atoned for by their devotion and zeal.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—BY A VOTE of 46 to 40, the United States Senate on March 1 refused to unseat Senator William Lorimer of Illinois, thus ending a long and bitter fight which has been waged for nearly a year.

—DR. SNOW of the Cancer Hospital, London, who is at present in this country, makes the statement that vivisection has no place in medical science and has never achieved the slightest beneficial result for the human race. He says that the organism of animals is so different from that of humans, that no direct inference can be drawn from the observation of similar phenomena in the two species.

—DR. SIEGERT of Berlin is about to construct an airship with a view to flying over the Sahara Desert in Africa. Great stretches of this vast sandy waste have never been explored, and the German scientist is taking this way of setting at rest forever the many mysterious legends and stories of lost cities, brazen walls and hoards of buried treasure. The currents of hot air will be the great difficulty the aeronaut will have to overcome in his investigations.

—AUSTRALIA HAS TAKEN a decided stand on foreign trusts getting a foothold in that country. Several representatives of the American Meat Trust have been in Australia several months trying to organize a combine there, but as soon as the Commonwealth government became aware of the fact it was made known that drastic measures would be taken to prohibit all operations. Australia has always frowned on monopolies of any kind, believing that it is a wise policy to give the small merchants and traders a chance.

—THE GREAT Hungarian statesman Count Apponyi is visiting this country as the apostle of a universal peace movement, and many of us are looking forward to the dawn of a national millennium when the countries of the world shall unite in a common federation. However, it seems that some countries are not at all sanguine that the dove of pence will soon spread its wings over a united world. The Austrian and Hungarian delegations have just passed their naval estimate bill which, among other things, appropriates $35,000,000 for battleships to be built within the next five years. In all, thirty-six war monsters are projected in Europe at the present time.

An Important Railroad Decision

THE two unanimous decisions of the Inter-State Commerce Commission, which were handed down by Commissioners Prouty and Lane late in February, came as a great surprise to railway officials and attorneys and as a great victory for the shippers. In these decisions the Commerce Commission has declared against the proposed increase in freight rates in the Official Classification, and the Western Traffic Association territory which the railroads in those organizations have been attempting since early last summer to put into effect. Practically all the roads east of the Missouri River and north of the Ohio are affected by the decision in the Official Classification territory case, and all the roads in the Great Middle West by the other decision. That for the Eastern roads was handed down by Commissioner Prouty and for the Western by Commissioner Lane. Both are sweeping in their findings. For the first time in the history of the country the burden of proof in proposed increases in rates was shifted to the railroads, and they failed absolutely to make out their cases.

The decisions of the Commissioners are voluminous, the first running to seventy-eight printed pages, and the second to forty-eight. They cover, in a general way, pretty much the same ground. Each Commissioner has gone thoroughly over the great record of testimony taken in the long hearings, and each goes in detail into his consideration of the needs of the roads in the territory affected by his decision.

The two reports consider the roads' allegation of need of greater revenue for the support of railroad credit and for accumulating larger surpluses. They consider also the asserted right of a railroad to increase rates because of increased value; the railroad theory of rate making; the tendency and effect of railroad regulation by the Federal Government; the cost of service as a factor in making rates; the value of railroads on the basis of the cost of reproduction; increases in the cost of material, fuel and labor, and the experience of the roads during the last six months under increased wage schedules. Commissioner Lane went fully into each of these matters. Commissioner Prouty took up for detailed consideration the affairs of each of three great railroad systems in his territory, the New York Central, Baltimore & Ohio, and Pennsylvania.

Franklin K. Lane

Charles A. Prouty

At practically all points the conclusions expressed by the two Commissioners coincide.

The Commission does not now make a definite order in the case. It simply notifies the railroads concerned that it disapproves of the proposed increases and that if by March 10 they have not withdrawn the new tariffs the Commission will further suspend them, make appropriate finding, and issue an order directing the maintenance of the present rates for a period of two years. This leaves nothing in the present situation on which the railroads can get into court. But as soon as the formal order of the Commission for the continuance of the present rates is made the roads can go into the new Commerce Court and sue out an injunction restraining the Commission from putting that order in force. In such a proceeding the Commerce Commission will raise the point that the finding made in the reports filed yesterday was in effect nothing but a finding of fact, and that under the recent decisions of the Supreme Court the Commission is made final in its decisions as to questions of fact. Whichever side wins in that case the matter will, of course, go to the Supreme Court, and this will probably be the first case in the final determination of the power and jurisdiction of the new Commerce Court.

Though the railroad attorneys were greatly surprised by the findings, the opinion prevalent at the Commission was that the lines will readily adjust themselves to the new order of things. It is believed that they will operate from a safer position in the future, owing to the fact that they thoroughly realize now their position. It is further believed that one of the results will be a determined attempt to improve management and a consequent reduction of expenses.

The effect is that no railroad can raise rates abitrarily in the future. The fact that they are not paying high dividends or are not accumulating surpluses will not be taken as grounds, in themselves, for future raises. The lines must show that specific rates are so low that they are actually losing money in transporting certain parcels of freight.

The decisions are expected to have the most far-reaching results both to the railroads and the shippers and ultimately to the consumer. While the cases at issue refer to but a limited zone of the country, the precedent established to-day will be felt by every commerce carrier in the country.

Her Gift to Mont-Lawn

A SWEET-FACED lady called at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offices in the Bible House one day last week and asked "to see the chairman of the Committee in charge of the Memorial to Dr. Klopsch. I wish to make my contribution to the Memorial Fund," she said quietly, and added, "and I have a surprise in store for you." Then, seated in the reception room, she told this remarkable story of woman's love and perseverance. Her name is Mrs. E. J. Kruse, of Brooklyn.

"My mother, Mrs. John Soper, has been for many years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and I know the paper well. I have been particularly interested in Dr. Klopsch's work among the children of the tenements. It was Dr. Klopsch, was it not, who had the words inscribed over the gates of Mont-Lawn 'I love God and little children'?"

As she proceeded her eyes filled with tears. "I had a son. He was an only child, who was very dear to my husband and myself; but God took him from us years ago. Now, I wish to know whether I could not have his name placed as a memorial on one of the tablets in the Children's Temple at Mont-Lawn?"

On being told that this could be done, and the name put on the tablet, as she desired, provided the requirements of the endowment were met with, she said:

"I said I had a surprise for you. Now, you say ten subscribers is enough to secure his name on the tablet; but I have over fifty," and the gentle face lighted up as she spoke. We assured her that fifty would entitle her to have her own and her husband's name on the tablet, in addition to that of her son, which she heard with evident pleasure.

"I had not thought of that," she said; "but I had in mind to get my boy's name on the tablet in memory of him, and I am glad that you tell me that it can be done."

She was shown a photograph of the beautiful Children's Temple at Mont-Lawn and also one of the interior, and the location of the tablets was indicated. Mrs. Kruse was greatly interested. "I hope to go to Mont-Lawn next summer, God willing, and see the beautiful Temple. What a wonderful place it must be! I am glad my boy's name can go on the tablet." She then handed over her list of fifty-six names of new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at $1.50 each, of which, according to the promise made by this journal to its readers, one-half goes toward the endowment of Mont-Lawn. Mrs. Kruse said she meant to press on until she reached the 100-subscription mark. When the tablets containing the names of the Patrons who have helped to endow Mont-Lawn and who have worked the hardest are placed in position, her name, that of her husband and also her son's name will be there among the many who have qualified as Patrons.

We have published the above incident because it conveys so truly the attitude which we have wanted our readers to assume toward the Klopsch Memorial. We have repeated constantly that it is not your money so much as your influence that we want. Mrs. Kruse has not contributed one cent of her own money toward the Klopsch Memorial, but by her interest and activity she has been the means not only of adding $42 to the fund, but she has been successful in extending the influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by placing it in 56 new households for a year to come. If every one of our subscribers had accomplished even one-fiftieth of what Mrs. Kruse has accomplished, the Klopsch Memorial would be assured forever, and the influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would be many times greater than it is now.

We said last week that we could not extend the time limit of the Memorial beyond March 7, but we have received so many letters asking for a further respite in the matter of obtaining subscriptions, that we are impelled to grant the following:

If any one of our subscribers, who has already obtained some subscriptions and desires to complete a list of ten so as to become a Patron, will send in a written agreement to obtain the remainder of the list within two months of March 7, we will credit half of the money so obtained to the Klopsch Memorial, and the sender of the list will become a Patron.

Up to time of going to press 3,466 new yearly subscriptions have been received on account of the Klopsch Memorial.

Patrons who have sent in ten or more subscriptions and whose names will be inscribed on tablets in the Children's Temple at Mont-Lawn:

General Notes

—IN CONNECTION with a revision of the Criminal Code in Nevada a law is being proposed under which a murderer would have his choice of poison or the rope. In case of his choosing the former he would be compelled to take the most deadly of poisons—hydrocyanic acid, one drop of which causes instant death. This course would be regarded with repugnance by all Christian people, as by it the unfortunate criminal would be necessitated to commit suicide—the unforgivable crime. Under no circumstances has any one liberty to take his own life.

—THE TRAMP nuisance in this country is assuming such vast proportions that it is probable the government will soon be asked to take some measures to abate it. The loss to property entailed by the idle fraternity, not to mention the waste incurred by consumption with nothing in way of return, amounts to a vast sum annually. It is estimated that it costs the railways $25,000,000 yearly in fares to transport hoboes free from point to point. But it requires a much larger sum to make good the damage done to rolling stock and property along the lines of railroad by these predatory social bandits who "neither toil nor spin."

—PREMIER BRIAND, who succeeded Clemenceau as head of the French Cabinet in July, 1909, tendered the resignation of his ministry to President Fallieres on February 27. Briand is a young man and an able statesman, but he became weary of the constant bickerings in Parliament and the intrigues of those who nominally supporting him were really inimical to his policies on the outside. The Socialists especially, with whom Briand had been formerly associated, made the situation very unpleasant for him. They attacked him fiercely on the ground that he had not enforced the laws against the religious congregations. Antoine Emmanuel Ernest Monis will head the new Parliament. He is a lawyer and has sat in the Senate for Gironde since 1891. He was Minister of Justice in the Cabinet of Waldeck-Rousseau and signed the decree convoking the high court to try the Royalist plotters against the Republic in 1899. In politics Monis is a Radical Republican, but he is said to be acceptable to the Socialist section.

Our Readers' Great Gift to China

WE EXTEND our congratulations to the great number of readers of this journal who are helping China in the present famine. Their gift of over a million pounds of American flour, which is now speeding across the Pacific on the transport Buford, will reach Chin-kiang in ample time to be of the greatest value in saving life. Their contributions will continue to be cabled through our State Department and thus with both hands they will be doing the Master's service. We ask their prayers for a quick voyage and safe arrival for the foodship. She is the sixth of a fleet of famine steamers which they have loaded up with food for other lands. May the Buford's mission redound as fully to the glory of God and the good of suffering humanity as did that of her predecessors, the Leo, the Everett, the Quito, the Conemaugh, and the Logan.

Capital Punishment Again

NEVADA'S legislature is considering the passage of a law by which a criminal under sentence of death has the choice of hanging or poisoning by hydrocyanic acid, as the means of making his exit from the world. In these days of electrocution where the death penalty is still in force, and of life sentences where it has been abolished, it seems like a reversion to mediæval methods to indicate the gallows or poison for capital punishment. This old world has run the horrible gamut of legal murder. It has tried to solve the gloomy problem variously by the guillotine, the garrote, the headsman's axe, poison, the gallows and sometimes by methods even more repulsive than any of these. Our more civilized and humane age has practically rejected all of them, as belonging to conditions bordering on barbarism. It is difficult to understand why Nevada, one of the great group of intelligent States, should consider such a law advisable. Hanging is certainly the most brutal of all the modern forms of capital punishment. Besides, experience has shown that it does not appreciably deter criminals or lessen capital crimes. Unquestionably, the least objectionable method of disposing of such offenders is electrocution. There is a growing sentiment in many communities in favor of the total abolition of the death penalty, although it may be many years before society takes the advanced view that legal killing is after all but poor satisfaction for a crime and that as a civilized Christian people, no matter what the provocation, we should not destroy that which we are powerless to create or restore. If human life must be taken, it should be done legally, sanely, swiftly and painlessly; but it is surely a contravention of all the teachings of our civilization that the criminal should be allowed to be his own executioner, as seems to be contemplated in the crude Nevada statute.

The Passion for Souls

DR. J. H. JOWETT'S ministerial advent in New York as the pastor of the famous Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in the heart of millionairedom, is commented upon by the religious and secular press as a notable event. Some regard it as remarkable that a successful preacher should leave a large and influential church in England to undertake the risk of an experiment here among strangers, especially as we have had several instances of imported preachers who were only moderately successful. Those who know Dr. Jowett best and who have come into close personal contact with his work in Carr's Lane, Birmingham, throw a light on the subject which gives a better view of his motive in making the change. They assure us that no preacher was ever less of a notoriety seeker; that he has no ambition to be known as a great preacher in the popular "fashionable" sense of the term, and that he is simply an earnest soul-winner, whose zeal for his work has led him to seek a new field where he may be the means of doing good service.

That Dr. Jowett has rare gifts is sufficiently proved by the spiritual blessing which has followed his efforts in the English pastorate. Whether these gifts will bear transplanting — yet to be demonstrated. Some foreign pastors who were notable successes at home have failed here through their inability to comprehend American character and to fit themselves well into their new surroundings. Some, immediately on their arrival and before they knew even the city streets, have launched out boldly on lines of ministerial activity that gave little promise of substantial results. Their limited opportunities to grasp the new situation proved a serious handicap, and their criticisms were not always just or wise. They had gone outside of their natural environment and the sources of their old-time power seemed to have been left behind them. But if Dr. Jowett has the true passion for souls, as his friends assert, he will rise superior to such disadvantages. The clear Gospel note is never misunderstood. It is always sure of a welcome, on whichever side of the ocean it may be preached. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD extends to Dr. Jowett a cordial welcome and hopes to print a sermon from him occasionally—a sound, true Gospel sermon, such as none can misinterpret. Whether he preach to the Fifth Avenue millionaire, to the poor of the East Side, or to the unfortunate men of the Bowery Mission, may he never fail to lift up the Cross to sinners and to show forth God's love for fallen man. We like rather to think of him as preaching to an audience of miners, or a hillside gathering of shepherds—as he has so often done in the past years—than as the high-salaried minister of one of the richest churches in America. Let him not forget that it was the "common people" who heard the Master gladly.

Dangers of Science

THE recent visit to this country of the distinguished English scientist, Dr. Herbert Snow, for nearly thirty years the head of the Brompton (London) cancer hospital, has reawakened public interest in vivisection. Dr. Snow points out that the sub-human animal creation is so vastly different from man that no useful deductions to the one can be made by experiment on the other. Thus cats and rabbits are poisoned by lemonade, so wholesome for man. Salt kills chickens. Prussic acid can be given to horses and hyenas with impunity. Rabbits eat deadly nightshade, while goats thrive on tobacco and hemlock. A grain of morphine will kill a man, but a pigeon can take twelve grains without effect. Against sera Dr. Snow is especially bitter. He says that no serum can be safely kept more than two or three days. Therefore sera must be adulterated with some powerful preservative, like carbolic acid, iodine, lysol or formalin. The results of inoculating patients with even minute quantities of these drugs are usually bad, and dwarf those of the sera. He insists that the diphtheria antitoxin has produced increased mortality, while the plague and hydrophobia sera have had even worse results. Our best authorities may consider the statements of Dr. Snow as too sweeping with regard to his attitude toward vivisection, against which he is specially bitter. A conservative view would seem to be that it should not be permitted to be done as now, by unauthorized and unqualified persons and without supervision.

Thank God for Laughter

LORD CHESTERFIELD was acknowledged to be, in his time, the supreme authority on questions of good manners. We may be quite content, however, that his views on laughter are as thoroughly obsolete now as the old idea that the earth is flat. In his Principles of Politeness, he wrote that hearty laughter "is a sure sign of a weak mind, and no less characteristic of a low education. It is the manner in which low-bred men express their silly joy at silly things, and they call it being merry. A man may smile; but if he would be thought a gentleman and a man of sense, he should by no means laugh."

Contrast with this a delightful incident of two great preachers. Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, the celebrated Brooklyn divine, was visiting the famous London preacher, Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon. After a hard day of work and serious discussions, these two mighty men of God went out into the country together for a holiday. They roamed the fields in high spirits like boys let loose from school, chatting and laughing and free from care. Dr. Cuyler had just told a story at which Pastor Spurgeon laughed uproariously. Then suddenly he turned to Dr. Cuyler and exclaimed, "Theodore, let's kneel down and thank God for laughter!" And there, on the green carpet of grass, under the trees, two of the world's greatest men knelt and thanked the dear Lord for the bright and joyous gift of laughter. "God never gave a man a greater gift," says Marshall P. Wilder, "than the power to make others laugh, unless it is the privilege of laughing himself. We honor, revere, admire our great soldiers, statesmen, and men of letters; but we love the man who makes us laugh. The laugh-maker is a public benefactor, for laughter is the salt of life, and keeps the whole dish sweet."

How much need there is, these days, of anything that will keep the whole dish of life sweet! The grinding, and the crushing, and the greed in business, the jealousies and misunderstandings in social and even church life, the bickerings that disturb family serenity do not come out of evil intent. They are the product of stress and strain and friction. The wheels of life are insufficiently lubricated and grow hot. Good, hearty, sweet-spirited laughter is an "oil of gladness," which many times will clean out the grit from the bearings and make the whole machine run more smoothly.

Critical Absurdities

OURS is an iconoclastic age. One after another of our oldest and most cherished ideals is being rudely shattered. Vandal scientists strive to prove to us that there is no such thing as human perfection under the sun. Art is not spared in these onslaughts. The "old masters" are pronounced out of drawing and all wrong in perspective. Even that famous sculpture, the Venus de Milo, is declared to be asymmetric, the left side of the face being more developed by the fraction of a millimetre than the right side, while the nasal septum is actually seven millimetres toward the left; in plain words, that the statue which has been regarded as the sum of artistic perfection in proportion has a crooked nose, and a right eye that is lower than the left. Such astonishingly minute science reminds us of the old lecturing dominie who was strong in astronomical similitudes and calculations. Arcturus, he would declare, "is 792,648,925 miles distant from the sun." "But, dominie," some surprised auditor would interrogate, "how in the world do you arrive at these specific figures?" The answer would come with crushing dignity and the tone of intellectual superiority: "I assert it, sir; disprove it if you can." To measure up the world of art according to the new canons of the critics would be about as difficult as to run a tapeline among the stars.

Lace-making for Royalty

PREPARATIONS are going on in Great Britain for the coronation ceremonies in June. London is already in a fever of excitement—hustle and bustle everywhere. The shops have put in immense stocks of merchandise in anticipation of unprecedented sales. All kinds of tradesmen, mechanics and artisans are busy. In the dressmaking and millinery lines never before has there been such intense application to business. As has been announced, all the royal garments for the coronation will be exclusively of English workmanship and manufacture. British subjects in this respect also intend to emulate their king and queen and patronize only home-made goods. The royal robe for Queen Mary is now being finished by a London establishment. Probably the greatest dress feature of the coronation and the one which will likely elicit the most admiration will be the beautiful Honiton lace draperies which the deft, juvenile hands of little girls are now fashioning in the village of Honiton in Devonshire. Honiton lace is world-famous, rivaling in delicate tracery, fanciful design and rich texture the exquisite Irish product so well known in all lands. The population of Honiton is about 3,000. The people have been engaged in lace-making since the time of Queen Elizabeth. Even the children are skilled adepts in the art. Young girls can make a very good livelihood by their nimble fingers. Our illustration shows some of them at work on the delicate fabrics. The order by Her Majesty Queen Mary is reckoned a great honor by the simple village folk, and best efforts are being put forth to fill it in a manner which will gain still greater fame for Honiton as a lace-making centre. The manufacture of linen into garments and decorations was carried to a high degree of perfection in ancient times. The manufacture of articles for coronation in the linen centre suggests what the wise man said about the ideal Jewish woman:

She maketh fine linen, and selleth it. (Prov. 31 : 24.)

Fortune-making Salt

James Hodgkinson, a manufacturing engineer of Salford, England, received from his agent in the United States the other day a cablegram saying, "I have sold the American rights to an American-Canadian syndicate for $5,000,000 and a royalty." This message referred to an invention of Mr. Hodgkinson, a man about seventy years of age, who after four years of investigation and experiment discovered a new method for the manufacture of salt which it is said will revolutionize the salt industry of the world. The invention makes a single fire heat salt pans instead of seven fires for the same purpose, and will produce all varieties of salt and all sizes of crystals simultaneously. The Canadian Pacific Railroad bought the patent rights for Canada and the English Salt Union has an option on the rights in Great Britain. The inventor says: "The effect of the new process will be felt with great force in the United States, where four million five hundred tons are produced annually, the packers of Chicago alone using more than Great Britain's total annual production." The inventor claims that his process will save three out of every four tons of coal now used in salt-making. He says that the plant will be smokeless. Mr. Hodgkinson says that his is about the first improvement in the manufacture of salt since the days of Methuselah. It was a wise plan of the Almighty in creating the earth to make it three-fourths water and only one-fourth land; as great wisdom was manifested in making so much of the three-fourths salt water. Salt is necessary to preserve health and life. This article of purification and ingredient of physical life Christ uses as a symbol of valuable moral and spiritual qualities in the Christian.

Ye are the salt of the earth. (Matt. 5: 13.)

Divine Comfort in Tragedy

A fire started in the upper part of the residence of Rev. Dr. John F. Carson, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn, at six o'clock in the evening recently. The fire spread so rapidly that the stepmother of Mrs. Carson, between eighty and ninety years of age, perished with suffocation, and her dead body was carried from her room. In the attempt to rescue her Mrs. Carson caught fire, and Dr. Carson, rushing into the room, seized his wife in his arms and carried her down stairs to safety. The wife was burned seriously, and it was thought fatally; but it is said that the crisis is now past and that she will recover without permanent injury. The pastor was burned himself, but not seriously. The aged husband of the one who was suffocated came down stairs for his dinner just before the alarm of fire was given and doubtless escaped the fate that befell his wife. On Sunday morning, February 26, Dr. Carson appeared before his people for the first time since the tragedy and spoke words of manliness and pastoral tenderness that melted the great audience to tears and inspired it with new sympathy, resolution and hope. He told his people that in all his twenty-five years of happy pastorate among them he had never been overwhelmed with such expressions of universal sympathy or with deeper feelings of gratitude to those who had been so kind to his dear family and himself in this hour of terrible trial. He spoke beautifully of the aged saint and of her translation, and of the singular manner in which her lonely companion, ninety years of age, had been comforted by human sympathy and by the divine Spirit. He expressed his profound gratitude to God that his beloved wife had been spared, and told them that dark as the shadow had been, and deep as had been the distress, he was certain that God had so sanctified the affliction in the quickening of earthly sympathy, in the leaning hard upon the Saviour's heart, in the thrill of joy which the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, had brought, and in the new resolves for a better life which the fresh vision of the other world had produced, that the fearful calamity had not been in vain. Thus Dr. Carson, whose pastorate is one of the most memorable in America, has sweetened and sanctified his ministry and blessed his people by this simple, trustful and affectionate interpretation of the divine Providence in the tragedy in his home.

Fear thou not; for I am with thee; be not dismayed: for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness. (Isa. 41 : 10.)

Reduces Infant Mortality

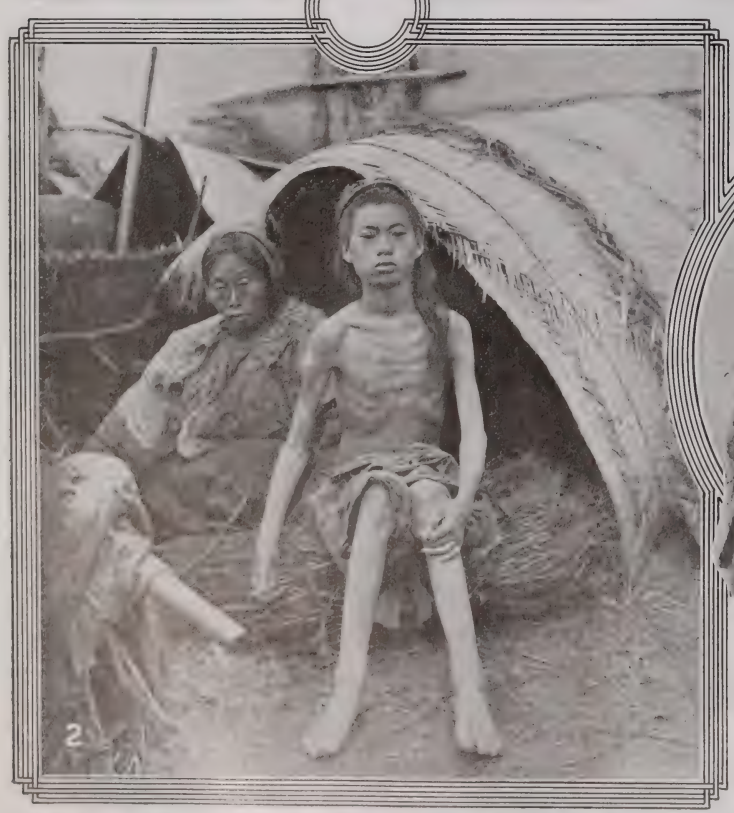
Men of science in Germany and throughout Europe are greatly surprised at the result following the purification of the water supply of Hamburg. The first surprise was that it did not, to a large degree, lessen typhoid fever, indicating that there were other sources of that dread disease to be discovered. The second surprise was that the purification of the city water supply reduced infant mortality a third or more. The infant death rate in Hamburg has been reduced from four hundred and five per thousand births to two hundred and forty per thousand births. In a city like New York, where there are 2,000 births a week, this would mean the saving of more than 17,000 infants a year. It is only comparatively recently that the people of the cities have been aroused to the fearful massacre caused by a filthy water supply. That which is supposed to be the fountain of life has been sent into the homes as streams of death. This scientific discovery in Hamburg will help to stop the murder of the innocents and will contribute much to human happiness and welfare. The men of a certain ancient city which had a deadly water supply came to the prophet and asked him to purify it. He took a vessel of salt, cast it into the fountain, and by the miracle of purification gave them wholesome water.

And he went forth unto the spring of the waters, and cast the salt in there, and said, Thus saith the Lord, I have healed these waters; there shall not be from thence any more death. (II.Kings2:2.)

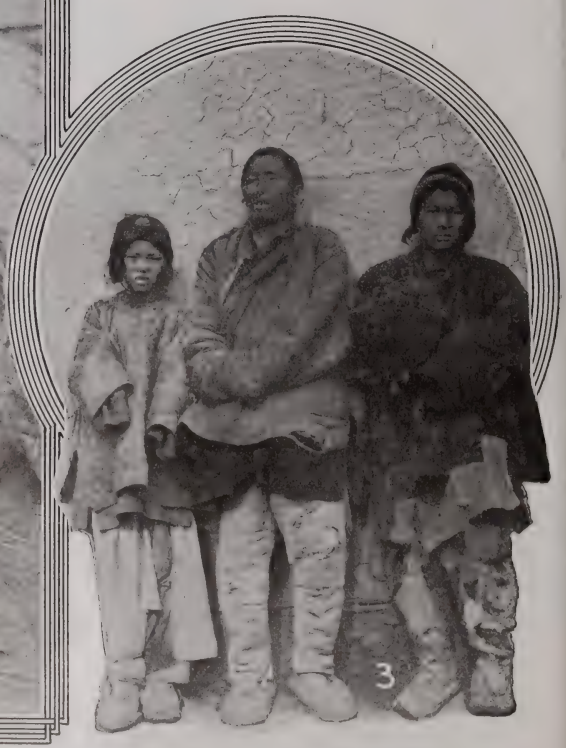
Chewing Gum and Missions

It is stated that there is four times as much money spent each year in this country for chewing gum as for the cause of foreign missions. In a report of the secretary of the Christian Women's Board of Foreign Missions it is claimed that there is spent in this country $16,000,000 a year for chewing gum, $100,000,000 for ice cream soda, $120,000,000 for millinery, $174,000,000 for candy, and only $4,000,000 for the conversion of the heathen. In old-fashioned times, when the preacher took up the missionary collection, he was almost sure to point to the costly raiment and expensive luxuries of the members of the congregation, not omitting the head decorations of the women or the expensive tobacco habit of the men; which treatment of the situation often provoked irritation and prevented the generosity which was desired. The preachers were perfectly right in condemning extravagant or wasteful habits, but it was not the tactful thing to take the missionary day for such criticism. The disparity between the trifling amount paid to foreign missions and that for chewing gum, ice cream soda, candy, etc., makes the missionary collections look ridiculous. The deep awakening of the Laymen's Missionary Movement is bound greatly to increase the subscriptions to foreign missions. The insistence upon the gift of a definite proportion of a Christian's income and the old-fashioned method of the weekly collection in the churches will put the missionary subscriptions closer to the candy, chewing gum and peanut fund.

Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him. (I. Cor. 16: 2.)



New Roadbed



The people of Walla Walla, Wash., use wheat straw as an important ingredient in the making of the roads in their country. Straw has been used for years on the roads of the State The best results were reached when the straw was put on wet and mixed with the soil. By the improved process the roads are ploughed and graded and brought to a crown. When the roadbed has been harrowed and made level the straw is put on to a depth of six inches. A disc cutter is used to cut up the straw and mix it with the earth. If all the straw works into the roadbed more of the material is put on until a cushion is formed. A steam roller packs the earth and straw into a hard mat as durable as stone and a road that will turn off the water if the grade is right. From the experiments already made it is believed that the new process of road-making with straw will be more satisfactory than that by gravel or cinders. The highways were used by the divine penman as symbols of the road leading from the cradle to the grave, and from the starting point of right intention to virtue and to heaven. There is this mention of the desirable pathway:

But covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet show I unto you a more excellent way. (I. Cor. 12: 31.)

A Million Pounds of Flour for China

The "Christian Herald" Readers' Generous Contribution to the "Buford's" Cargo

Begging by the Wayside

First Trainload of "Christian Herald" Flour for China en route to Seattle for Shipment

Homeless and Suffering

GENEROUS American hearts in every State have responded promptly to the appeal of the missionaries now conducting relief operations in the China famine field. Contributions to the Relief Fund have poured in to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in a steady stream. A portion of these gifts has been devoted to the purchase of 11,000 additional sacks of wholesome American flour, and there have been placed on board the troop ship Buford, which now carries a good-sized cargo, 21,000 sacks, equal to more than one million pounds of flour, being the contribution of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, the entire balance of the cargo being purchased with the money raised through the Seattle Commercial Club and the Red Cross.

The Buford floats at the peak of one of her masts THE CHRISTIAN HERALD flag, which has already done service in five previous famine campaigns in distressed lands to which food cargoes have been sent. The flag of the National Red Cross is on the other mast-head. The Buford goes straight to Chinkiang, with a single brief stop at Nagasaki, and we have the assurance of the National Red Cross and the Commercial Club of Seattle that she will arrive in ample time—not later probably than March 25. It was at first proposed that she should go by Manila, but the National Red Cross succeeded in having her make the direct trip by the shortest route, avoiding all delays, so that we may now be assured that America's gift of flour will reach the sufferers at the very crisis of the famine, when it can be used to the best advantage.

The last week of loading at Seattle was an extremely busy one. At the request of the Commercial Club and the Red Cross, and having the assurance that the vessel would be in ample time, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD made a second contribution of 10,000 sacks to the famine cargo, offering to duplicate sack for sack, up to ten thousand sacks, all gifts of flour contributed before the day of sailing. This offer greatly stimulated the contributions through the Red Cross and the Seattle organization, and the cargo was soon sacked and loaded, making a formidable pile in the Buford's hold. At the present famine prices of flour in China, owing to the general scarcity, every pound of the cargo will be equal to at least two pounds of Chinese flour in value. An additional 1,000 sacks was added later. The Buford goes with the prayers of God's people that she may have a safe and speedy voyage, and that her cargo may be the means, under providence, of saving many thousands of lives.

The United States Consul-General at Shanghai sends the following cable dispatch concerning the progress of the great battle now going on in the north against the pneumonic plague:

"SHANGHAI, February 17.

"RED CROSS, WASHINGTON:

"Japanese have checked pneumonic plague in South Mukden, but Manchuria elsewhere is ravaged. Plague spreading in Shantung. None recover. Lungs are infected and death follows in a few hours. A dozen doctors are dead. Harbin reports 250 deaths daily; frozen ground makes burial impossible and there are a half mile of coffins visible. People finally consent to cremation of 4,000. Some improvement at centres, but scattering to villages. Thousand cremated at Kuangchangtzu. Refugees' homes purified by fire.

"WILDER."

A number of governments have united in appointing an International Board of Experts to investigate the cause of the plague and to suggest relief measures. The following countries have already sent experts who have arrived in China, while others are on the way: England has sent Dr. Farrar, son of the celebrated Dean Farrar; France, Dr. Broguet; Japan, Dr. Kitosato; United States, Drs. R. P. Strong and Oscar Teague. Germany and Russia have also made similar appointments. The cost of this investigation will be defrayed by the Chinese Government, the expenses up to the time of the arrival of the physicians being provided by their respective governments. Japan has appropriated 500,000 yen (about $250,000) for the work.

While the fight against the plague is proceeding in the north with varying results, famine stalks unhindered through the south. Letters received from missionaries give many distressing details of the terrible condition of the people. Rev. W. D. Bostick, a missionary in Anhui province, tells of sufferers lying in the snow without a shred of clothing; of shoeless peasants with frozen feet, and of beggars and misery everywhere.

One of the saddest features of the famine is related by Dr. Ross. A straw stuck on a wheelbarrow or any piece of furniture signifies that the article is for sale. "There are children," he writes, "to be seen on the streets with this same sign attached to them. A few days ago I saw in a parent's arms a child with a straw stuck upon it and another following after, with the same sign attached." Another child was sold for one catty of bread (a catty is one and one-third of a pound) half a loaf for a poor little human being!

Rev. Wm. F. Junkin, American Presbyterian minister, has just made a tour of the relief district in Yaowan, where there are 3,000,000 people. He reports a large proportion absolutely destitute. It is the worst famine in fourteen years in that section. It will be the middle of June before any crops can be gathered there. Already several hundred thousand people are reduced to eating roots, sweet potato vines and turnip-tops, which they cook soft, roll into balls and stiffen with a little—a very little—wheat. This wretched diet soon makes them sick; their complexion changes; they become anæmic; their faces take on the awful look of hunger which workers among famine-stricken people know so well, and unless better and more plentiful food be provided for them they die—stomach troubles and weakness being the apparent immediate cause.

Dr. Cochran, another missionary, describes his experience in the Nanking section. He tells of fathers pushing wheel-barrows, with the little ones sick and feeble; mothers following, carrying the babies, and all trudging through snow and slush, sleeping under any shelter they can reach, and slowly starving. Some of these refugees traveled twenty miles or more to the south in the vain hope of getting help.

Alarming reports of the spread of the pneumonic plague continue. It is unquestionably extending southward. Thousands of refugees who have reached Chefoo, in Shantung province, have carried it to that port, where deaths are multiplying. On the two preceding pages will be found a number of new photographs of the famine, just received from China for publication in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

BOYS AND GIRLS

THE ATTIC

ere in the attic are legends
Of many a bygone day;
ith memories gold these tokens old
Were carefully stored away.
ok at Grandma's diary,
Yellow and musty with age:
'is there her love story is written
Violet-scented every page.

wonder if, long years from now,
Some curious maid shall see,
hen looking o'er these ancient gowns,
Some dress that belonged to me.
erhaps it will be my flower-sprigged lawn;
And smoothing it she will say,
The dress my greataunt Helen wore
On graduation day.

"Hey, Little Sunbeam!"

Reproduced by kodakscope in Brown Collotint

How oddly are the sleeves arranged!
How quaint in every way!
Yet Uncle Robert thought not so
That graduation day.
He thought she looked just beautiful,
And told her so, I guess;
For mother says she always loved
This dear old-fashioned dress."

Then she will fold it carefully,
As I am doing this,
And on my faded portrait
She'll softly print a kiss.
And then—is that the bell I hear?
Some one in the hall?
Yes, mother, coming right away!—
Bob must have come to call.

MODEL AEROPLANE BUILDING

Second of a Series of Articles Written Especially for Cozy Corner Boys and Girls by Francis Arnold Collins, Author of "The Boy's Book of Model Aeroplanes"

ANY one who has built paper gliders may attack the problems of the regular model aeroplane with confidence. A little experience n designing and weighting the tiny aper models will be found invaluable. The models may now be increased in ize without fear of going astray, and f course their distance qualities will row in proportion. A good model hould glide fifty to one hundred feet, which gives a very thrilling imitation f the flights of the regular man-arrying aeroplanes.

Hardware Shop and Scrap-bag

THE materials required for these larger models are still very simple. Any strips of wood such as you use for making a kite will answer. Among the best materials are the dowel strips to be had at the hardware stores. They are round, straight of grain, and may be bought of many different diameters. The sticks three-eighths of an inch across are best for the planes, while a single dowel one-half inch in diameter is just the thing to hold them together. You can find material for covering the plane in any family scrap-bag.

The Main Plane or Wing

THE main plane or wing should be three feet in width and ten inches in depth. Cut two dowel strips thirty inches long and two more eight inches in length. To join the ends, mortise slightly and glue them together. A thin brad should be driven through the corner and the joint tied tightly with very heavy thread. It is important that the joints be very neat and the frame perfectly rigid. The second plane should be about half the size of the first, that is, fifteen inches by four inches.

These frames may be covered with some light, thin material. Do not use too thin a cloth, however, since if the air should pass through it, it will ride poorly. The covering may be sewed on one edge and then drawn neatly across and sewed around the other sides. The young aviator will do well to consult his mother or sister before attempting the sewing. Another plan is to glue the cloth to the frame. It does not matter which plan you follow as long as the cloth is stretched without a wrinkle. Be careful to keep the edges smooth, for all this has a direct influence upon the flight.

To Complete Your Glider

BUILD a rectangular frame three feet long by four inches wide. To fasten the planes rigidly to the main sticks, notch them slightly so that they will not slip. Until you have tested out your glider, however, do not fasten the planes permanently, but merely tie them in position. The exact position of the plane on the stick can only be learned by actual experience. Try them in various positions until your model flies steadily on an even keel, when it will be time to nail and glue the planes rigidly in position.

Your model will require considerable weighting, just as in the case of the paper glider. Here again you will be likely to underestimate the cargo your airship will carry. The weight should be fastened at the centre of the front or entering edge of the model. A good plan is to wire a nut or several large nails in position. If your model pitches upward on being thrown, it needs more weight, while if it falls quickly, the weight should be lessened. There is no rule for this, except the rule of thumb. You must work out the problem.

The Trick of Launching

IN LAUNCHING your airship, grasp the centre frame at the point where it balances, and, holding it above your head, throw it forward with a swift, steady motion. You will soon catch the trick. There is a difference of opinion as to whether the plane should be thrown with the larger wing forward or not, but you will probably find the former the easier plan. Never let your aeroplane become loose in the joints or its wings wrinkle and sag. It is only a very shipshape aeroplane which will fly well.

GAMES AND PRIZES

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: Play all you can out of doors now. Build your model aeroplanes and fly them in the wind. Start up all your out-of-door games again. Get together and organize clubs to meet after school and play Hare and Hounds, Follow the Leader, Hop-Scotch, Shinny, Tennis, Prisoner's Base, Country Cat, Duck on the Rock, I Spy, Leap-Frog, Anthony Over, Bull in the Ring, Tag, Fox and Geese, Mulberry Bush, Stilts, Hoops, Tops, Kites and Marbles. Dear O me! Was there ever such a wealth of best games to play? And this is only a beginning. Next week we will fill the Cozy Corner with descriptions of out-of-door games and sports of many kinds, and the week after there will be a page full of work done by boys and girls of the big CHRISTIAN HERALD Family.

"On the Beach" First Prize Winner

Our Good-Night Verse Is:

Thou sendest forth thy Spirit, . . . and thou renewest the face of the earth. The glory of the Lord shall endure forever: the Lord shall rejoice in his works.

Some Merry March Parties

If any Cozy Corner boys and girls would like to have suggestions for an especially jolly Blarney Party, with which to celebrate St. Patrick's Day, or for a perfectly delightful Kite Party, full of gay balloons and paper fishes, birds, ships, wind-mills, butterflies, dragons, or for a Fancy Dress Mi-Carême Frolic, let me know and I will plan one for you.

On March 29

This is the last week of the March Prize Contest.

Remember, my boys and girls, all work must be original. You may each one enter work under any or all of the prize offer "heads." But you must not send other people's drawings or verses. Be sure to send in work of one kind or other. You will be glad that you did. It will be great fun to see the best of it published in the page of Our Boys' and Girls' Own Work on March 29.

SPECIAL MARCH PRIZE CONTEST

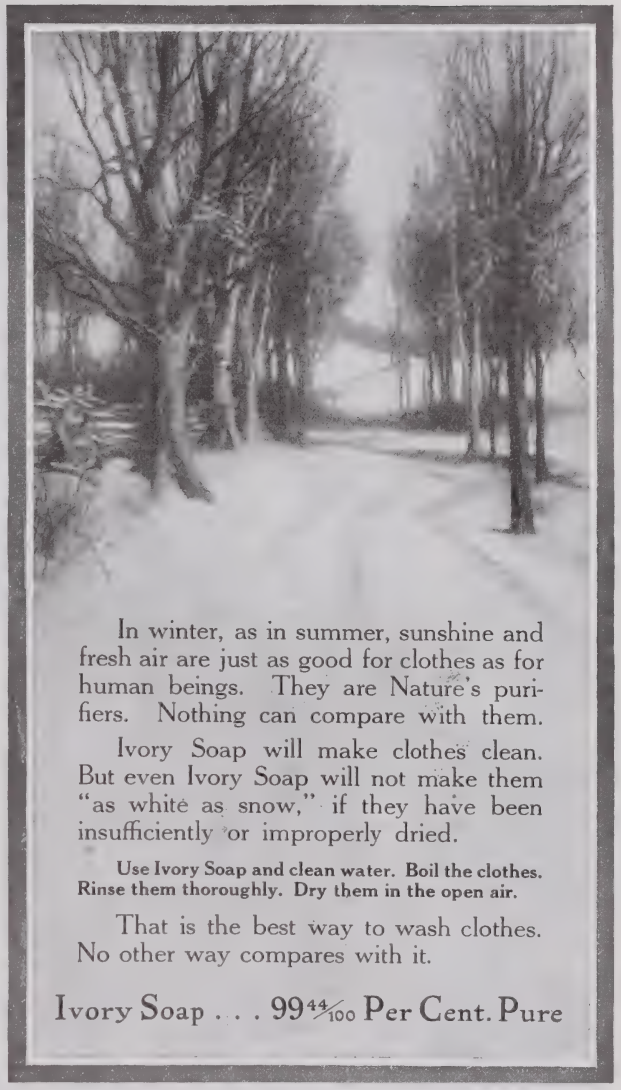
A Gun-metal Watch and Brownie Kodaks

STORIES: For best story in less than 300 words. Subjects: "A Narrow Escape," "April Fool."

VERSE: Subjects: "Little Sister," "A Sunshiny Shower," "Market."

PHOTOGRAPHS AND DRAWINGS: Subjects: A Cozy Corner heading for March, "Mischief," "My Queen."

For best work under any of these heads, we will give a first prize of a gun-metal watch, and five supplementary prizes of Brownie Eastman Kodaks for next good work in order of merit; besides fifty beautiful, extra prizes for work of any kind that is above the average.



For Boys and Girls Under Twelve

For the best copy of either picture in the Heading of this week's Cozy Corner we will give a very beautiful paper doll and ten prizes of smaller but beautiful paper dolls for the next ten copies in order of merit.

Put your name, age and address on all your work, and send it in before March 25 to The Aunt in the Cozy Corner.

Lovingly and faithfully,

OUR COMFORT CORNER

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A Wife's Grievance

THE wife in question is a woman of active temperament, ambitious, energetic, and capable of enthusiasm. Undoubtedly she is sometimes nervous and apparently there is some excuse for what her placid husband and her indolent sons denominate ill temper. When there is work to be done she attacks it with might and main, and it is an unspeakable annoyance to one of her disposition to see her husband fritter away an hour in the morning when work is waiting, in lounging over the fire, reading the newspaper, while her sons dawdle in to breakfast in their shirt sleeves and slippers, when they ought to be up and doing about the farm. Cows are to be milked at night, and the wife is not expected to perform the task, but unless she fairly clamors in the ears of those who ought to do it the work is postponed until the clock strikes nine.

This is a bit of realism from the life of a farmer's wife. After relating her causes of irritation she admits that her husband is kind and loving, and her boys loyal and affectionate, adding that she is thoroughly disheartened, that she can never get ahead, that while others in the county succeed the affairs of her people are in disorder. She concludes an appeal for help by saying: "What can I do except work till I drop?"

It would be as well for her to refrain, so far as she can possibly control herself, from fretting and scolding. What might be effective were it occasional passes by like the idle wind when it has become habitual. The man absorbed in his book or newspaper scarcely hears the stream of talk that goes on in his vicinity, and the boys, accustomed to their mother's nagging, stir neither hand nor foot, let her remonstrate with them as she may. She would better try the effect of passive resistance, ceasing to admonish, and allowing the late sleeper in the morning to slumber until he wakens and the neglected tasks to lie unfinished. She might presently discover that those who ought to be responsible were no longer shifting their responsibility to her weary shoulders. Once a woman has established a family reputation for scolding and complaining her vehemence and emphasis accomplish little.

Tears are equally futile unless they are so seldom indulged in that they awaken amazement and arouse repentance. Few men understand how completely a delicately organized woman, tired in every drop of her blood, is at the mercy of her nerves. If they only understood better they would be quick to lift burdens that are unbearable and to ease grievances that wear into the flesh with the hiss of hot iron.

The Use of Nonsense

THE serious young woman looked up from the volume she was studying, and surveyed her sister with a grave countenance. "What are you giggling over?" she said. "You should not waste your time on nonsense."

The other was laughing over a jest that she had heard, and as she rose and made a courtesy to the student she hummed a foolish verse by Gelett Burgess:

> I never saw a purple cow,
> I never hope to see one;
> And yet I think that anyhow
> I'd rather see than be one.

"That," said Portia, "is an absurd jingle. How can you spend precious time over mere amusement when there is so much trouble in the world?"

Priscilla dimpled. "I am going down to make biscuits for supper," she said, "and I am saving all the funny things I know that I may tell them to grandfather and make him laugh. We don't help the trouble by standing and weeping over the broken pitcher. Do let me have my nonsense, Portia. It has its place in the scheme of things."

Priscilla was right. A sense of humor and a love of fun tide their possessors over some very real sorrows. Austerity has no particular claim to be considered saintly, and folly with its cap and bells once in a while does angelic work. Blessings on the children with their merry laughter. Blessings on the old people who have not forgotten how to be sunny. Take it all in all, this world of ours is not so bad a place. Every season brings its gifts of love from heaven, the skies are oftener blue than gray, the birds sing in the branches, fathers and mothers bend over the cradle, and the joy of life is deeper than the woe.

Books for the Little Children

"HERE are some books which may help a busy mother in entertaining her little children: Bow-Wow and Mew-Mew, The Sunbonnet Baby's Primer, and also The Child's Garden of Verse, by R. L. Stevenson.

"(MRS.) E. R."

"For little children, between three and seven, I recommend The Bear Family at Home and How the Circus Came to Visit Them, by Judge Curtis D. Wilbur. (MRS.) J. H."

Mothers must not overlook the charm of the old-fashioned fairy tale perennially appropriate in the training of children. Imagination should be cultivated and no better means of doing this can be found than the one afforded by the fairy-lore which is found in every nation and has pleased generations. Dear old Mother Goose should be an inmate of every nursery. Songs for the Little Ones at Home, an old favorite, is still in print and should never become obsolete. Little Susie's Six Birthdays and Little Susie's Six Teachers are charming books for children. The Good Wolf, from the versatile pen of Frances Hodgson Burnett, will be read over and over by the fortunate child who receives it as a birthday gift, or by and by discovers it in her Christmas stocking. Mothers should learn how to tell stories themselves. The Bible is a mine of wealth and children should be early acquainted with the stories of Joseph and his brethren, of little Samuel, David and Goliath, Daniel in the lion's den, the three children in the fiery furnace, and other beautiful tales of the Old Testament. Of that sweet story of old, the life of Jesus upon earth, children never tire.

Children's Savings

THE little savings bank into which a small hand slips a penny at a time, and which precedes the opening of an account for the child in the bank of deposit where interest is paid accruing to the child's account, should not be overlooked by the thoughtful parent. The temptation to spend every penny received assails our little ones as in very truth it confronts older people. The windows of the confectioners' shops are filled with candy and sweets and many a penny is dropped into the drawer of the merchant when it should instead be put

"This Opera Cap Won't Wilt; It's Malinette!"

MALINETTE
THE MOIST PROOF MALINE

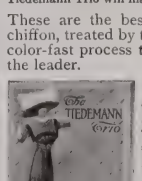
Will you buy a near waterproof maline for your spring and summer hats that will disappoint you?

Or will you insist on getting MALINETTE which has stood the test and which you can individually test before buying and so be sure that the severest wetting will leave it absolutely unharmed?

The tremendous success scored by Malinette, because of wonderful service qualities and attractiveness all its own, has brought out numerous imitations which are only partly waterproof and have an ill odor when damp. These are not waterproofed by the Malinette process at all and cannot compare with Malinette.

All genuine Malinette is 27 inches wide, and is sold from the Malinette trademarked cards only. For all trimming purposes it goes twice as far as ordinary maline, gives the same artistic effects, but lasts longer and costs no more per yard.

Two new sister materials, making up the Tiedemann Trio, are



VEILINETTE
THE MOIST PROOF VEILING

Veiling that will not discolor the face in the wettest weather and that dries out rapidly, without shrinking, to its original crispness and vitality is the kind every woman has been looking for.

CHIFFONETTE
THE MOIST PROOF CHIFFON

Chiffonette holds its color, does not become spotted, is impervious to moisture and will look like new long after ordinary chiffon is in the rag bag. The Tiedemann Trio will make you weather proof.

These are the best grades of veiling and chiffon, treated by the same waterproof and color-fast process that has made Malinette the leader.

The Tiedemann Style and Sample Book

Our new free booklet "The Tiedemann Trio" fully describes these three wonderful materials, shows examples by the world's leading designers and modistes of hats and gowns, and contains samples of the processed materials with which you can make an astonishing and absolute test of their waterproof and color-fast qualities before you buy.

Many Malinette dealers will supply you with this book free. If your dealer does not, write direct to us for it. Every woman will value it who wants to make the most of her spring and summer costumes.

he Maternal Element in Wifely Love

TALKING not long ago with a friend on the subject of disparity f age in marriage, she remarked that ven if a wife were much younger an her husband, she seldom failed bear toward him a protecting ma-rnal attitude. She gave an instance f a happy marriage known to her which the wife was thirty years er husband's junior. The latter was n failing health and needed con-nual tender and watchful care. "She overs over him," said the friend, with the wonderful thoughtfulness nd tireless patience of a devoted nother, although when they go out ogether their appearance resembles hat of father and daughter." In a ontrasting marriage, where the hus-and is in the meridian of early man-ood and the wife an elderly woman, he same caressing gentleness and actful vigilance distinguished her anner toward him.

In this case, there was manifest on er part a sort of humorous indul-ence, as if, instead of being a hus-and, he were a somewhat erratic son hose moods and tenses were to be olerated in the day's work. Great dis-arity in age is, as a rule, a mistake n the comradeship of marriage, al-hough there are exceptions to the ule. Yet it is probably true that in ll marriage the mother element min-gles in the love of the wife. It is he who smooths over asperities, quiet-y leads her unsuspecting husband in he path where she would have him valk, makes up for his omissions in natters social, and sends him forth rom the tranquil shelter of his home o his ever-renewed battle with the outside world. She is not less the erfect wife because there is in her oul some of the primeval sweetness f the mother.

"Like a Gold Mine"

Received the photogravure of Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Baby Calendar and Home Library. The likeness of Dr. Klopsch is inspiring to me. I wish we had more such men. The Baby Calendar is unique and novel, and I am pleased with it. The Home Library is a treasure. It seems like a gold mine to me. Just the thing I have been wanting and needing. I have noted each book and have read some of them and noted the literary merit of the books, and their usefulness to every member of the family is inestimable. Every book is above what I anticipated. THE PURDEN

By Katherine Newlin

UNTIL Magsie went to live with her aunts she never knew that she was a Purden. She knew that she was a funny little Tuck, for her mother had called her that a hundred times. She knew that her face was a brownie-face, and that there were twinkles in her eyes and a brownie-wisp in her hair, for that, too, her mother had told her. And besides she could see the brownie-face and the wisp for herself in the glass. But she could never see the twinkles. Her eyes when they looked at themselves were very big and solemn. Knowing these things did not distress her. Knowing that she was a Purden was different. Magsie could not think what a Purden was and she never dreamed of asking. It was evidently disgraceful. For one aunt had looked her over and had sighed.

"She is every inch a Purden."

And another aunt had looked her over and had frowned.

"Oh, quite a Purden."

And a third aunt had looked her over and had shaken her head.

"Altogether a Purden, I should say."

And a fourth aunt had looked her over and had pressed her lips together.

"She will never be anything but a Purden."

"Dear God," prayed Magsie Lawrence that night before she climbed up into her enormous bed, "don't let me be a Purden any more."

At first she thought that by listening and thinking she would discover what a Purden was; then, by trying very hard, she might learn not to be one. But it was a puzzling matter.

The day she ran out to give a penny and a kiss to the dirty, pleasant wife of the organ-grinder, Aunt Aggie, taking her up to bed in disgrace at noon, turned back to say to the other aunts, "If that isn't like a Purden!"

Magsie resolved never to kiss dirty people again and the next day she refused Aunt Aggie's proffered cheek.

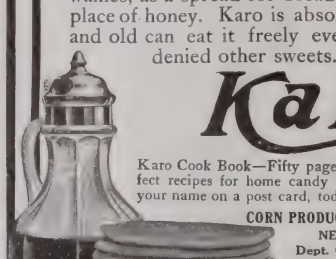
"There's a smut on it, Aunt Aggie," she said.

For this she was put into a corner, and Aunt Selene said, "The saucy little thing! She is a Purden!"

Magsie, in the corner, wept tears of uttermost bewilderment.

She began to think it was the penny-giving that was Purdenish. But when, the next Sunday, she withheld her penny from the plate, she was utterly disgraced and all her pennies were confiscated and put into the box for blind babies. And so it always was. The day she ran downstairs, "clop-clop," for the fun of noise-making, she was a Purden, and the day she stole into the room to boo at the butler, she was even more of a Purden. When she had the giggles during grace, she was a thorough Purden; and when she burst into tears and threw herself on the floor because Aunt Aggie boxed the cat's ears, then, if never before, was she a Purden.

She looked through all the P's in the big dictionary. It took a long time, because Magsie had to spell out each word. But "Purden" was not amongst them. And, listen as she might, no one but the aunts used the word, and they used it only in connection with her. Magsie began to believe that she was the only Purden in the world.



One Sunday a clergyman came to visit the aunts. They were very much excited and Magsie was put into a white dress and made to review her catechism. The clergyman had a very bad cold in his head. The aunts all waited on him and offered him remedies. Magsie was sorry for him.

The clergyman read prayers on Sunday morning. Magsie did not listen very attentively. She knelt by wicker chair and stuck her finger-ips through the holes from under-eath. They looked like little pinky ushions and not like finger-tips at all, nd that was an interesting discovery.

Suddenly Magsie caught a word. She looked up. The clergyman had leared his throat and was repeating he sentence.

"The bemory of themb• is grievous ndo us," he was saying, "the purden f themb is indolerable."

Magsie said "Amen" very loud. She vas frightened. This being a Purden vas a serious matter. Purden was a vord they prayed about. It had to do vith sins. Oh, why was she a Purden?

After the clergyman's visit Magsie rew quite reckless. It was no good rying to be anything but a Purden. t was a useless struggle. She gave p. Magsie was naughty. For the irst time in her life she was really naughty on purpose and she didn't are.

"I may as well be a Purden and njoy myself," she thought.

When the aunts went out, Magsie dressed up. She dressed up in Aunt Selene's clothes, for Aunt Selene was very, very small, almost as small as Magsie. She dressed up and walked about her room. One day she went out into the hall. Another day she went downstairs. A third day she heard the door-bell, and just for fun went down, dressed as she was, to answer it. She had put on Aunt Selene's second-best bonnet and had tied a thick veil over her face. She felt very safe and very much like Aunt Selene. She opened the door and a strange young man stood on the threshold.

"Is this one of the Miss Lawrences?" he asked gently in the tone nice young men use to very tiny old ladies.

Magsie looked up at him through her veil.

"I am Miss Selene," she said. She really did speak like her.

"I may come in?" the young man went on. "You remember me?"

"Oh, perfectly," said Miss Selene politely. "You are the young man——"

"Exactly." The visitor laughed and strode into the drawing-room. "I am the young man you met at the wedding."

Having said this, he looked sad, sat down on the biggest chair he could find and stared at Miss Selene.

"You were going out, weren't you, Miss Lawrence?" he asked.

"I—I had just come in," murmured Miss Selene. She had sat down on the smallest chair she could find, but even then her feet wouldn't touch. However, Miss Selene's skirt hid the stubby little feet.

"Of course," said the young man, "you know whom I have come to see."

"Miss Aggie?"

"Well, yes, certainly. Miss Aggie, too, if she will see me. But I want to see the kid."

"We have a cow," said Miss Selene. "But it hasn't had a kid this year."

The young man's face screwed up a little.

"Oh!" he said. "I—I meant the little girl."

"Magsie?"

"Yes. Little Magsie. What sort of a little girl is it? I am crazy to see her. Lily's little girl!"

Miss Selene's big eyes behind the veil grew large and solemn. She leaned forward.

"I must tell you," she said, in a low shocked voice, "that she is every inch a—a Purden."

The young man flushed.

"Well, what of that?" he asked sharply.

"It is dreadful," Miss Selene's voice wavered. "She can't seem to help it. She is altogether a Purden."

"So was your brother's wife, Magsie's mother, Miss Selene," broke in the young man hotly.

Miss Selene jumped as though he had struck her.

"She wasn't, oh! she wasn't!" she cried piteously. Oh, please say she wasn't!"

The young man had stood up and was looking at her curiously.

"Miss Selene," he said, "I don't think you do know who I am after all. I—I am a Purden myself."

There was a silence.

Magsie's heart was beating fast. She began to fumble at the veil. She must see more clearly this brave young man who, openly and without shame, confessed himself a "Purden." She had forgotten her masquerade. She pulled off bonnet and veil with a jerk. Her hair came down and stood out in brownie-wisps all round her head. Her little face was flushed and her big eyes full of puzzled twinkles.

"Magsie!" cried the young man, and had her in his arms.

He carried her to the window and studied her face from chin to forehead and kissed her hungrily.

"You funny little Tuck!" he said at last. "You are every inch a Purden, bless you!"

"What is it? What is it?" whispered Magsie with her hand against his cheek.

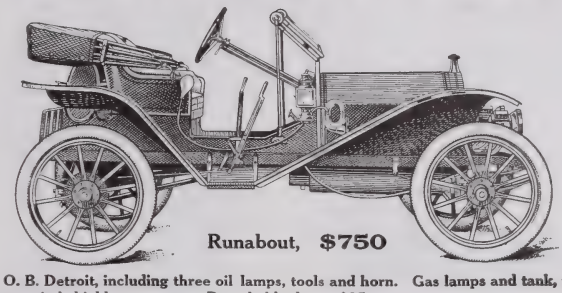
"It was your mother's name, dear. It is my name. And I'll not leave you here to grow up into a Lawrence. Not if I can help it. You are to come and live with me and we will be Purdens together."

"For always?" asked Magsie, hoarse with joy.

"For always. That is," he smiled down into her brownie-face, "until you are tired of being a Purden."

"Oh, I'll never be tired of it. Never. Never. Never. I will be a Purden all my life!"

The Value of a Trade-mark



DID it ever occur to you how much advertising has done to increase the value of the trade-mark? After, all, a merchant's wares are best known by their quality, and their quality may be accepted upon the faith one has n the trade-mark which accompanies it. For instance, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD recently arranged to send 10,000 sacks of flour to the starving people of China, nd in announcing this fact, it was stated that "Gold Medal Flour" had been ent.

Now as a matter of fact, while probably any kind of flour would have been cceptable to the famine-stricken, still the mention of the particular brand was guarantee that flour of good quality had been sent to China; and so the eneral advertiser, in seeking for some means whereby his customers may be ure of always obtaining goods of the best quality, generally adopts for those oods a specific trade-mark.

Without the trade-mark advertisers would often be at a loss to specify he qualities of their goods, and customers living at a distance would be hard ut to it to describe many articles of merchandise which are now known by a ord or a symbol.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE HRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, ho must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the dvertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement. This guarantee does not apply to nvestment advertisements.

Hupmobile

GUARANTEED FOR LIFE

Again and again in our daily correspondence occurs this sentence:

"An owner recommends your car to me."

In former advertisements we have told you in detail about the advantages of the Hupmobile.

But no argument can be as convincing as those you will hear from Hupmobile owners.

The Hupmobile is a splendid car for your city, farm or country use. Its light weight is easy on tires and will carry you through places where a heavier car cannot go.

On account of its low consumption of gasoline; its light weight and slight tire wear under normal conditions; its simplicity and freedom from trouble and repairs it gives you the very lowest limit of economy in up-keep.

THE GUARANTEE

This guarantee is explicit, unqualified and binding. It covers the entire life of the car, no matter how many different people may own the car. It means that during the life of the car, the HUPP MOTOR CAR COMPANY guarantees the car, in all its parts, and the accessories and equipment, against defect of material or workmanship.

The guarantee reads:

The HUPP MOTOR CAR COMPANY guarantees the Hupmobile from defects in material or workmanship, during the life of the car, and will replace, free of charge, any such defective material when returned to its factory for inspection, transportation prepaid. This guarantee does not cover tires, which are guaranteed by their makers.

A TYPICAL MACY VALUE

No one ever put so much worth in a Shirt Waist to be sold at 99c as we are giving you in the waist shown in this picture. Some expert waist men said we would be giving big value if we sold it at $1.49; another said it equalled waists sold in other New York stores at $1.98—not one of them believed it possible for us to sell a waist of this quality at 99¢

63 A 1008—This Lingerie Waist is made of White Batiste. Torchon Lace insertion divides front into panels as shown. Beautiful embroidery medallions ornament front and shoulders, all over cluster tucking. This waist has the new kimona sleeve which is so wonderfully popular with the best dressed women in New York. Sleeves and collar trimmed with Valenciennes Lace. Back has two rows of Torchon Lace insertion from shoulder to waist line. Small pearl buttons close garment in the back; sizes 34 to 44. Price 99c. Postage extra 10c.

DRESS BETTER AND AT LOWER COST

If you want to be well dressed for less money than ever before you will certainly want the new Macy Catalogue for Spring. It has been greatly enlarged and offers the most sensational values in our history. If in a single day more than a quarter of a million of the most critical shoppers in the world find the Macy qualities and prices unequalled, surely Macy's is a good place for you, too, to supply your wants. Our new Spring Catalogue, larger and better than ever, filled from cover to cover with thousands of articles every woman is interested in, is free to you if you will write for it. To get it free

WASHING WINDOWS

A CERTAIN woman of censorious mind,
To criticise her neighbors was inclined;
Their dingy houses with discolored paint
And dirty windows, were her chief complaint.
Her righteous soul became at length so vexed,
She called her pastor, Rev. Take-a-Text,
Told him her trouble, and besought advice.
The wise old doctor answered in a trice:
"Get soap and water and remove the stains,
And dirt, and fly-specks from your window panes."
The woman did so, and, to her surprise,
Seemed to be looking out of other eyes;
Her neighbors' houses, now no longer seen
Through dirty windows, all were white and clean.
The moral of this story seems to be:
Who looks through dirty windows, dirt will see;
Wash your own glass, and then, as like as not,
Your neighbors' window-panes will have no spot;
Extract the beam before you vainly try
To take the mote from out a brother's eye.

A Message of Comfort

THERE is no comfort like unto the comfort of the Comforter. This comfort is the gift of the "Other Comforter" which he freely gives in connection with the gift of himself. This comfort is adapted and adequate and abiding to every one who will simply receive him. The need of this world is comfort, and the God of all comfort desires to comfort us that we may comfort others with the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted. Comfort one another with these words: "Comfort ye my people, saith your God." Now, the God of all comfort, comfort you with the comfort of the Holy Gnost. STEPHEN MERRITT.

NEW YORK'S GREAT PENNSYLVANIA STATION

One of the greatest works of modern times was the construction of the concrete-lined steel tubes under the Hudson and East Rivers, the tunnelling of Manhattan Island, and the erection of the magnificent station at Seventh Avenue and Thirty-second Street, New York, bringing the through trains of the Pennsylvania Railroad into the heart of New York City.

An illustrated booklet describing this great work, and telling what it means to the New York passenger, has been issued by the Pennsylvania Railroad and will be sent postpaid to any address by George W. Boyd, General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa., on receipt of a two-cent stamp. Send for it.

Human strength, grace, good health and beauty of form can be restored only by developing the perfect body—absolute restoration of superb natural health by natural means. That is the mission of my Natural Body Brace and the Individual Service which have brought back the glorious health of youth to so many women in the past twenty years.

The fact of my being adviser and counselor to over 100,000 women with my Braces has equipped me with a wonderful fund of vitally important knowledge—valuable to every woman desiring a stronger, healthier body and a graceful, beautiful figure. This information is crystallized in my four lectures, sent free to the first 1,000 women answering this announcement. Then, after the lectures aid you, my Natural Body Brace and Individual Service are yours—if you desire—for

Note, in the illustration below, the amazing gain in health and figure a few weeks makes.

30 Days FREE

After a month's use you decide for yourself whether they will be worth to you an insignificant sum—so small that splendid health and good figure are easily within every woman's means.

My Natural Body Brace with my Individual Service bring back bright, fresh, youthful health by helping to restore the natural location of every vital organ, inviting health and the vigorous bloom of youth. Every vital organ has a definite position in which to properly perform its functions; when out of position the organs work with pain, nervousness, weakness.

Many ill, discouraged women have been made robust, rosy and buoyant by wearing my Natural Body Brace over the under-garments—and heeding the personal teaching of my Individual Service. Relief is often instant—a few months bring back years of health and usefulness. Everything Confidential.

My plan has the unqualified endorsement of thousands of the medical profession—and your good judgment in trying it is backed by the urgent advice of untold thousands of good, strong, sensible women who know what it has done for them. Letters from many of these are included in a folder, which I send Free.

The Secret of Happiness*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

Seeking Happiness

HAPPINESS is something for which everybody is seeking, and on many different lines—some in travel, some in amusements, some in riches, a small number in study, a smaller number still in benevolent works. The Golden Text tells us where alone happiness is to be surely found: "Happy is that people whose God is the Lord." We can make it more personal by saying: Happy is that person whose God is the Lord.

Unhappy Kings

Was King Rehoboam a happy person? As the son and successor of the wise, the rich King Solomon, we would say that he should have been one of the happiest of men. But was he? No, for there was unrest among the people of his kingdom; they were burdened with taxes put upon them to keep up the scale of magnificence set by King Solomon. A sea of trouble thus surged against King Rehoboam, which God would have given him wisdom to calm, if he had sought the counsel of God instead of men. Rehoboam did not even take the advice given him by wise men, and hence the loss of the greater part of his kingdom by the secession of the ten tribes.

Was King Jeroboam happy? Surely he ought to have been, for he was the favorite of that vast company of people who repudiated King Rehoboam, but instead of taking hold of the secret of happiness expressed in the Golden Text, he gave to his people two golden calves to worship in place of the true God, and himself became the high priest of the calf! His downfall was complete as God had warned him through the prophet Ahijah.

Was King Asa a happy man? He had a long reign and loyalty was born and bred in his people. But how did he stand with God? He was for a time acceptable, for he tried to reform evils; and as long as he thus served the Lord, God made him to prosper, and he was happy. But he had an enemy in King Baasha, and instead of asking wisdom and help from God, he appealed to Ben-hadad, King of Syria, who was an idolater. Ben-hadad gave the desired assistance and enabled King Asa to win. His character totally changed, he became a tyrant over his people instead of a father, and was hated.

King Omri, was he happy? As the king of Israel he made a wise choice of Samaria as his capital. So wise a man should have been a good man, but he was not. He not only did not serve God, but during the twelve years of his reign he led his people into idolatry.

Was King Ahab a happy man? Ahab so completely ignored the God who is the Lord that he built a temple to the chief idol Baal and laid no check upon those who persecuted the followers of God. Drought, famine and distress were the punishments God sent upon Ahab throughout his kingdom.

Happiness in God

Was Elijah a happy man? He was one of the greatest of God's prophets. He withstood the four hundred howling priests of Baal, and through prayer wrought a great victory over them, and thereby turned the hearts of the people from the worship of idols to the worship of the true God. He was then a happy man.

But when was he unhappy? When for a few hours he lost sight of God in

Genuine Holeproof Hose

Holeproof Hose—six pairs guaranteed six months—are sold by the greatest stores in the country.

"Holeproof" are the original guaranteed hose, the kind backed by 38 years of experience.

Why Big Stores Sell the Original

The original has the greatest demand of any guaranteed hose on the market because of its vastly superior quality.

We use only yarn that costs an average of 70 cents per pound, while yarn can be bought for 30 cents.

But ours is three-ply, soft and fine. It is more pliable than two-ply. Hence the hose can be made at once lighter and stronger.

FAMOUS Holeproof Hosiery FOR MEN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Then, "Holeproof" are made in eleven colors, four grades and four weights, suiting every man's preference.

For long wear in hose of correct style and good fit there is nothing to equal the genuine "Holeproof."

See the assortment at the good stores in your city today.

To avoid imitations—amateur brands—look for the "Holeproof" trade-mark and the signature of Mr. Carl Freschl, Pres., on the toe of each pair.

The prices range from $1.50 to $3.00 for six pairs, according to finish and weight. Decide today to try "Holeproof."

AS TO INVESTMENTS

"INVESTMENT" may be defined as the laying out of money in the purchase of some species of property, usually of a permanent nature. If asked, "What are the essentials of a good investment?" we should unhesitatingly answer: There are three—security, income, and convertibility. We name them in what we regard to be the order of their importance, though not one of them can be disregarded.

Security and High Interest

There have been, there no doubt are, and it is about certain that there will continue to be conditions in which the profits may be enormous, compared with the amount of the original investment.

Stories, true or fictitious, of these sudden fortunes are still current, and are accepted by the inexperienced with the faith of a child in a fairy story. The get-rich-quick men, to whom attention was called in former articles, avail themselves of this unreasoning credulity to despoil the unwary.

Leaving out the few successes achieved through exceptional good luck or chance, and having only in mind those forms of regular procedure that control the business world, it may be accepted as an axiom of legitimate finance that the risk of an investment increases in proportion to the rate of interest promised.

Conversely it would follow, as a logical deduction, that the lower the rate of interest the greater the assurance of the security. In a general way this may be accepted as a truth. But after the interest has descended below the line of risk and reached the side of absolute security, the individual investor, with an eye to income, will try to secure the highest fixed interest consistent with absolute safety. Now, while the fields for exploitation and speculation are vast and still increasing, the things that may be regarded as riskless are few in number, though the amount of cash capital they constantly require is enormous. Here is the list: Government, State, and municipal bonds, first mortgage railroad bonds, and mortgages on real estate, the title to which is properly guaranteed.

Government Securities

Investments in these bonds are at a fixed rate of interest. The loans of the Nation, State, and municipality may be regarded as safe now, though there have been cases where States and cities defaulted in payment, or entirely repudiated their bonded obligations. The security in these cases is indirect, but it may be regarded as safe, for it is based on faith in a commonwealth or a community, though the public property may not be seized and sold to secure payment of the obligations. That the people have faith in nearly all classes of State and communal bonds is evidenced by the constant demand for this form of security, and this, though the interest is generally lower than that derived from many kinds of corporate bonds. The demand for these public bonds is entirely due to the fact that they do pay some interest, which idle money, subject to check in our great banks, does not. If in the course of business the holder of such bonds suddenly finds himself in immediate need of ready money, he can at once secure it by selling them; hence their great advantage as a security is their ready convertibility into cash. The bonds of the United States may be regarded as another form of cash, though in trade they do not pass as currency. The interest on Government bonds—one and a half to two per cent.—eliminates them from the list of large income-producing securities.

State and municipal bonds, as the obligations of organized communities, pay on an average three per cent. They are, perhaps, no more secure than first-class railroad bonds, but because of their readier convertibility they are more in demand in those great commercial centres where the tides of finance are ever moving with a semi-annual ebb and flow as regular in its rise and fall as the daily ocean tides.

In talking with some friends—intelligent and well-informed people in other matters—we have been not a little surprised to find them confusing railroad bonds and railroad stocks. This haziness disappears once it is understood that the holder of a corporate bond is, to the extent of the face value of that bond, a creditor of the organization of which it is an obligation or promise to pay at a fixed rate of interest. On the other hand a stockholder is a partner, or one of a company, entitled to share in the profits and liable, to the amount of his holdings, for the company's obligations. Railroad bonds are mortgages and represent money borrowed at fixed rates of interest and expended for construction, equipment or betterment. Stocks represent the titles of the promotors, and beyond the initial expenses, and seldom these, they do not represent the expenditure of money, nor are they a lien on property.

Stocks in Wall Street

If we based our knowledge of stocks on the report of the juggling brokers of Wall Street, we should conclude that they, like playing cards, were forms of paper designed to amuse the idle and furnish implements of plunder for the gambler and social outlaw; but such is not the case. It is true there is much gambling in stocks—betting on the rise encouraged by the bulls, or on the fall encouraged by the bears—but this no more affects the intrinsic value of stock as an investment, than betting on the toss of a coin would affect the intrinsic value of the coin.

There are stocks, like those of the Standard Oil, whose certain dividends are so great as to make them worth many times their face value. The stock issued by railroads, as we all know, is of two kinds—viz, preferred and common. The former bears a fixed rate of interest, which is paid after all other obligations are met; any amount left over goes as a dividend to the common stock. In some very prosperous corporations, the dividends are larger on the common than on the preferred stock, and in consequence the common commands a higher price.

Railroad bonds that pay from four to six per cent. can be bought in the market, and the ordinary investor—that is, the man with a few thousand dollars and no experience—is pretty sure to prefer the six-per-cent. bond, particularly when he can buy it for the same price as the four per cent., sometimes for less. But there are bonds and bonds, gilt-edge bonds and bonds with their faces smeared and their edges frayed.

Railroad Bonds

If all railroads were built honestly and managed along economic business lines, their bonds should be as safe as those of the State, but such management has not been the rule. The ambition to extend little railroads into great systems of transportation has devoured immense sums of ready money and led to frequent disaster. This reckless management will be the better understood when we recall that during the panic years from 1893 to 1907, two thirds of the railroads of the United States passed into the hands of receivers. The stock of such corporations was virtually wiped out, and in the process of reorganization the bondholders, in but few cases, saved their original investment.

Sunday School Lesson

his fear of Jezebel because she had threatened to kill him in revenge for his slaying of the prophets of Baal.

Was not Elisha a happy man? Yes, because he had learned from Elijah to love and serve God. He was happy in being at the head of a school of prophets, where there were fifty or more young students. He was happy in being received into homes where his coming brought blessing and joy. He was happy in being the counselor of kings. Even in his grave, the touch of his bones brought the dead back to life (II. Kings 13: 21).

Making Others Happy

It has been said: "The infallible recipe for happiness is to do good, and the infallible recipe for doing good is to abide in Christ." To be happy one's self is not the noblest aim of life. It is rather to make happy the place where one lives. In Burma, Christian converts, finding it hard to practise Christianity in the idolatrous, corrupt cities, where all sorts of business, customs, pleasures and governmental affairs are associated with heathen rites, go out on the hills by themselves and establish Christian villages where the law of Christ is the law of business, politics and pleasure. If they can have Christian villages in Burma, we can have Christian cities in America. We pray: "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth." Does it seem a thing impossible that God's will should be done on earth? It was so done by Christ, and he said: "I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done." It was not in miracles that he did God's will as in heaven, and as our example, for we can not imitate him in that. But Christ did God's will as in heaven, and as our example in putting service above selfishness, the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister.

What are you doing for others to make your city a safer and a happier place in which to live? Have you any part in movements for civic betterment? Does the condition of the poor in your city interest you? Is there any class of persons whose condition you are helping to better?

Happiness in Sobriety

Are you joining in the endeavor to shut up drinking places in your city, to make it a safer and happier place to dwell? And after the city in which we live our desires should go out to our whole land. A Syrian lady, coming to the United States, after studying its sociological condition, made the remark: "Your land would be heaven if the drink were not here." Such a judgment should inspire us with a determination to do away with the drink evil.

It was recently said in a speech in Congress by Hon. Richmond P. Hobson, that the nation last year, on account of the lowered efficiency of its products through alcohol, was $14,000,000,000 short in its productiveness. Instead of producing only $32,000,000,000 of wealth, we would have produced without alcohol $46,000,000,000. Summing up the economic losses from the lowered efficiency of our producers, from the death list, from the costs of crime, pauperism and insanity, and from the liquor bill, the total economic burden laid upon the nation by King Alcohol is between sixteen and seventeen billions of dollars—more than half of all the wealth produced by the nation. Should not these facts make us wish that our whole land might come under prohibition? A sober nation is an industrious nation and industry ever leads to peace and plenty, which in turn bring happiness and raise a people's thoughts to God, to love and serve him and thank him for his blessings.

Kingsford's Cornstarch

EDITOR BROWNE

Of The Rockford Morning Star

"About seven years ago I ceased drinking coffee to give your Postum a trial.

"I had suffered acutely from various forms of indigestion and my stomach had become so disordered as to repel almost every sort of substantial food. My general health was bad. At close intervals I would suffer severe attacks which confined me in bed for a week or more. Soon after changing from coffee to Postum the indigestion abated, and in a short time ceased entirely. I have continued the daily use of your excellent Food Drink and assure you most cordially that I am indebted to you for the relief it has brought me.

"Wishing you a continued success, I am
Yours very truly,
J. Stanley Browne,
Managing Editor."

Of course, when a man's health shows he can stand coffee without trouble, let him drink it, but most highly organized brain-workers simply cannot.

The drugs natural to the coffee berry affect the stomach and other organs and thence to the complex nervous system, throwing it out of balance and producing disorders in various parts of the body. Keep up this daily poisoning and serious disease generally supervenes. So when man or woman finds that coffee is a smooth but deadly enemy and health is of any value at all, there is but one road—quit.

It is easy to find out if coffee be the cause of the troubles, for if left off 10 days and Postum be used in its place and the sick and diseased conditions begin to disappear, the proof is unanswerable.

Postum is not good if made by short boiling. It must be boiled full 15 minutes after boiling begins, when the crisp flavor and the food elements are brought out of the grains and the beverage is ready to fulfill its mission of palatable comfort and renewing the cells and nerve centres broken down by coffee.

"There's a Reason."

A Good Soldier*

IN AN eloquent discourse a few weeks ago, Dr. Joseph Dunn Burrell called attention to the interesting manner in which figures of speech are drawn from the circumstances in which the speaker or writer lives. Thus, since in Bible times the danger from wild beasts was very great, we have many metaphors comparing moral dangers to "ravening wolves"; "the hireling seeth the wolf coming"; Paul says, "I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion"; Peter compares Satan to "a roaring lion"; and the Old Testament refers often to the bear, once common in Palestine.

In the same way, since the Roman army was the most conspicuous sign and emblem of the power of Rome, and its provinces were full of soldiers, the figure of the fighter was uppermost in the minds of all the people. Wars, great or small, were on every side. Since every proconsul was applauded if he could win more territory for the Roman empire, he was continually trying to conquer the continguous States.

In our day the war of conquest, simply for the sake of conquest, has come to be almost unknown among civilized peoples. Many of the greatest minds in the world are engaged in the effort to eliminate all war from the world. It is to be hoped that ere this generation passes, the leading nations will have entered into a compact to submit all their disagreements to a permanent court of arbitration and to reduce their armaments. In spite of the enormous influence of the army and navy in every land, many wise observers believe that this is feasible. Let us all pray that their noble dream may be realized.

It is true that physical warfare may some time be abandoned; but this does not mean that there will be no more fighting. Until the dawn of the millennium, when the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the earth as the waters cover the sea, the forces of Satan will be forever attacking Christ's army. Strength of arm and corselets of iron and steel avail nothing in the combat. A far more important equipment is demanded. It is the sturdy will and the dauntless spirit which are required in the new warfare. The courage needed now is to the courage needed then, "as sunlight unto moonlight."

Are you going into the fight for good government? Prepare to hear, as some of us heard at a public meeting not long ago, that good government is merely a "roseate dream." Any man who fights for it is, in the slang of the day, "chasing rainbows." You simply "write yourself down as a silly sentimentalist," if you talk about it. Let the bosses rule and the grafters rob, and do not try to prevent them, for "it can't be done." All you can do is to "try to restrain them a little." This is what was said to a startled audience by a distinguished speaker.

Are you going into the temperance fight? Then prepare for a still more determined and deep-laid opposition. Not only those actually engaged in the liquor business will strive to circumvent and overcome you, but also the vast army of "moderate drinkers," most of whom declare that total abstinence is "silly," "unnecessary" and "detrimental to health." They are largely church-members. They declare that boys are less likely to become drunkards, if they "see wine and beer served daily in their homes."

Fight them with true instances; with carefully compiled statistics; with the fiery eloquence of sincerity; and be prepared to suffer for your faith—to be traduced, to be met by false statistics, to be called "a crank" and "a lightweight"—and worse.

It will be the same in every department of the moral world—a hard fight, frequent rebuffs, wounds, even death—but the result aimed at is worth it all; and we may feel that victory in the end is sure, for we fight on the side of God.

NOW IN AN ORCHESTRA

How Music Lessons FREE IN HIS OWN HOME Started Him

"I could not play a note when I received the first lesson from you, and now I am playing in a good orchestra of ten pieces, and can read music and play as well as any of them. I shall always recommend your home study school of music." That is what Eli Smith, Jr., R. R. No. 2, Marietta, Ill., writes after one-year course on the Violin.

Eli Smith's only expense under our free tuition plan was for postage and music. That cost him less than Two Cents a day, and he was under no further obligation whatever.

If you wish to learn to play the Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, Banjo, Cornet, Cello, or learn to Sing, our teachers will come to you by mail once a week with a lesson until you can read music and play your instrument to your own satisfaction.

Over ten thousand weekly lessons are now being sent to homes all over the world to pupils in all walks of life, from seven years of age to seventy.

Our free tuition plan will enable you to get weekly lessons costing You less than two cents a day. It will be your only expense and places you under no further obligation whatever.

This school has been established since 1898. Don't be deceived by imitators.

Don't say you cannot learn music, but send for our booklet and free tuition offer. It will be sent by return mail free. Address U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Missions in the West*

PERHAPS nothing strikes the traveler in the West more forcibly than the historic spots in which it even now abounds. They cannot compete in number or interest with the thrilling historic places of the Old World; but as compared with the Eastern States, they can show no mean collection. Some of these commemorate scenes of shame and sorrow; but many more are associated with exalted heroisms and feats of unselfish daring.

The early missions of the Jesuit fathers along the Pacific Coast and throughout the valley of the Mississippi, furnish not a few of these. Mrs. Catherwood has erected beautiful literary monuments to some of the actors in these wilderness adventures; and already along the streams and upon the hilltops of those regions may be found tablets and statues which indicate our deep indebtedness to those hardy and often patriotic and God-fearing pioneers.

The annals of our Home Missions contain instances of unparalleled and pathetic heroism. Even to-day, in many of the wild and remote districts of the West our missionaries are undergoing trials and deprivations matched by few of those endured in the foreign field.

Who has not been touched by the story of the four naive Nez Percés who came to St. Louis in 1832 to inquire about "the white man's God in heaven"? They had learned a little about Christianity from Clark, the explorer, and they wanted to know more.

New England heard of these seeking Indians and made immediate response. In 1833, her Methodists sent out Pastor Lee with co-laborers to the Willamette River. Two years later, the famous Marcus Whitman began work on the Walla Walla. To these two devoted missionaries is attributed most of the firm Christian sentiment now to be found in our great Northwest.

"The red man, though amid surroundings which had environed him for centuries, had left," says Ward Platt, "almost no mark on his world. He gave no challenge to nature, and both sulked in savagery."

To this stern and stationary people went forth our finest and best, to endeavor to soften and tame them—David Brainerd, Eliot, Edwards and many more. They reduced the unwritten languages of the tribes to some sort of system; went fearlessly into the wigwams; did their best to lead the stolid braves to Christ; and most of them, were scalped for their pains or died of lingering diseases, induced by hardship and exposure. There are still about 300,000 Indians in the United States, but their number is dwindling. The work among them which was once done by the missionary societies is gradually shifting upon the shoulders of the government. Schools, training in trades, and discipline in the life of civilization are now directed by our Indian agents; and it is generally predicted that ere the middle of the present century, the Indian will be practically absorbed into regular American citizenship.

Rev. Charles Cook has done a wonderful work in Arizona. In South Dakota Bishop Hare and his helpers have changed the fierce Sioux, in thirty-five years of work, into devout Christians.

Sixty mission schools, with 140 teachers, are doing much to uplift New Mexico, but if you will study the situation in each of the other Western States, you will find that all of them need devoted men and women workers, and money. Our mining-camps are in crying need of Christian influences. Many small new settlements, while supplied with plenty of saloons and gambling hells, have no churches. What better service than giving yourself to this work? If you cannot do that, at least you can give of your substance. Our God and our country alike demand our best work for Home Missions.

CHRISTIAN MARTYRS GIVEN TO THE LIONS

CHRISTIANITY is the greatest fact in history. The early Christians endured martyrdom rather than forsake Principle. The picture shown herewith from Ridpath's History, depicts 87,000 people assembled in the Coliseum at Rome to witness the Christians given to the lions. In such a scene may be read the inevitable doom of the Empire that ruled the world. The blood of the Martyrs is the seed from which Christian civilization sprang. If you would know the history of mankind—every sacrifice for principle, every struggle for liberty, every conflict and every achievement, from the dawn of civilization down to the present time—then embrace this splendid opportunity to place in your home the world-famed publication,

Ridpath's History of the World

CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS have shown wonderful appreciation of our remarkable offer on this great history. We have shipped this splendid work to delighted readers living in every state of the Union. Over 200,000 sets of this monumental work have been sold and every purchaser is more than satisfied. More sets of Ridpath's History have been sold than of the Encyclopedia Britannica and the Century Dictionary combined. Can you imagine a greater testimonial for any set of books? The English-speaking world have endorsed this as the only History of the World worth having. We offer the remaining sets, brand new, down to date, beautifully bound in half Morocco, to CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS at a great bargain.

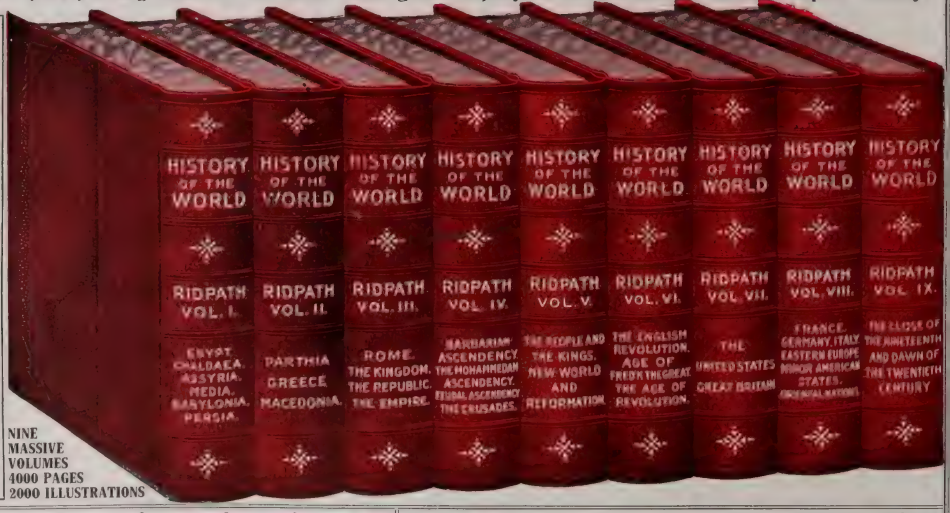
Presidents Endorse Ridpath



President McKinley said: "I am familiar with the merits of Ridpath's History of the World, and cordially commend it to the scholar as well as to the plain people generally."

President Harrison said: "The author's labors are deserving of the highest praise. The printing and binding is first class and the illustrations are of a high order. I most heartily recommend this great work for study and convenient reference."

President Cleveland said: "I unhesitatingly commend Ridpath's History of the World as a work of great merit, and believe that it should have a prominent place in every library."

NINE MASSIVE VOLUMES
2000 ILLUSTRATIONS

DR. Ridpath gives the history of every religion of mankind, and shows the slow but sure progress that has been made from Paganism to Christianity, from darkness to light. The customs and habits of people, the development of their science and literature and art, the growth of religion and education form a very vital part of this history, and that which gives the work its lasting popularity is the wonderfully beautiful and fascinating style in which it is written. To read this work is not only to increase one's fund of knowledge, but to improve the literary style in which we write or speak, and to expand and develop the mental powers.

EVERY American citizen should know the history of his own country and of the world to intelligently perform his full duty as a citizen in the government of this Nation. How else are we to judge of the great national questions that crowd upon us for decision except by some knowledge of the past? For the answer read the history of mighty Babylon, or of imperial Rome as a kingdom, then as a republic, and finally as an empire, and familiarize yourself with her growth, development and decay. Then, when you know the cause of the rise and downfall of empires and nations, will you be able to intelligently discuss and decide the great questions that are pressing everywhere for attention.

RIDPATH takes you back to the dawn of history, long before the pyramids of Egypt were built; down through the romantic troubled times of Chaldea's grandeur and Assyria's magnificence; of Babylonia's wealth and luxury; of Grecian and Roman splendor; of Mohammedan culture and refinement; of French elegance and British power; of American patriotism and religious freedom, to the dawn of yesterday. He covers every race, every nation, every time, and holds you spellbound by his wonderful eloquence. Nothing more interesting, absorbing and inspiring was ever written.

RIDPATH throws the mantel of personality over the old heroes of history. Alexander is there—patriot, warrior, statesman, diplomat, crowning the glory of Grecian history. Xerxes, from his mountain platform, sees Themistocles, with three hundred and fifty Greek ships, smash his Persian fleet of over a thousand sail, and help to mould the language in which this paragraph is written. Rome perches Nero upon the greatest throne on earth, and so sets up a poor madman's name to stand for countless centuries as the synonym of savage cruelty; Napoleon fights Waterloo again under your very eyes, and reels before the iron fact that at last the end of his gilded dream has come. Bismarck is there—gruff, overbearing, a giant pugilist in the diplomatic ring, laughing with grim disdain at France, which says "You shall not." Washington is there, "four-square to all the winds," grave, thoughtful, proof against the wiles of British strategy and the poisoned darts of false friends; clear-seeing over the heads of his fellow-countrymen, and on into another century—the most colossal world-figure of his time!

This is the Only Fireless Cooker in the World with a Water Sealed Top

THAT means an absolutely steam tight cooker—quicker, better cooking—no leakage. It means an absolutely odor tight cooker—You can cook sauerkraut or onions in the Ideal cooker without anybody but yourself knowing it. It means an absolutely heat tight cooker—that is why it is more efficient—why it does the cooking so much better and quicker and more economically.

The Ideal Fireless Cook Stove

is the result of more than 20 years' experience in the manufacture of steam and fireless cookers. It is the perfect cooker. It is no more to be compared to the rank and file of fireless cookers than a tallow candle is to be compared to an electric light. The Ideal cooker is a practical cook stove. It will cook a simple breakfast or an elaborate dinner. It will roast and stew and bake and boil. It will do everything that an ordinary cook stove will do—and do it at one-fourth the fuel expense—and with one-fifth the labor. It takes away all the drudgery of cooking—it saves hours of time. It saves 75 per cent of the fuel—it saves 40 or 50 per cent even of the food itself—as none of the food value is boiled or cooked away when the Ideal cooker is used.

The Ideal Cooker is an automatic maid, doing three-fourths of your kitchen work, saving you three-fourths of your fuel expense and serving you better cooked and more wholesome food than you can get in any other way

The Ideal Fireless Cook Stove is lined throughout with solid aluminum. The utensils accompanying it are the celebrated wear-ever aluminum.

The Ideal Fireless Cook Stove is made in the largest steam and fireless cooker factory in the world—by men who have been making cookers for 20 years. It is made for service—not simply to sell. When you buy an Ideal you get a cooker that will last a lifetime—that will do more for you than any other fireless cooker in the world—and that is an ornament to your kitchen. The outer case is made of hardwood, with vulcanized paneled sides and top. It is beautifully finished in light or dark mahogany.

The packing is a special material made exclusively for us and is the result of 20 years' experimenting in insulating materials. Its heat retaining powers are absolutely wonderful.

The lining is solid aluminum—pressed in one piece. There is not a soldered or nailed joint to be found anywhere—not a crack or corner in which dirt or germ could lodge. It is absolutely sanitary. The top and the collar into which it fits are pressed on the same die. They must fit perfectly. There are no extra lids, no felt pads—nothing but the solid top fitting into the collar made for it and producing a perfectly tight joint.

The Water Seal is a distinctive feature of the Ideal Fireless Cook Stove. A slight groove just at the bottom of the collar into which the top fits, collects the first steam that is generated, condenses it into water, and this water forms an effectual seal that makes it impossible for either heat, steam or odor to escape. No other cooker has or can have this effectual seal. It is one of the distinct advantages in the Ideal Fireless Cook Stove.

You know how inconvenient and inefficient the one-piece lid of other cookers is—The Ideal Fireless Cook Stove has a separate lid for each compartment—and each lid is absolutely tight—opening one compartment does not affect the others in the least.

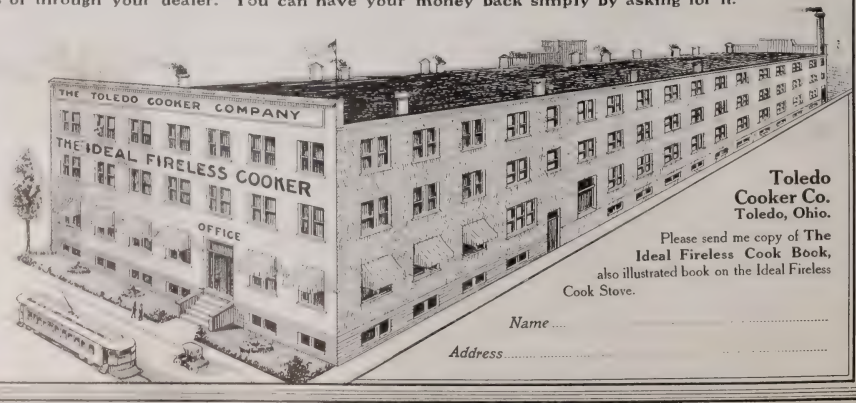
WHY THE IDEAL IS BETTER

In the first place, this water sealed top is the most important invention that has ever been put into a Fireless Cooker. You know how the steam on other cookers condenses around the top and runs down in a little puddle on the floor—the Ideal Fireless Cook Stove will cook all day without a drop of exterior moisture. You know how the odors escape from other cookers and find their way through the whole house—you can cook anything in the Ideal Fireless Cook Stove without the slightest odor. You know how hot the outside case of other cookers gets—The Ideal Fireless Cook Stove simply gets a little warm—never hot—the heat is inside and it stays there—all of it.

GIVE THE IDEAL 30 DAYS' TRIAL AT OUR RISK

We want you to try the Ideal Fireless Cook Stove in your own home. Test it thoroughly—compare it with every other cooker you ever heard of. Note the substantial construction of it and the beautiful finish. Cook your meals in it for 30 days—if you would be willing to give it up at the end of that time, ship it back at our expense and we will return every cent you have paid on it, without question. We guarantee the Ideal Fireless Cook Stove absolutely, and this guarantee holds, no matter whether you buy direct from us or through your dealer. You can have your money back simply by asking for it.

Let It Pay for Itself



If more convenient you can pay for the Ideal Fireless Cook Stove in small installments. It will save its cost in fuel alone before you have your payments all made. The Ideal Fireless Cook Stove is the greatest money saver you ever got into your house. Don't wait—write today for the illustrated book—and the Ideal Fireless Cook Book.

Newly Arrived Famine Refugees

BLESSING THE FAMINE SHIP'S CARGO

CABLE dispatches from China received since the sailing of the Buford show that there is no cessation in the progress of the famine. Consul-General Amos P. Wilder at Shanghai, who is in touch with both Relief Committees, emphasizes the immediate needs of the starving multitudes in Anhui and Kiangsu, where 3,000,000 people are now suffering. In view of the urgent need as presented in these dispatches, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, within twenty-four hours after the sailing of the Buford, cabled $10,000 through our State Department to China to be divided equally between the Chin-kiang and Shanghai Committees for immediate use. This remittance, together with the $26,000 previously cabled through the State Department, and $21,000 sent in the form of flour on the Buford, makes THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers' total gift to China $57,000 to date.

It is impossible to estimate how many have already died from lack of food in the two provinces already named and the adjoining province of Hupeh. Dr. Samuel Cochran, who is engaged in the relief work, writes that "one million people will die before the first crop is harvested." Fully two millions are without food and are existing on roots and grasses. The comparative few who possess any grain, guard it night and day.

Streams of refugees continue to pour up and down the country, like the ebb and flow of the tides, but aimless and hopeless. It is pitiful to look upon forlorn pilgrims, swept hither and thither like driftwood, and to realize that most of them are doomed to death unless relief comes. Their condition seems to be even worse than during the famine five years ago. To the credit of the usually well-to-do Chinese it must be stated that they have "done what they could" to relieve the distress. Not only are they actively co-operating with the Famine Relief Committees, but they have in many instances impoverished themselves to help the suffering. The "gentry" (land-owners) of Anhui and Kiangsu have even borrowed large sums which they have placed at the Relief Committees' disposal, to be repaid later as funds come in.

It is not surprising that there should be a record of many startling and even desperate acts as the result of the famine. Robberies are frequent. At Sha-yang, in Hupeh province, a few days ago (where the famine has now penetrated), a great crowd of sufferers gathered at a distribution of food by the missionaries and officials. It was simply impossible to control them, and they fought like wild beasts, mad with hunger. It is said a score were trampled so badly that they died the same day.

One of the saddest incidents is reported from Kunshan, fifty miles from Shanghai, where the starving villagers raided the stores and many were killed in the struggle that followed. It is reported that 500 of the refugees were penned in a small village near Kunshan, from which they had driven the terror-stricken inhabitants, and the gates were locked upon them. By some means not yet explained, the slight buildings, mainly of wood and straw, were fired, and 500 refugee raiders perished in the flames. This incident has not yet been corroborated and it is hoped that the report may be exaggerated.

Farewell religious services were conducted on the Buford on the day of sailing by a committee of Seattle clergymen, with Rev. Owen Jones as chairman. The services were largely attended. The programme included an invocation by Rev. Joseph L. Garvin, First Christian Church of Seattle; singing of hymn, "Jesus Shall Reign"; responsive reading led by Rev. W. A. Major, D.D., of Bethany Presbyterian Church (the oldest pastor in Seattle); singing of hymn, "We Give Thee but Thine Own"; prayer by Rev. E. A. Skogsburgh; singing of hymn, "Roll on, Thou Mighty Ocean"; five-minute addresses by Rev. E. L. Smith, Congregationalist, Rev. Dr. Leonard, Methodist, and Rev. B. L. Whitman; blessing the cargo, an invocation by Rev. Owen Jones; hymn, "My Country Tis of Thee"; doxology and benediction. The following message of godspeed and blessing, telegraphed from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, was read to the audience:

> In sending forth this noble ship for the second time in four years on a mission of mercy to China, the many thousands of God's people who have contributed to the Buford's cargo through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, pray that this flour may become the means, under Divine Providence, of halting the famine in great measure. May it inspire new hope, strength and energy in the stricken people. May every pound of flour on the Buford save a precious life! May she have favoring weather, a quick voyage and a safe arrival! May the same Divine protection be vouchsafed to the ship and to her captain, officers and crew, that guarded her path across the seas when she went to China with America's gift of food in 1907. And may God's blessing crown the whole enterprise and make it redound to his own glory and the winning of souls, so that this gift of food may bring a double blessing to China in giving her starving millions, not only the bread that feeds the body, but also the Bread of Life, which satisfies the soul.

The 21,000 sacks of flour which represent the combined contributions of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers to the cargo of the Buford will make 1,575,000 loaves of bread of the standard fifteen-ounce size sold in New York. These 21,000 sacks contain an aggregate of 1,029,000 pounds of flour. Every dime contributed to the Fund represents seven good-sized loaves; twenty-five cents will provide nineteen loaves; half a dollar, thirty-nine loaves; a dollar, seventy-nine loaves; five dollars, 396 loaves.

Progress is reported in North China in the fight against the plague. Sanitary measures have greatly reduced the death rate, and it is now hoped that the epidemic may be checked before it can reach the southern provinces.

All contributions should be addressed "China Famine Fund, CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York." Acknowledgements will be found on another page of this issue.

Cost of Not Living the Christian Life

TEXT—Luke 14:28

THIS parable seems to have grown out of the spectacle of a half-built house. A certain youth fell heir to much gold on his father's estate. He was ambitious to live in the best house in the town. Scarcely, therefore, was his father dead, than he razed the old homestead to the ground. On the site of his childhood's home he began to build a mansion with a tower. But because he had not earned the money he was spending, he did not know how to use it, and before the building was half done his funds ran out. In his ignorance and folly he had neglected to count the cost. Soon his workmen discovered that he had no money, and they threw down their tools in disgust. At first he was startled, then humiliated; discredited, he fled from the community and quite disappeared. Years came and went, and the elements slowly turned the house into a ruin. One day Jesus stayed his steps before the half-finished house. The rain had fallen through the roof, the storms had driven through the open windows, the floors were rotten, the garden a tangle of thorns and weeds.

The Christian Life a Struggle

The world holds few sadder spectacles than a deserted house. Pointing to the structure that represented vanity and folly, Jesus warned the multitude against building a house of passion and pleasure without first of all considering the cost thereof. The scene gave him his favorite figure of the soul; the good man built his house on a rock of truth; the wicked man built on the sand. The theme that Jesus discussed was the price a man pays for building the house of pleasure, and the losses man suffers when he fails to build the house of righteousness and character.

Every man who refuses the Christian life should carefully estimate the losses incident to a life of self-will and personal pleasure. At the very outset let us confess that the Christian life represents a large, a hazardous and a very difficult enterprise. It means intelligence for the intellect, resolution for the will and vast reserves of conviction. Unless a man has oak and granite in him, the struggle is not for him. The temple of fame does, indeed, keep its doors open day and night for each adventurous youth, but unless the aspirant can eat crusts, wear rags, bear up against fierce winds, there is no room for him in these niches that are open only to the greatest. And the youth who is soft and flabby, without resolution and inflexible purpose, will not heed the call of Christ. Jesus' appeal is always to the heroic note.

When you think of what it is to be a Christian, you must think of a plan as vast as a military campaign, as marvelous as the settlement of a new province, as difficult as the building of a new city. God is abroad, slowly bringing the vast machinery of nature, invention, science, industry and government under the control of law and the spirit of good will. The Christian is one who seeks to do God's will and forward Christ's plans, in Christ's way and in company with Christ's disciples. Upon each eager disciple, therefore, he imposes the yoke of law. By divers restraints the Christian spirit curbs the appetites, the motives, where the young is overstrong. By divers stimulants it leads forth to a fuller strength those powers that are too weak, and the entire career of the disciple represents a series of sacrifices. The Christian life is a life of battle, where the weapons are thoughts and passions, and the enemies are invisible and spiritual. But once the victory is won, strange rewards appear.

The House of Character

Some men suffer heavy loss in happiness and character by refusing to complete the house of character. They emphasize the foundation qualities called moralities, in themselves indispensable, fundamental and praiseworthy. Multitudes there are who insist they believe in patriotism, in honesty, in meeting their bills, in moderation. But they do not believe in the mystical element, and are not interested in worship or prayer, or self-sacrifice, or love to God, or a profession of faith in Jesus Christ. They say, "I am trying to average up pretty well as a good citizen, and beyond paying my debts and living well I never expect to go, and I'll run my risks as to the future life." Now, in a mechanical universe, without God, without any presiding will or intellect, that would be well enough.

But if it should chance that this so-called good citizen is living in his heavenly Father's world, is being supported by his Father's bounty, if he is a son, squandering his Father's treasures and estates, it might be important to consider his Father's attitude and ask: "Am I giving pain to my heavenly Father through neglect, utter indifference and quiet contempt? Am I humiliating him, and injuring his divine government?" If it should chance that there is a God standing behind the veil, then these fundamental moralities must be carried up to affection, loyal obedience and loving trust.

The Lesson from the Tree

Out in the orchard, the other day, I heard a tree break into speech. It turned moralist, and began to boast. In its soliloquy it said, "I believe in black clods. I believe in good fertilizers; I believe in roots and a stout trunk. I believe in boughs, and if necessary, in turning them into clubs. I believe in branches that serve for hoe handles and axe helves; but I am not a sentimentalist. If things were looked into it would be found that I am just as good as these other apple trees that make such pretensions. I am not interested in all this talk about apple blossoms and perfume, about ripe fruit and the aroma thereof. How silly it is to talk about birds building their nests in the branches and cattle finding shade from the heat of the fierce sun. These mystical, invisible, spiritual elements of color and odor and food for the hungry do not appeal to me."

I never heard a moralist explaining why he was not religious talk more learnedly than this apple tree. But after a while I looked up at it, and there it stood, without a leaf, without a single blossom, on a May morning. No child played beneath its gaunt, dead boughs. It was an old, starved, shunned trunk, with naked branches, a mere skeleton of bones, without flesh or life. The only sign of a living thing that came near the tree was a woodpecker boring for a worm. Great are the root and the bough and the trunk, but the test of an apple tree is the fruit on the branch. Important the moralities that make up a good citizen! If there is a God in the world the test of manhood is in a pure heart, a surrendered will and an obedient life. The proofs are in prayer, in loving confidence—in short, in morality that blooms into religion, with all the fruits of the Spirit, named love and joy and peace. God is too large a fact to be ignored. When blades of grass can ignore the sun and summer, a man by emphasizing his moralities can ignore God and his goodness, that leads the moralist unto repentance.

Danger from Compromise

It is a proverb that the better is the worst enemy of the best. Man is so constituted that he is perpetually seeking for a compromise between his worst self and his ideals. In the nature of the case a living thing can be happy only by fulfilling its highest faculty. A worm can be happy in crawling, but not a turtle; a turtle can be happy in walking, but not a deer; a deer must run. The deer can be happy in running, but not a bee; the honey bee must fly toward the sweet clover field. A savage can be happy in fishing or hunting, but not a man. A man must think, invent, sing, pray, love. Once you know what your highest faculty is, that moment you must use that faculty and subordinate all else to it. Paul could make tents, but his life is not in industry; Paul, in an hour of shipwreck, has the power of a captain and a general, but his life is not there; Paul can write the ode on Immortality, but his life is not in literature. Paul can assault evil, serve the slave and gladiator, in a passion of love send the evangel pulsating through the world, and there lies his real life, because it is his supreme gift.

It is possible, therefore, for a man to be entirely mistaken about himself. In living for the good, the secondary thing, he misses the best and the ideal, the Christ likeness. It is easier, therefore, to call a bad man away from the worst things to the ideal ones than it is to induce a good man to go up to the ideal things. When Christ said the publicans and sinners should go into the kingdom before the Pharisees and scribes, and that Sodom should be saved before Jerusalem or Capernaum, what he meant was this: It is easier to reach a drunkard or a glutton than to reach a hypocritical Pharisee and scribe. In Alaska I found two kinds of mines, the placer mine and the quartz mine. The gold in the placer mine is buried in the sand and mud. The gold is very filthy, and yet all you have to do to get the gold out is to have a spade, a shaking-pan and a stream of water. When I washed gold out of the mud in Alaska I learned how easy it was to save Sodom.

Reaching the Sinner's Heart

But there is another kind of gold up in Alaska, and that is the patrician gold imbedded in layers of quartz. Every atom shines like a hypocritical Pharisee, blazes like a theological scribe, and is hard as the creedal points in a system of theology. To get this gold out of the quartz you bore in with a diamond drill, as hard as a sermon point, and then you put in dynamite and create an explosion, like a climax in a preacher's appeal, and then the stamp mills go to work, and every stamp weighs ten tons, and stamps, and pounds, and thunders, until the quartz is ground to dust, and then the dust is passed through an acid bath, and finally the gold comes out of the quartz; and this stamp mill, with the infinite exertion necessary for getting gold out of granite, makes me think of the way some Gipsy Smith, with an army of helpers, has to pound away on cultured sinners for five weeks, when one hour's appeal will bring a prodigal boy back to his father's house. You can play the prodigal through your body, and recovery is simple; you can play the prodigal through your intellect, through selfishness, and recovery is difficult.

The thoughtful man also will estimate the losses of self-respect incident to having no place among those who have fought for God and his cause. Jesus Christ is the leader of a world-wide campaign. He is fighting to overthrow evil and selfishness intrenched in a thousand strongholds. Darkness must go down before his day. Hate must surrender to love. Bats, things that creep and crawl and tear, must be driven back into the night. Love, peace, prosperity, happiness, must fill all the earth, until God is all in all. Toward that consummation Christ wrought, suffered and died. Then his apostles took up the flag and plunged it deeper into the ranks of the enemy. The martyrs made a new onslaught, and with their blood made Christ's banners crimson. Our own fathers forgot their tossings on the sea, their sufferings in the wilderness, to win their victory. The time has come when we must launch our Mayflower, sail our seas of difficulty, brave our enemies, and slay our foes. Once the true apostle and disciple of Christ appears, he is the one best man of his time, and the second best man is a thousand leagues behind him.

Your Place in the Ranks

No matter what the weaknesses of the Christian Church, you cannot afford to die without having joined the ranks of the weakest disciples who are fighting Christ's battle. It is not enough for you to say that you will fight a guerrilla warfare. It is an unworthy thing for you to add: "I sympathize with his Church and his cause." Can you afford not to be found with the old guard? If you fight none of Christ's battles, if you have never marched under his leadership, if you have never suffered unto blood, striving against sin, the time will come when you will go up and down the streets of a lost universe, advertising that you will give everything you have save life itself, if only you can find some one who will say that some time, somewhere, under cover of night, you did make a confession of your faith in God and his loving providence, and in Christ your Saviour. And when that hour comes and the Great Assize draws nigh, and the heroes and the martyrs, the patriots and the poets, and your own fathers and mothers are assembled, and the all-searching eyes of God and Conscience pass in review the events of your career, the very thought that you did not join Christ's Old Guard, and lead his hosts, and die at the front of the ranks will bring to you such immeasurable shame that you will call on the rocks to fall upon you, to conceal your loss and your humiliation.

Do You Know Your Bible?

IT IS quite evident, from the number of letters we have received in response to our recent article entitled, "Do You Know Your Bible?" (which appeared in the issue of February 8), that a very large proportion of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD can answer the question truthfully in the affirmative. The proposition for a test of one's Bible knowledge, which might be applied personally by every reader, meets with general approval. Our list was merely a tentative one, and we are more than glad to have from our friends many excellent suggestions along the same line.

To the thirty-five questions given, not a few of which involved a very familiar acquaintance with the Bible, the following readers sent answers that are correct in the order stated:

Mrs. Fayette Goss, Willimantie, Conn., answered 32 correctly; Mr. David Currie, 30; Mrs. P. F. E. Albee, 30; Mr. Roy Vanarnum, 29; Mrs. R. A. Best, 28; C. D. Kendall, 26; H. E. Bacey, 24; Mary E. Stoneman, 22; Mary E. Bradbury, 22; J. L. Bennett, 21; Miss N. Bridgens, 16; A. C. Dilts, 14, etc.

The correct answers to the first list are given below:

1. Thirty-nine books in the Old Testament.
2. Twenty-seven in the New Testament.
3. Gen. 1: 28.
4. Abraham (Gen. 17: 18).
5. Gen. 2: 5, 6.
6. Jacob at Bethel (Gen. 28: 22).
7. Judah (Num. 10: 14).
8. Moses (materially) (Ex. 32: 19).
9. Deborah (Judges 4: 4).
10. The son of Zarephath's daughter (I. Kings 17: 22).
11. Isaiah.
12. Isa. 2: 4.
13. Damascus (Gen. 15: 2).
14. Asenath (41: 45).
15. Gen. 4: 26.
16. Children of Rechab (Jer. 35: 1-11).
17. At Antioch by Paul and Barnabas (Acts 14: 26).
18. Jacob (Gen. 32: 9).
19. Zipporah (Ex. 2: 21).
20. Bezaleel (Ex. 37: 1).
21. Nebuchadnezzar (II. Kings 25: 1-11).
22. Reubenites, Gadites and half of Manasseh (I. Chron. 5: 26).
23. Othniel and Samuel.
24. Cæsar Augustus (Luke 2: 1).
25. Matthias (Acts 1: 23-26).
26. Stephen (Acts 7: 54-60).
27. Last verse Malachi and last verse Revelation.
28. Dan. 12: 3.
29. Thirty-seven.
30. See Acts 7: 55; 9: 46; 23: 11; I. Cor. 15: 8; Rev. 1: 13; 14: 14.
31. Matt. 28: 19, 20.
32. Twice (John 2: 13-16 and Matt. 21: 12).
33. John 5: 24.
34. "If ye have love one to another" (John 13: 35).
35. "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 16: 31).

Mrs. R. A. Best, New York, one of our readers, writes, expressing the general view regarding this feature of Bible study, "I am sure that these Bible questions will form a means of grace and spiritual awakening to all who will endeavor to answer them. They have proved a benefit to me and my family. It seems to me that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should have a Bible class, with a membership whose scholarship should comprise Christians in all parts of the world. It might necessitate a greater labor and outlay, but it will be a grand means for disseminating Bible knowledge and spiritual awakening." David Currie, Canada, writes: "We owe a debt to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for its efforts to promote Bible study, and my earnest prayer is that it may long continue to do so, for the ignorance of Scriptural knowledge even among church-going people is appalling. The questions in the last number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD were well chosen for testing the Scriptural knowledge of its readers."

A reader in Syracuse, N. Y., writes asking us for some book containing such questions; but even were such a book available, it would defeat the very purpose we have in view, which is to stimulate personal Bible study. E. C. Gable, Philadelphia, commends the

Politeness as a Business Asset

By EUGENE THWING

A SENSATION was created in a New York City public department recently when thirty-four employees were disciplined for impoliteness in dealing with the public. These clerks and subordinates cherished the idea that they were public officials independent of the usual rules governing and restraining the conduct of employees in private business concerns, and their feeling of importance and independence led them to a display of boorishness and insolence that suddenly was their undoing. The head of that department had a proper conception of his duty and the duty of his subordinates toward the public.

Politeness is regarded as one of the virtues. It is not generally enough recognized as an important business asset. "I'll never go into that store again," declared a gentleman as he came from a store where the salesman had been discourteous. The proprietor may wonder why his trade falls off while that of his neighbor increases. He may think he does not advertise enough, or cut prices enough; but the customer who was driven away came to him first because of his advertising, and then went to his rival and paid more money for the desired article, for no other reason than that he wanted polite treatment. The latter merchant had a business asset which was of more value to his trade than the display advertisements and cut prices of his neighbor. A lady and gentleman visiting Boston recently were charmed by the quiet refinement and graceful politeness of the floor-walkers and the saleswomen in one of the large department stores. The assistance rendered was so prompt, friendly, and unobtrusive that the business of shopping was made a pleasure, and flattering comments regarding the store and the contrast to certain other stores which it presented were immediately put in circulation by the gratified visitors.

THERE is less danger in overlooking the value of politeness as a business asset in the dealings with the customers of a concern, than there is in the personal conduct of the proprietor in his dealings with those who do not directly contribute to his income. A merchant cannot expect his employees to be courteous to customers if he is not personally courteous to his employees and subordinates. Example outweighs all precept. A loyal, interested employee is too valuable an asset to be destroyed by ill-treatment, and any policy or personal quality which preserves and increases such an asset is itself a valuable asset.

It is very easy to reply abruptly and with irritation to a creditor who seeks to collect an account at an inopportune time; but the good feeling and co-operation of that creditor may become an indispensable thing a little later, and it can be preserved or destroyed by politeness, or the absence of it, shown before the stress comes. The habit of politeness with creditors may prove the one saving asset which looms large in the day of crisis.

Commercial agencies are sometimes the bane, sometimes the blessing of a business man. Many men would be surprised if they knew how much the matter rests with them. Reporters from the leading commercial agencies call at stated intervals upon every business man, and the impression or feeling such a reporter takes away with him from the interview inevitably colors his report to the agency. It is surprising how many business men fail to realize this important fact.

POLITENESS, not mere colorless formality, is a real asset, though hard to preserve sometimes, in any business that is carried on through the mails. Complaints are sure to come from correspondents who have, or think they have, grievances. Very often the complaint is not well grounded, and the man at the desk, knowing all the facts, feels his righteous wrath provoked and consoles himself with the thought of how beautifully he will "call down" and how completely he will squelch the misguided fault-finder. Then he thinks it over—if he is wise. Such a letter as he could write would simply annihilate his correspondent and satisfy his own sense of justice, but—the mistaken critic, angered by the rebuke, and humiliated by the discovery of his error, would thereafter be an aggressive enemy and nevermore a customer. Very often, the wise business man, who has learned by experience, and who has acquired the priceless power of self-control, has been able by a graceful and goodnatured reply to turn such a hasty fault-finder into a cordial and active friend of his business. It was hard for the moment to forego the satisfaction of a sarcastic retort, but it paid. A good story is told of President Lincoln and his Secretary of State, William H. Seward. A very bitter and unfair letter of criticism of the administration was received. Seward was indignant as he showed the letter to Lincoln, and the President heartily agreed with him. "I'm going to write to ——— and give him a piece of my mind," declared Seward. "That's right, do so by all means, and make it as strong as you can," urged Lincoln, rubbing his hands. The letter which Seward wrote and showed to Lincoln a little later was a masterpiece. All the power of invective, all the keen thrusts of sarcasm, all the crushing force of facts were there, and the hostile critic was left without even a knothole to crawl into. "That's fine—splendid!" exclaimed Lincoln, as he handed the letter back to Seward. "What are you going to do with it?" he asked as Seward began folding the letter to fit an envelope. "Do with it? Why, send it to him, of course," replied Seward. "Oh, no, you're not going to do that. Just tear it up and throw it into the fire," said Lincoln. "You have had the satisfaction of writing it; now you feel better, and can forget it. One writes such a letter, but one doesn't send it."

POLITENESS may almost be called one of the selfish virtues. It is pleasant to all who come under its influence, but it brings far greater benefits to the one who exercises it. Politeness is a social duty, but the reflex rewards render it one of the greatest personal and business assets in the inventory of a man's wealth.

Do You Know Your Bible?

Bible questions as well-chosen, and hopes that they will be continued. We give below a second list which we hope will interest every reader in God's Holy Word and that many will make a serious effort to answer them.

We give another list of questions, but this time only twenty in number:

1. How many of the host of Israel that left Egypt entered Canaan?
2. Who said, "Be sure your sin will find you out"?
3. Who built a monument in the middle of a river?
4. What king had an iron bedstead?
5. What prophet bound his own hands and feet together?
6. Where is the way to heaven revealed in four words?
7. What is the Bible's list of a lady's wardrobe?
8. The words "Jesus Christ" are placed together only once in the Gospels. Where is the passage?
9. What is the last prayer recorded in the Bible?
10. Who was the first bigamist on record?
11. Who told the first recorded lie?
12. Who was the first shepherdess?
13. Who was the first to weep?
14. Who wore the first bridal veil?
15. Who erected the first monument to the memory of the dead?
16. Where is the first mention made of liquors?
17. Where is the first mention made of printing in the Bible?
18. Who said, "There is no discharge in this war"?
19. What two prophets declared, "I am no prophet"?
20. Where do we find the saying: "At evening time it shall be light"?

For a Washington Memorial

THE George Washington Memorial Association, which was incorporated in Washington, D. C., in 1898 and reorganized in 1909, has recently decided upon a year's campaign, the object of which is to acquaint the general public with the aims and ambitions of the society and afford an opportunity for all to participate in its object. This is to erect a building, to be known as the "George Washington Memorial Building," to perpetuate Washington's principles and teachings.

The building is to be practical in plan and construction, and of the most durable character. It is to be planned so as to furnish a home and gathering place for national, patriotic, scientific, educational, literary, art, medical, and similar organizations that may need such accommodations. It will furnish a place where all the patriotic societies, both Northern and Southern, may testify to their love for the Father of his Country. There will be a great auditorium and rooms for large and small meetings, office rooms and students' research rooms.

One wing of the structure will be devoted to the interests of children. There will be scope for an exhibit along the lines of the splendid one made in New York at the beginning of this year, as a permanent inspiration and enlightenment to visitors from every quarter of the globe.

Anvil Strokes

..SOME men would rather be profane than profound.

..THE man with a light head will never make much of a light in the world.

..A GOOD book in the home that the boy can keep is worth ten that he has to return to the library.

..UNHAPPY marriages are due to a condition that would mean unhappiness to either, though single.

..INSTEAD of bringing more happiness to a man, much money is apt to drive away the little he already has.

..IT IS easy to be truthful, but some people prefer to do something a little more difficult. W. J. B.

This Week's Bible Centenary

THE WHOLE CHRISTIAN WORLD TO CELEBRATE ON MARCH 26, 1911, THE THREE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FAMOUS AUTHORIZED VERSION

William Tyndale

King James I.

Jerome, Compiler of the "Vulgate"

THREE hundred years ago, in 1611, the greatest of Books, the King James Bible, known as the "Authorized Version," was given to the world. The anniversary of the event, which is this week being observed by some religious denominations, will be more generally and fittingly celebrated on Sunday, March 26. Preparations for an adequate commemoration on that date in Great Britain, Canada, the United States and practically all the English-speaking countries, are already under way. A delegation of distinguished churchmen will visit King George of England, a few days before the general celebration, and will present an address, to which the King will fittingly respond. A copy of the Authorized Version will be given to the King. On Sunday, March 26, the universal topic in the Protestant churches will be the debt which the world owes to the Bible. This will also be the general form of the celebration in the American, Canadian and Australian churches. On the same day, practically at the same hour, millions of churchgoers in all the English-speaking countries will listen to the wonderful history of the Authorized Version, and of the circumstances under which it was given to the world.

It is especially fitting, at this time, that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which during the last twenty years has done a larger work in Bible distribution than any other agency in the world outside of the great Bible societies, should set before its readers the remarkable story of this great Book, which the centuries have endeared to God's people everywhere.

The King James Bible, although it was the Bible of our forefathers for nearly ten generations, had many predecessors, but it was the first that could be truthfully called "the Bible of the people." To trace the history of our Bible, from the early days when the first of the inspired books were written by godly men, divinely chosen for the work, down through the stormy vicissitudes of centuries, to these times, when we enjoy the priceless blessing of a Bible that all can understand, is a record without a parallel in the whole range of secular or sacred literature. It holds us with a spell more powerful than that of any other narrative known to the world. Step by step, down through the ages, we trace the gradual unfolding of God's message to man, ever becoming clearer and more splendid as the centuries roll on. Through many streams, Hebrew, Syriac, Greek, Latin and Anglo-Saxon, the sacred word has flowed unceasingly onward. In each successive age, God sent more light and led men to a nearer view of himself and a clearer understanding of his precious Word.

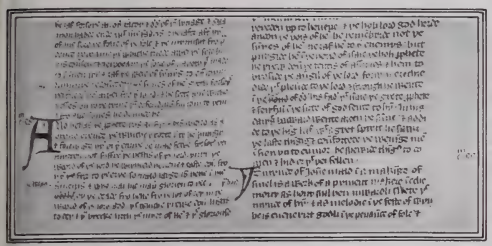
We can follow the progress of the Bible from the days of tablets, papyrus, antelope skins, parchment and vellum down to our own times when we have the sacred Book as the finished product of the modern printing press. In all of these translations, retranslations and revisions, we see the divine line of progress in the uplifting and enlightening of the race.

The Early Manuscripts

Our Bible has sixty-six books. These were written during a period covering about sixteen hundred years—the Old Testament Scriptures in Hebrew, the New Testament in Greek. The originals were written by hand on skins or papyrus. Of these original manuscripts none are now in existence, and have not been for hundreds of years; but before they were lost or destroyed, copies and translations had been made of them; and from these copies and translations from the Hebrew, Syriac, Greek, Latin and Anglo-Saxon languages, beginning about the tenth century, we derive our modern English Bible.

King James Receiving the First Copy of the "Authorized Version"

Early Translations



From the early centuries of the Christian era to the present time, the Bible has been subject to many revisions and retranslations. Probably the first translation of the New Testament was the old Syriac Scriptures, about fifty years after the earliest New Testament manuscripts were written. These very closely represented the language of the people among whom Jesus lived and wrought. Then came, also at an early date, the Egyptian, the Ethiopic and the Version of Ulfilas, bishop of the Goths, about 350 A.D. In the latter part of the fourth century, the old Latin versions were found to be so full of errors, arising through early and imperfect scholarship, that Eusebius Hieronymus (St. Jerome) was chosen to prepare the Latin Version which is called the Vulgate. In 385 A.D. he finished the New Testament, and then undertook the translation of the Old Testament from the original Hebrew, employing the oldest manuscripts then accessible. For nearly a thousand years the Vulgate was the parent of every later version of the Scriptures in Western Europe, and even the discovery of much earlier manuscripts than those used by Jerome did not diminish the merit of his splendid work.

The Bible in Early English

We who now enjoy the priceless privilege of the Bible in a form that appeals to the great mass of the common people, as well as to the cultured, may well look in wonder and gratitude at those steps in the progress of the Holy Book. England had no complete Bible in the tongue of the common people before Wycliffe's day. Caedmon, a learned Saxon shepherd, wrote in metrical form for the common people of his day the substance of the sacred story. He employed the early Saxon and paraphrased the Latin text "with a barbarian's vigor and sublimity." His descriptions of the Creation, the Ark, the sinful life and tragic end of Pharaoh, the Exodus, the ravages of sin and death in the world, the sorrows of the grave and the dark picture of the future states of reward and punishment, were the only literature relating to the Bible which up to that time had found auditors outside of monastery walls. Bishop Eadhelm, of Sherborne, was the next Bible interpreter. He rendered the Psalms into Saxon. Bishop Egbert did the same office for the Gospels and the "Venerable Bede" finished

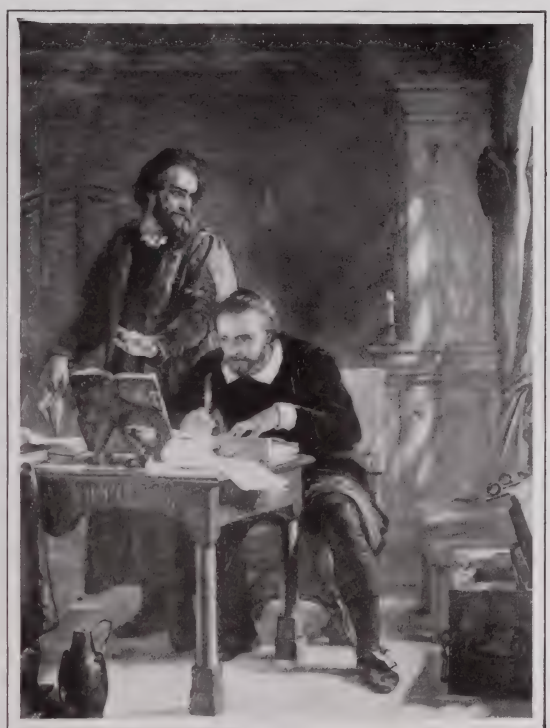
From Tyndale's New Testament, A.D. 1525

St. John's Gospel almost with his last expiring breath. The "good King Alfred" decided to give his subjects an English Bible, but passed away before his task was finished.

Our First Complete English Bible



During the tenth century there were several translators and revisionists. After the Anglo-Saxon versions, there followed a long interval of inactivity in Scripture revision. It was not until John Wycliffe, in 1384, finished his work of complete Scripture revision and translation, that the people of England knew what it was to have a complete Bible in their own language. Later, William Tyndale, a ripe scholar and theologian, the friend of Erasmus and the contemporary of Luther, began work on his famous Bible. Printing had been invented, and Tyndale longed to put a printed Bible into the hands of his countrymen. He encountered many discouragements, and notably among churchmen. It was a critical period for Bible translation. Men were jailed and even hanged for merely owning or reading a copy of Luther's works. Tyndale went to the continent, and after many adventures he produced, in Worms, the first printed English New Testament. He printed an edition of six thousand copies, which were sent into England secretly.

Everybody knows the story how the Bishop of London began buying Tyndale's Testaments and burning them, while Tyndale used the Bishop's money for printing fresh editions, which were distributed broadcast. When the churchmen and critics of that day found that they could not suppress Tyndale's open Bible, they applied the extreme argument and arrested, tried and strangled him at the stake. Thus passed from the earth the heroic spirit of William Tyndale, the father of the open Bible, to whom the whole world owes a debt it can never repay!

Various Versions of the Bible

Some three years after Tyndale's death in 1539, when the Reformation had gained ground in England, what was known as the "Great Bible" was issued. Myles Coverdale, with a staff of translators, labored on his Bible, following Tyndale's methods closely. Meanwhile John Rogers had issued "Matthew's Bible," which was largely copied from Tyndale's. Still another imitation of Tyndale, called "Taverner's Bible," was issued, but none of these was satisfactory to the people, so the "Great Bible" was planned, with Coverdale as chief adviser in the work. This famous Bible, issued under royal authorization, was a compilation from Tyndale, Matthew and Coverdale, but with Tyndale as the principal basis. Various revisions of the Bible followed during the next few generations—the principal one being the Geneva Bible. This brings the record down to that most eventful period of modern Bible history, in which the King James Version saw the light. England in the early part of the seventeenth century, had three different versions: The Geneva, the Bishop's and the "Great Bible"—the first widely read, the second a standby of the ecclesiastics, and the third used in a number of country churches. The Geneva was the most scholarly and accurate of the three. None was satisfactory, however, and the time was now ripe for a new and better Bible which would appeal to the understanding of the common people.

Society in Great Britain was at this time in a peculiar condition. King James VI. of Scotland had become King James I. of England. The two countries were united under one sovereign, yet each retained its own Church and laws. Politically and socially, the country was like the sea after a storm. Education was making progress among a certain class; but the religious differences of the people gave the monarch more concern than other matters. He found himself ruling over three countries, each with a different religion—Scotland, Presbyterian or Puritan; Ireland, Catholic; England, Anglican or Episcopal. But James did one good thing which will long keep his name and fame in the world's remembrance. He believed that his people should have a uniform Bible. Setting aside all three versions then in use, he ordered a fresh translation and revision of the entire Scriptures, which should be called after himself—the "King James" Version. Its preparation was undertaken by his express command. The most learned professors in the leading universities were chosen as translators, and their work was reviewed by the bishops, and finally laid before the privy council and ratified by royal authority. Among them were Dr. Lancelot Andrewes, Dean, and afterward Bishop, of Winchester, who was familiar with Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Greek, Latin, and at least ten other languages; Sir Henry Saville, the most learned layman of his time; Dr. Overall, Regius Professor of Theology, afterward Bishop of Norwich, also Dean of St. Paul's; Adrian de Saravia, by birth a Fleming, Prebendary of Westminster, and Canon of Canterbury; Dr. Bedwell, the great Arabic scholar; Dr. Miles Smith and Dr. Ravis, Dean of Christ Church, and Vice Chancellor of Oxford University. Their task occupied four years. In 1611, the new Bible was printed in Gothic letter and first published in folio, with the title, "The Holy Bible, Conteyning the Old Testament and the New; Newly translated out of the Originall Tongues, and with the former translations diligently compared and revised by His Majestie's Special Comandment. Appointed to be read in Churches." The first copy of the new Authorized Version was bound and handed to the King. It was a stately folio, each page being 14 by 8⅞ inches, exclusive of the margin, and with two columns of type on each page. The text was heavy Old English type and the headlines of each page were in large Roman letters. Each chapter opened with an engraved initial and every book with a still larger initial. It contained the text and Apocrypha, an "Address to the Reader," a dedication to the King, 34 pages of Bible genealogies and a calendar. There were a few marginal notes, although the King had given orders that none were to be used. The one great act of James' reign was completed. A second edition was printed the same year (1611) and others in 1613, 1617, 1634, and 1640, all from the same type.

Tyndale Dictating His Bible Translation to His Secretary

The presentation of the completed work to the King marked an epoch in Bible translation. For purity of English, ripeness of scholarship, beauty and dignity of diction, it surpassed all previous translations and soon became the standard Bible of the English-speaking world. Its high literary character, wonderful accuracy and fidelity of translation have combined to make it a monument of scholarship for the world's admiration. That the great revision which the Bible-loving monarch ordered was a wise one, was abundantly proved by the result. Tyndale enunciated the rule which, from the beginning of Bible revision, seems to have governed such work: "If it be perceived that in any place the revision has not attained unto the very sense of the tongue, or the very meaning of the Scriptures, or that they have not given the right English, they should put their hands to it and amend it, remembering that so it is their duty to do."

Many millions of copies of the Authorized Version have been sent to all parts of the world by the different missionary societies here and abroad. It has been translated in whole or in part into almost every known language under the sun, and to-day the Gospels, the New Testament and, in many cases, the Bible entire, may be truthfully said to be known not only in the Christian countries, but in Asia, Africa, South America, the Arctic and the islands of the sea.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been one of the largest disseminators of the Gospel. It has distributed over 1,250,000 volumes of the Bible, New Testament and Gospels in our own and many other lands. Every year it sends out from its own presses many thousands of Bibles and Testaments.

Thus the grand old King James Authorized Version, the "well of English undefiled," which was represented by a single book laid in the monarch's hands in 1611, has been divinely multiplied beyond all calculations or expectations, and has spread the message of redeeming love and the final regeneration of the race through all the earth.

$31,000 More for Chinese Relief

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the departure of the Buford from Seattle for Chin-kiang, carrying $21,000 worth of American flour, the gift of the readers of this journal, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cabled through our State Department in Washington direct to the two relief committees in China, $10,000 additional. This $31,000, added to previous remittances, makes a grand total of $57,000 sent thus far by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to the famine field. This splendid generosity on the part of our readers speaks more eloquently than words. May their practical sympathy and rare self-denial be followed by a rich blessing on the work in which they are engaged. Before they can read these words, their latest money gift will have been converted into foodstuffs and distributed in the famine area.

The Mexican Border Troubles

OUR sudden mobilization of troops and warships along the Mexican border and the Gulf Coasts has only one significance. For months past conditions along our 1,400-mile frontier have been unsatisfactory both to our own government and that of Mexico. It has been charged that the insurrectionary movement against Diaz has been directed largely from that territory and that it has been "an asylum for insurgents." Our international obligation to preserve the neutrality of the frontier made it imperative that some decided step should be taken to prevent this. Besides, the long-continued and wasteful civil war across the line has now reached a point where the protection not only of American but foreign residents within the war zone may become a task to which the Mexican authorities may be unequal. In the event of Diaz's death or deposition, a period of chaos and disorder would imperil not only non-combatants, but would very likely result in serious loss to American interests representing $1,500,000,000 in invested capital, and to other interests that are entitled to protection. Mexico has been notified of the purpose of the American mobilization and assured of its pacific and friendly object.

Some attempts have been made to create a "war scare," on the ground that neither border patrol nor military and naval manœuvres justify the calling out on "surprise orders" by the President of 20,000 troops, 2,000 marines and a war squadron, unless there were some important ulterior purpose. There has been talk of a demand from a foreign power that we should intervene, else European governments would protect their own interests; and it has been said that Japan had a covetous eye on a naval base in Mexico. These are the imaginings of irresponsible romancers. There is no foreign element in the question. We ourselves have no designs upon Mexican territory, and it may be taken for granted that no European interference will be attempted. Our border army and navy will simply give us an effective force within easy reach of the point where it would be most needed should the necessity arise. There may be no need of intervention, but should it become inevitable, our preparedness for the emergency will have been abundantly justified. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers do not approve of war, and we chronicle with reluctance anything in the nature of a warlike demonstration; but the present instance is one of a great power using its moral and material influence for the preservation of order and the protection of human life and property.

Another View of Drinkers' Licenses

FROM a reader of this journal in Lawrence, Kans., comes this letter with several very pertinent suggestions of the proposed bill to "license the drinkers," which we recently commented upon in these columns. He says:

> This proposition is the latest development of prohibitory law, as indicated in a communication [illegible] some time last year, calling your attention to what I regard as the lameness of our own prohibitory law, so-called, which undertakes to create a sentiment that will support the absurd proposition, namely, that it is a crime deserving of fine and imprisonment to sell what it is not a crime to buy! To sell or give away intoxicants in Kansas, whether little or much in quantity, means condemnation and guilt; but to buy or accept the gift, is innocence! Observe that under our modified law it is made crime to sell for any purpose, "except wine for the communion table"! The one who would buy may be a total abstainer in need of spirits for mechanical or scientific use, but to sell for the supply of his want is crime meriting fine and a cell! So righteous have we become out here in Kansas that, according to internal revenue showings, there are "993 retail liquor dealers, 11 wholesale liquor dealers, 113 retail malt liquor dealers and 27 wholesale malt liquor dealers" employed in our "progressive" commonwealth furnishing "wine for the communion table." How does this appeal to your moral sense of right? Is it just? Is it equitable? Is it decent? Is it consistent? Is it not time to go one step farther and "license the drinker"?
> I. J. G.

While the argument is an ingenious one, it is hardly conceivable that drinkers' licenses, even if legalized in Indiana, Kansas, or any other State, would ever be of practical service. Not even a chronic tippler would willingly advertise his own weakness. The logical proposition that what it is unlawful to sell should be equally illegal to buy, is sound in theory, and if it could be put into actual operation, it would reduce the army of "moderate" drinkers amazingly. As to the moral responsibility of the buyer, observation shows that the moral sense of the man addicted to drink is invariably blunted by indulgence, and in this respect he is little if any better or worse off than the seller, who is blind to the awful body and soul destroying effects of the trade in which he is engaged.

As we recollect the conditions of the proposed Indiana drinkers' license, it stipulated that the applicant must show to the satisfaction of the licensing board that he is not a confirmed drunkard or inebriate; that his drinking will not affect his family or his business injuriously, and that he can afford to drink—conditions which, in the great majority of cases, if rigidly enforced would be simply prohibitive, since if the truth were admitted, no man—not even a moderate drinker—could indulge his bibulous appetite without detriment to his family, business, pocket book, or social and moral standing. It would certainly be interesting and instructive to note the effects of the proposed drinkers' license law in any State which decided to make the experiment.

Ballinger's Successor

RICHARD A. BALLINGER lays down his portfolio of the Interior after a stormy Cabinet career. From the beginning he has been a target for accusation. He leaves with the strong endorsement of the President, who records his opinion that Ballinger has been the victim of a conspiracy. His successor, Walter L. Fisher, is a Western lawyer of high standing who has been a prominent figure for years in the movement for improved civic conditions in Chicago, where he was the founder and head of the Municipal Voters' League, which has stood for the purification of local and county politics. He is, moreover, an ardent advocate of conservation and is an authority on railroad regulation, reclamation, irrigation and waterpower sites and is altogether one of the most available men who could have been chosen as head of the department. Added to these qualifications, Mr. Fisher, who is still in his forties, is a vigorous speaker and a good, energetic fighter for principle. His career in the Cabinet will be watched with interest.

The Evil of Race Prejudice

TO THE mind of the average Christian, there is nothing farther from the spirit and teaching of the Master than race prejudice. His was a mission to the whole world, and his "Great Commission" directed that his Gospel should be carried to the remotest parts of the earth. His disciples taught that all the human race were of one blood, the children of one Father. For any religious organization in this day to inject into its teachings anything that savors of race prejudice, would be to write the doom of that organization, for no blessing, material or spiritual, could attend its labors thereafter. Therefore, when we hear of a great religious organization, which has done much excellent work in the past, drawing the "color line" in its ministry and reviving the old, dying spirit of race prejudice, we are justified in concluding that its usefulness will be jeopardized if not destroyed wherever it makes such an experiment. Let us who believe in Jesus be brethren to all men, of whatsoever race, color, or condition, if by any means we may save some.

Out of Place

OUR recent comment on the news that the silver service presented by the State of Utah to the battleship Utah, was to bear the portrait of Brigham Young, has drawn forth similar protests from many quarters. Utah received a merited compliment when the government named the great warship for it. As a State, she has had many great and good citizens, any one of whose features might well have graced the silver decorations, but her strange choice has caused general surprise. Brigham Young, a man of large natural gifts, eloquent, astute, and able in many lines, was the apostle of a sensual and anachronistic religion, and our nation has repudiated him and the most characteristic of his teachings. Doubtless there are many in Utah who honestly believe that Young was, as one correspondent in Ogden City describes him in a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, "the great pioneer and redeemer of the most dreary and desolate place in the West." There are many who will even defend upon Scriptural grounds his polygamic principles. We recognize that they, like others, are entitled to their view. It is true, he was a pioneer and the founder of Utah, but the consensus of American opinion regarding him has never changed, nor is it likely to change now. To place his likeness upon the silver service of an American battleship is a thing strangely out of place; yet it would not be surprising if even this proposition should be carried through by the power of politics. Certainly no other power on earth could accomplish it.

General Notes

—REV. CHARLES F. AKED has resigned the pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York, to take effect April 5. He has been pastor for four years. He may accept a call from the First Congregational Church of San Francisco at $10,000 a year. He is forty-seven years of age. His New York salary was $12,000.

—AS HAS been announced, all the girls and women bearing the name of Mary in the United Kingdom have united to contribute a magnificent royal gift to Queen Mary on her coronation. This action of the Marys has spurred the Georges to rivalry, and all the boys and men bearing this name throughout the British dominions are exerting themselves to raise such a subscription as shall enable them to present some striking testimonial of admiration and loyalty to their king on the day he is crowned as George V. of England.

—PRESIDENT TAFT the other day paid a high compliment to the medical science of America. He said that it was a matter for national pride and congratulation that American physicians and especially army physicians have done more in the last ten years, or since the Spanish-American War, to stamp out contagious and epidemic diseases in the tropics than was done by all the medical men of other countries for the previous two hundred years. He pointed out that wherever American settlements were made, sanitation became a science, and the death rate immediately dropped. He emphasized the fact that the dreaded "yellow jack" (fever) was now but a terrible memory of the past.

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Blew Off Mountain Top

THE Lackawanna Railroad, in a new construction which shortens the distance between New York and Buffalo by thirteen miles, encountered a mountain in Sussex County, New Jersey, which obstruction was removed in a summary manner. Tunnels two feet by six were drilled under the mountain for seventy-five feet, and thirty feet from the entrance two other tunnels running at right angles were dug sixty feet in one direction and twenty-five feet in another. Smaller lateral tunnels were made connecting with the main one. All of these were charged with explosives, filled with sand and sealed with cement. The touch of an electric button exploded twenty thousand pounds of dynamite and Judson powder, blowing the whole top of the mountain off. A number of persons had gathered to see the explosion, but ropes stretched by the authorities kept them within safe distance. The forces of science skilfully applied by man are powerful, but this removal of the mountain top is insignificant when compared with the forces of nature, which blew the whole volcano of Krakatoa into the air, sending the fragments to the very limits of our atmosphere, raining dust and cinders a long time after the explosion, burying with lava two hundred thousand people (most of the inhabitants of the island), and destroying a dozen ships and five hundred small boats. The terrific forces of nature illustrating the divine energy are thus referred to by the Psalmist:

He looketh on the earth, and it trembleth; he toucheth the hills, and they smoke. (Ps. 104:32.)

Mikado's Gift to Poor

The Emperor of Japan has just given three quarters of a million of dollars to the poor of his country out of his own private purse. This gift was accompanied by the statement that the change which is taking place in modern national economics makes people apt to deviate into erroneous ways. Some of the native newspapers think that the recent anarchistic plot in his empire led to this generous gift, but we would rather think that it was occasioned mainly by the largeness of his heart, which has ever been manifested toward his people. The present Emperor belongs to a family which has ruled for 2,500 years. When he took the throne a generation ago he found an absolute despotism, which he has gradually turned into a limited monarchy by his wise statesmanship and by his genuine love for the common people, so that this gift of $750,000 to the poor is not only beautiful but natural act on his part. It is to be hoped that the Emperor may realize in his inner experience and life as well as in his public administration the reward of beneficence promised in the words:

He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack. (Prov. 28:27.)

Eight Thousand Dollars a Year

A wealthy banker died recently and his widow asked Surrogate Edgar Jackson of Mineola, L. I., to draw from the estate $17,310 a year for the support of their daughter. The Surrogate thought that with economy the daughter could get along with $8,000 a year and allowed her that amount. The mother in the bill of particulars which she filed as a reason for asking for the seventeen thousand odd dollars included $200 for a maid, $600 for governess, $670 for minor items of clothing, $1,000 for gowns, $200 for theatres and amusements, $5,500 for hotel bills, $2,000 for automobile maintenance, $5,000 for the care of the country place at Westbury during the absence of mother and daughter in Europe, $1,000 for wages and expenses of grooms in Europe, and $500 for steamship tickets. The schedule also included $250 for dancing lessons and $1,000 for the care of the daughter's teeth. Persons of ordinary incomes hardly realize the vast annual expenses that seem to be a necessity to the rich, and yet there is too often wicked extravagance and a vulgar display of wealth which are as damaging to the development of the children as they are disgusting to an intelligent public. The schedule did not seem to ask for anything for charity or for the cause of religion. A number of the wealthiest families in the United States dress their children plainly, teach them how to do practical work, the daughters the art of housekeeping, and bring them up to their majority through a simplicity very much like that of the humbler homes. And large numbers of the affluent use their money to bless others as well as themselves, and promote the kingdom of God.

Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they may be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. (I. Tim. 6:17-19.)

The New Jersey Hill-top Which Was Removed by 20,000 Pounds of Explosives

Aged Broker Robbed

Aaron Bancroft, eighty-four years old, grandnephew of George Bancroft, the historian, was robbed of $85,000 in the Produce Exchange Building in New York recently. Mr. Bancroft is the senior member of George Bancroft & Co., brokers, of the Consolidated Stock Exchange, and well known in the business world. Mr. Bancroft went to his safe deposit vault in the Produce Exchange Building with a large envelope containing securities worth $85,000. In the corridor he had a collision with two men. The old man was thrown down, his hat going in one direction and the envelope in another. The men were most profuse in their apologies for the accident and helped him to his feet. He picked up his hat and the envelope and made his deposit in his box. That was Thursday. On Monday his son, George Bancroft, went to the vault to get the securities his father had deposited and found that the envelope contained simply clippings from the newspapers. The Pinkerton detectives say that these clever thieves jostled and threw the old man down, striking the envelope from his hand as he fell, and placed an envelope of similar color and size filled with a substance that felt like securities, and slipped the envelope containing the securities into their own pockets. The fake envelope left on the floor was identical with the other, except that the name of the firm was not on it, but the broker did not discover that fact and made the deposit as usual. The securities were all negotiable, and it is likely that they have been sold to innocent parties. Every day and almost every hour reveals some new method of getting something for nothing, of taking money by stealth or force from others. In proportion to our blessings and opportunities we have lamentably poor protection to life and property in this country, especially in the cities. The aged banker who has been victimized is only one of a vast multitude of persons who can make the complaint:

The bands of the wicked have robbed me. (Ps. 119:61).

Heavenly Securities

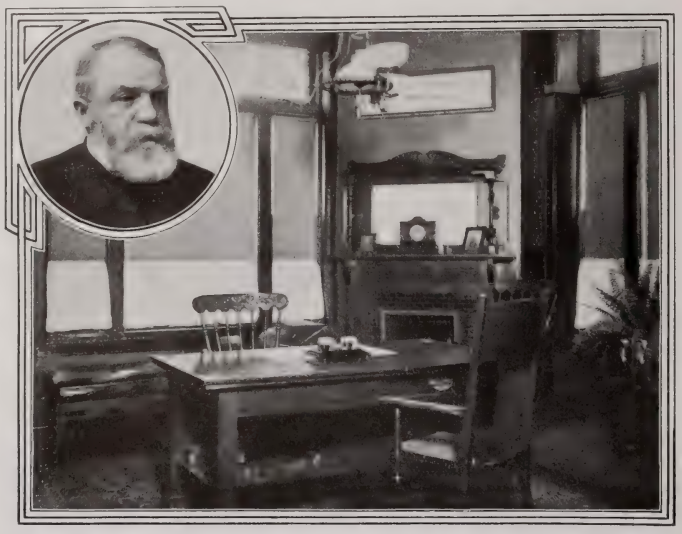
Mrs. Cora Harris, author of The Circuit Rider's Wife, recently filed with W. F. Hunt, clerk of the County Court at Nashville, an inventory of her late husband's estate. He was the Rev. Lundy H. Harris, who while mentally deranged committed suicide by taking morphine. This is the singular inventory filed: "At the time of his death he had $235 in his purse, $116 in the Union Bank and Trust Company of this city (Nashville), about four hundred books, and the coffin in which he was buried, which cost about $85. The major part of his estate was invested in heavenly securities, the values of which have been variously declared in this world and highly taxed by the various churches, but never realized. He invested every year not less than $1,200 in charity, so secretly, so inoffensively and so honestly that he was never suspected of being a philanthropist, and never praised for his generosity. He pensioned an old outcast woman in Barron County and an old soldier in Nashville. He sent two little negro boys to school, and supported for three years a family of five who could not support themselves. He contributed anonymously to every charity in Nashville; every old maid interested in a 'benevolent object' received his aid; every child he knew exacted and received penny tolls from his tenderness. He supported the heart of every man who confided in him with encouragement and affection. He was ever recognized as one of the largest bondholders in heaven." The inventories of the real wealth of true ministers and of faithful Christian men and women in their deeds of benevolence and piety, cannot be spread upon the records of any county, but they are carefully cherished in the heart of our heavenly Father. The Master pleaded with his heroes to accumulate these spiritual assets.

Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. (Matt. 6:20.)

Boy Inventor Blinded

Floyd B. Merrill, a boy seventeen years old, a bundle-wrapper in a department store at Seattle, Wash., is a singularly brilliant genius. In his study of electricity and in his experimentation with the same he discovered a new safety appliance for warning railroad engineers of a defective track. While testing this appliance the other day a flash from crossed wires burned his face, destroying entirely the sight of his left eye and so injuring the right one that the specialist declares that there is no hope for it. It is said that a leading railroad was so well convinced of the value of the invention that they made the boy an offer of $48,000 cash or an annuity for life for it. After the accident young Merrill said: "I suppose it had to be, but I am glad that I had perfected the invention and will now sell it, for it means a support for my mother and father and myself, now that I will be unable to work any more." This boy, Floyd Merrill, is a genuine hero. Not all the heroes are on the decks of ships or on battlefields or in places of peril. We have here, in one of the plain, simple, unsensational, undramatic callings of life, a boy who, while making a practical living at the bottom of the ladder, wrapping up bundles, by his study of science and by his keen insight into the electric fluid, catches a bright thought of God and puts it in tangible shape for the uses of transportation and for the saving of life. He had no time to envy the sons of the rich nor quarrel with the times that may be unfriendly to industrial or social progress; he simply got down to the business nearest at hand and intensely devoted his energies to it. His heroism reached its climax in his earnest toil to support his parents and his forgetfulness of self, even in his own blindness, at the satisfaction of the thought that he had already earned the support for his mother and father for life. This boy may not be able to see out of his physical eyes, but he sees very far into the mind of God in the material realm, and into the heart of God in the worlds of duty and of love. In the intellectual brilliancy of this boy and the beautiful provision he made for the support of his parents we are reminded of the saying of Scripture:

A wise son maketh a glad father. (Prov. 10:11.)



Evangelist Moody Remembered

SERVICES commemorative of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Moody Bible Institute were held in the Moody Church, Chicago, Sunday morning, February 5, the anniversary of the birth of the founder, D. L. Moody. The Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., dean of the Institute, presided. Rev. R. A. Torrey, D.D., former superintendent of the Institute and pastor of the Moody Church, delivered the anniversary sermon before an audience which completely filled the large edifice, in which there were over two hundred of the old students of the Institute, who came to Chicago from almost every part of the world for the celebration, which continued throughout the week.

In beginning his sermon Dr. Torrey said:

"The Bible Institute to-day, under the presidency of Henry P. Crowell and the deanship of Dr. James M. Gray, stands for exactly the same things it stood for under the presidency of D. L. Moody and the superintendency of Reuben A. Torrey. Find my text, and you will find substantially what I have to say about it, II. Tim. 2: 15. 'Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing [or handling aright], the word of truth.' This Bible Institute," said Dr. Torrey, "has lived up to that text, which has been its motto. As I have gone around the world I have heard that text called out from docks as I pulled into them the first time, all over the world where students of the Bible Institute have gone."

Dr. Torrey spoke at length on the distinctive principles for which the Institute has stood and still stands. He enumerated them as being: the divine origin, the absolute inerrancy, matchless power, and perfect sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures; the real deity of Jesus Christ, his propitiatory death, and his resurrection power; the reality, the necessity, and the indispensability of the Holy Spirit in salvation; the tremendous efficacy and immeasurable importance of prayer; the importance and power of personal work; the necessity of a life of sacrifice and service; and the importance of an immediate response to the world-wide call and commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel." Dr. Torrey said: "D. L. Moody was a man of one Book; and the Bible Institute, which is simply D. L. Moody living over again, his life in the lives of thousands of others here upon earth, has always been an institute of one Book, and by the grace of God will always remain so." In closing, he said that time would fail to tell of the hundreds and hundreds who have gone out to all parts of the earth. "In every land I have visited, secretaries of foreign missionary boards would come to me, and missionaries would come to me, and tell me of the great work being done in their fields by former students of the Bible Institute."

Mr. Moody's Room at the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

Tribute was paid to the work of Dwight L. Moody at a meeting held Monday evening, when Henry P. Crowell, president of the Institute, presided. Former friends and associates narrated incidents of his life and told of how his marvelous influence was brought to bear on Chicago years ago. Among the speakers were E. W. Blatchford, LL.D.; W. B. Jacobs, and L. Wilbur Messer.

In speaking of D. L. Moody as an evangelist, the Rev. Charles Stelzle said he knew him best as the man with a big heart—a man who wanted superior men to do things. He admired his appreciation of the other man. "He loved men. He loved children. His sympathy could not he measured.

"As an evangelist, he was a world-wide power, a world preacher, not only for Boston and Chicago and a few cities in this country. His messages given in life are still the cause of rejoicing around the civilized world. Many educational and social institutions are the natural outgrowth of the work of D. L. Moody.

"Mr. Moody's dependence always rested upon God. He was a man of prayer. Yes, Mr. Moody prayed, but he worked as though everything depended on Moody."

During the week hundreds visited the Institute. Besides the regular anniversary services there were receptions, reunions, and conferences. Fellowship meetings in both departments were conducted by former students of the Bible Institute. The praise service, at 7.30, in the Moody Church, was led by Dr. D. B. Towner, assisted by members of the music course, and a chorus.

In the absence of Dr. A. C. Dixon, pastor of the church, Dr. Gray, dean of the Institute, had charge of the morning and evening services.

One of the chief attractions of the gathering was Mr. Moody's room. Everything here has been kept as it was when Mr. Moody left it and it proved a Mecca for hundreds of those in attendance at the Institute during the course of the anniversary services.

Our Army on Mexico's Frontier

THE action of President Taft in ordering, through the Army and Navy Departments, some 19,000 soldiers and 2,000 marines from fifteen naval vessels to mobilize along the Mexican border from Texas to California, caused some surprise throughout the country on March 7. Ostensibly, the mobilization or mustering of so many troops was simply for the purpose of manœuvring, but in view of the troubled situation in Mexico between the Diaz government and the insurrectos most people were inclined to look at the matter in a different light. Never before was such an extensive movement made by the United States in time of peace. If manœuvring was the sole object, it was asked, why were the troops and vessels supplied with ball ammunition and not blank cartridges? Moreover, several stations or proving grounds west of the Mississippi, better adapted for experimenting in military tactics, could have been selected.

It is well known that the United States has vast interests in Mexico and that the condition of affairs in that country for some time has not been one to invite confidence. In recent engagements the Federal troops have been worsted by the insurrectos, a fact which has given the latter fresh ambition and resolve to continue in their course of insubordination. The Diaz government is far from stable; the President himself is a vanishing issue, and on account of his advancing age and enfeebled condition is no longer able to steer the helm of state. Under these circumstances there is a lack of public confidence. As this country has more than one billion and a half dollars invested in mines, merchandise, manufactures and other miscellaneous enterprises, it becomes imperative on our government to keep its weather eye open for emergencies. Although it is denied that any orders have been given for American soldiers to cross the border, it is known that our State Department has been in consultation with the Diaz government on the subject and that if occasion should arise to protect American or other foreign property, the American troops will be authorized by the Diaz government to cross over.

It has also been revealed that England made a complaint to Washington asking what the United States was doing to protect foreign interests. English investors complained to their own government that their interests in Mexico were suffering from the insurrectos, so Britain officially intimated to the United States that if the latter would not safeguard foreign interests in Mexico, Britain would have to take a hand in protecting her own citizens. Doubtless this attitude had some consideration in the question of spurring this country to some action to make it unnecessary for any foreign power to interfere on the American continent.

CURRENT COMMENT ON PASSING EVENTS

—ENGLAND AND Germany are both taking steps with the view of reducing Mormon activity in those two countries, from which in late years thousands of young women have been induced to emigrate to Utah.

—TWO NOTABLE fasts are recorded. Ella Marterson of White Bear, Minn., fasted thirty-six days as a remedy for nervous breakdown, and Annie Geshella, of Passaic, N. J., fasted twenty-five days. Neither appeared to have suffered vitally from their long abstinence from food.

—IT IS ESTIMATED that the railways of this country lose more than $1,000,000 a day for lack of efficiency in the various departments. For instance, $500,000,000 is yearly expended in supplies, whereas sixty per cent. of this amount would be sufficient. There is a great loss in printing, for which the annual bill is fourteen millions of dollars, only one million less than the bill for all the steel rails used in construction.

ARE YOU using cold storage eggs? If so, do you know how long they have been thus kept? When you buy a chicken from your butcher have you any idea of the date on which it was killed? There is no doubt that many kinds of products for consumption are kept so long in cold storage that they are unfit for human use. These questions give rise to the problem how long is it possible to keep supplies in cold storage and still have them fit for food. Here is the answer: Beef can be kept seven months; veal, four months; pork, four months; sheep, four months; lamb, three months; poultry, three months; game, three months; fish, three months; eggs, three months, and butter, three months.

—IT IS BELIEVED that the barons of the Beef Trust will be put on trial by April 1. Although several months have elapsed since criminal indictments were returned against them by a Federal grand jury, they have succeeded in evading trial by retaining the highest priced lawyers in the country to raise technicalities for the purpose of delaying the day of reckoning. Now, however, thanks to the indefatigable efforts of Lawyer Kenyon, the able assistant of Attorney-General Wickersham, these bloated millionaires who piled up their colossal fortunes on the suffering of the poor, will have to face a public trial and make answer for their misdeeds. It is to be hoped that neither wealth nor influence will be allowed to thwart justice in dealing with them.

—SOME ALARMISTS have been talking of a war between the United States and Japan, but the scare exists only in their own minds, and has no foundation in fact. The best of feeling prevails between the two countries, as is evidenced by the treaty which has recently been ratified. Japan has no desire what ever to maintain other than the most friendly feeling for us and it is for our own interest in return to reciprocate this feeling. At the inauguration of the American Peace Society of Japan at Yokohama on January 30, United States Ambassador O'Brien expressed the true situation of the two countries to each other when he said: "There is no cause under the sun why there should be distrust between the people of the United States and Japan. There are no questions of importance pending, and no business being conducted diplomatically which should excite the suspicions or make the slightest trouble between the two nations."

THE CLOSING SCENE IN CONGRESS

THE LAST HOUR OF THE CLOSING SESSION OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES (SIXTY-FIRST CONGRESS)

AMID scenes of disorder and turbulence in the House and in an atmosphere of unusual bitterness and acrimony in the Senate, the Sixty-first Congress passed into history at noon on March 4. Rarely in the memory of the oldest member has the close of a Congress been marked by such scenes as were enacted in the House. Determined to defeat President Taft's Tariff Board bill under any circumstances, the Democrats, under the leadership of Representative Fitzgerald, of New York, continued a defiant filibuster to fifteen minutes before noon, the hour for the final adjournment. Three times the Speaker ordered the mace to be carried on the floor by the sergeant-at-arms in order that the members might be forced to cease their uproar and take their seats.

Senators Owen and Gore, both of Oklahoma, took occasion in the closing hours in the Upper House to make Senators regret the day they admitted the Territory of Oklahoma to the sisterhood of States, and incidentally furnished a new argument to those who regard the popular election or nomination of Senators as a deplorable innovation.

Senator Owen, by his determined and far from good-natured filibuster against the adoption of the resolution approving the constitution of New Mexico, which he opposed because he wanted similar approbation of the constitution of Arizona coupled therewith, enraged his colleagues on both sides of the Senate and greatly increased the acrimony of the closing hours.

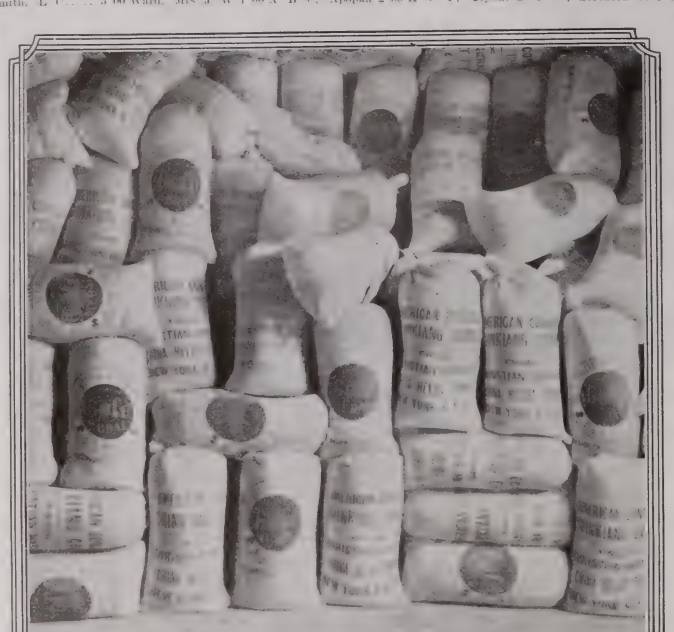
Few members of the Congress just ended can recall a session characterized by so much dissension, so great a lack of leadership or such bitter factional strife. Republicans and Democrats have been sadly divided. The insurgent movement in the House achieved the overthrow of the "one-man rule" in that body, and went far to restore it to its former position of influence in the affairs of the nation, but the victory of the Democrats last November so disheartened the Republicans and encouraged the Democrats that the latter have been able in this last session to exert considerable power, which, due to lack of unanimity, has occupied a great deal of time.

The President has called the Sixty-second Congress to meet in special session on April 4. This date was selected after conferences, at the Capitol, with Democratic and Republican leaders, the members of the Cabinet and others. It became obvious that most of the Republican leaders had believed all along that the President was not in earnest in his purpose to call a special session, and that he made the announcement only with the view of forcing approval of the reciprocity agreement at this session. It is stated that President Taft's first message to the Sixty-second Congress will deal solely with that question and will urge the expeditious passage of a resolution of approval. It is generally believed that the President is counting on the changes in the personnel of both Houses as a feature favorable to the more speedy adoption of the measures he wishes to have enacted. The chief questions to come before the new Congress in special session are the Canadian Reciprocity bill, departmental investigations, the admission of Arizona to Statehood, the direct election of Senators, and the General Age Pension bill.

Results of the Session

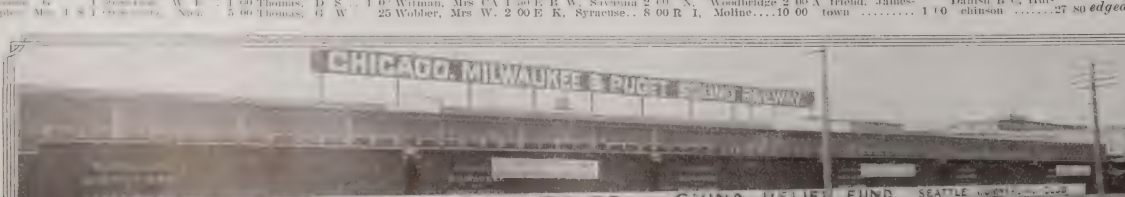
POSITIVE RESULTS	NEGATIVE RESULTS
Ratification of new treaty with Japan.	Failure of the Canadian reciprocity agreement and consequent extra session.
Provision of $3,000,000 for fortification of Panama Canal.	Failure of the permanent Tariff Board bill, which passed the Senate, but was killed by a filibuster in the House.
Provision for two new battleships.	Failure of the resolution to admit Arizona and New Mexico to Statehood; killed by a filibuster in the Senate.
Revision of the judicial code, regarded as important for the remedying of the law's delays.	Failure of the Constitutional amendment providing for direct election of United States Senators.
Creation of forest reserves in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains.	Failure of the bill making the number of Representatives 433.
Captain Robert E. Peary made a rear-admiral, with thanks of Congress for his discovery of the North Pole.	Failure of the General Age Pension bill.
Providing for the construction of embassy and legation buildings abroad.	Failure to act on the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation reports.
Requiring the inspection of locomotive boilers.	Failure to enact the Ocean Mail Subvention bill, which was passed by the Senate alone.
The appointment of a commission to investigate the entire subject of second-class postal rates, the amendment to the General Appropriation bill providing for an immediate increase of the rate from one to four cents per pound having been thrown out.

THE KLOPSCH MEMORIAL



UP to the time of going to press 6,559 subscriptions had been received on account of the "Klopsch Memorial." The list will naturally be increased, inasmuch as we have agreed to allow those who have secured several subscriptions, and who still want to become Patrons, to complete their complement of 10, provided they do so within two months of March 7. On the basis of 6,559 subscriptions, the "Klopsch Memorial" will now receive $4,919.25.

Many of our friends who have become Patrons sent us more than 10 subscriptions each, notably Mrs. E. J. Kruse, about whom we wrote last week as having secured 56. On the evening of March 7, Mrs. Kruse again visited our office with more subscriptions, having brought up her total to 75. She asked us to extend the time limit with her for two months, because she is determined to secure 100 subscriptions for the Klopsch Memorial. Where there is a will there is a way.



The list of Patrons who have sent in 10 or more subscriptions is as follows:

Questions and Answers

Reader, West Hoboken, N. J. Is it necessary for a lady to be well educated to take up nursing in a hospital? What studies would it be best to take up as preparation for such a course?

A young lady, before entering a training school for nurses, should be able to both speak and write correctly. Grammar, penmanship, literature, elementary mathematics and physiology are essential.

L. D. K., North Scituate, R. I. Please explain the religion known as Vedantism, or the beliefs of those who are called Vedantists.

These words are derived from the Sanscrit words Veda and anta, the first being the name of the so-called sacred writings of India and the latter meaning end. Vedanta is the second great division of the Mimansa school of Hindu philosophy. It endeavors to prove that the universe emanates in a successive development from the Supreme Spirit or Soul. It is a school of philosophy and not properly a religion.

E. S. W., Aurora, Ind. Do the Scriptures teach that God was more than 3,000 years in creating the earth, before the sun and moon were created? See II. Pet. 3: 8.

No. The Bible simply says, "In the beginning." The period occupied in creation is not stated and all conjectures on the subject are useless. The word "day" is an indefinite period of time. Geologists in their speculations range from thousands to millions of years before the advent of man. The passage in II. Peter implies that with the Eternal One our human measurement of time has no meaning; there is neither haste nor delay; he is from everlasting to everlasting (see Ps. 90: 4).

A. S., Los Angeles, Calif. Who was the first real king of Israel—Saul or Abimelech?

Many persons are called "kings" in Scripture whom we should rather denominate as chiefs or leaders. Hence we need not be surprised that so small a country as Canaan contained thirty-one kings (Josh. 12: 9-24). Saul was the first king of Israel (see I. Sam. 14: 47). Abimelech was never crowned king of Israel at the will of the people, only a part of whom recognized his authority during the three years of his attempt to subdue Israel.

O. A. H., Perkinsville, Ind. 1. Are we now living in the nineteenth century or the twentieth? 2. Did Christ in the garden sweat drops of blood? 3. Was Jesus killed or did he lay down his own life?

1. The twentieth century. 2. The passage says, "As it were" drops of blood; a similitude or figure of speech implying that he was under great mental agony. 3. See John 10: 17, 18.

C. H. B., Delway, N. C. 1. If a man be dead in sin can he be converted and forgiven? 2. Explain John 5: 39. 3. What is the meaning of Joh 14, where the writer speaks of the tree being cut down?

1. Nothing is impossible with God. Salvation through Christ is "to the uttermost." We have no right to judge any man as being beyond redemption. 2. There are different opinions concerning this passage, some commentators holding that it should be read, "Ye research the Scriptures," and not as a command, but as a rebuke to them for having searched blindly and not found that which was most precious. 3. Job was here describing the common misery of mankind unrelieved by any conception of the spiritual life hereafter. In this passage he does not deny the future life, but denies any return to the present conditions of life. Job plainly hoped for a future state. See verses 14 to 16, same chapter, and also chapter 19: 25 to 28.

Mrs. A. H. C., Oakland, Calif. Please explain what the French spoliation claims were

In 1778 France and the United States agreed to exempt from search or seizure all of each other's vessels even when carrying an enemy's goods, unless such goods were contraband of war. At that time, they were allied in war against Great Britain. Later, France became involved again in war with Great Britain. The United States was neutral. France then broke her treaty with the United States, and confiscated the cargoes of American vessels trading with Great Britain. We overlooked the matter for the time, but in 1797 and again in 1799 tried to settle the matter peacefully. The claims of the merchants who had lost were presented to the French government, but it refused to allow them unless we would allow a counterclaim for breach of the treaty. In 1830 our minister again tried to settle the claims. Again France set up a counterclaim. At last France agreed to pay $5,000,000 in six annual instalments, if we would pay $300,000 to French citizens for counterclaims. The French Chamber of Deputies refused to carry out this agreement. The American merchants felt that our government should pay for their losses. An act appropriating money for them has twice passed Congress, but has been vetoed. In 1885 a bill was passed admitting the claims, and so the great-grandchildren of the original claimants at last received justice.

V. S. M., Pasadena, Tex. Will you please explain why II. Kings 19 and Isa. 37 are exactly alike?

It was part of the vocation of the prophets to write the history of God's chosen people. Most of the historical books of the Old Testament were written by prophets. Isaiah wrote a biography of King Uzziah (see II. Chron. 26: 22). He also wrote a biography of Hezekiah (see II. Chron. 32: 32), which was inserted in the annals of the Kings of Israel and Judah. Here it is stated explicitly that this story of Hezekiah is also to be found in "the vision" of Isaiah; that is, in his prophetic book as well as in the book of Kings. He simply exercised an author's privilege in borrowing from himself.

M. R., Trenton, N. J. Does God really work bodily miracles in these days?

This is a question often asked. The arm of Omnipotence is not shortened that it cannot save. Thousands have been restored in mind and body in answer to the prayer of faith. Yet he never works unnecessary miracles. God has given us means and endowed us with intelligence to use these means, and he will not withhold his blessing upon their use when we ask it in faith. We ask him to feed us, but we must labor with our hands and not expect him to bless our idleness nor our lack of effort. So, if we ask him to heal us, we must use in faith the means he has supplied, with all the intelligence he has given us. It is simply "tempting God" to neglect his means. Jesus himself applied the clay and the spittle to the eyes of the blind. Naaman had to bathe in the Jordan. Even in the healing of the soul, which is an operation of the Holy Spirit, we must co-operate, and while he works in us, we ourselves must work with "fear and trembling." And if Divine wisdom should see fit to withhold the boon we crave in the form we ask, we must submit in faith to his will, as he knows what is best for us. Strength is often made perfect in weakness and many things we mistakenly call evils are blessings in disguise.

H. F. F., Walnut, Ill. Please explain where and by whom home missions were started.

In the time of the Royal Colonies and in the early days of the Republic the clergymen of all the denominations made great efforts to keep in touch with the settlers in the newer districts. The Presbyterians were especially active in this way. The first organized society was founded in 1802 under Baptist auspices, and was called the Massachusetts Domestic Missionary Society. It operated all through New England and what are now the Maritime Provinces of Canada. The second society formed was the Lake Baptist Missionary Society in 1807. This was rapidly followed by others of all denominations.

F. W. C., Cohoes, N. Y. Who was Frankenstein; I heard he made a man who could talk.

Frankenstein is a creation of German folklore. The myth has it that he was a student who constructed out of the fragments of bodies picked from churchyards and dissecting rooms, a human form without a soul. The monster had muscular strength, animal passions and active life, but no beauty of divinity. It longed for animal love and animal sympathy, but was shunned by all. It was most powerful for evil, and being fully conscious of its own defects and deformities, sought with persisteney to inflict retribution on the young student who had called it into being.

Miscellaneous

G. G. G., Osceola, Neb. The name Lloyd is derived from a Celtic word which means gray.

A. G. B., Oldham, S. D. We know of no reason why a man should not be a member of both organizations.

C. O. B., Troutdale, Ore. We are not familiar with the publication you mention, so can give no opinion of it.

Reader, Emmett, Idaho. 1. No. The increase is not large. 2. No. The change from the Hebrew Sabbath to our Sunday was made in commemoration of the resurrection of our Lord. 3 Yes. There are a number of reforms for which all who acknowledge Christ as Lord are working in unison.

In Dr. Klopsch's rise from a poor immigrant boy to the foremost philanthropist in the world—a friend to the friendless, to the poor and the downtrodden—there is a story of a life that has few equals. It is a life of splendid achievement—an inspiration to every American man, woman, boy and girl. Read this great book for yourself, and learn and apply the wonderful secret of success which it illustrates so well. 472 pages; large clear type, bound in dark green and gold. A copy of the LIFE WORK OF LOUIS KLOPSCH will be sent, together with a year's subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD, and a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, all for only $2.00.

HERO TALES FROM AMERICAN LIFE. Would you like to know the man who traveled four thousand miles through six bleak winter months to add three stars to the American flag? Would you like to shake hands with a woman who saved sixteen children? Would you like to look upon the lad who rescued a thousand lives in a storm at sea? You can meet all of these heroes—100 in all—in F. T. Miller's great book, HERO TALES. HERO TALES will be sent, with a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, and the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, for only $2.00.

STEPHEN, A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS. Mrs. Kingsley has taken the little known life of Stephen and built from it a story that vibrates with human emotion. It is a story that grips you. Stephen's love and devotion to a cause that he thought must be right and just, is graphically portrayed. It is a good sermon in story form. STEPHEN will be sent with the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, and a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, for $1.85.

CHRISTIAN HERALD HOME LIBRARY—8 BOOKS. In compiling this set of books we have endeavored to seek out those things which every member of every home wants to know. They appeal to nearly all classes of people who read, or think, or work; to women as well as men—to girls as well as boys. The eight volumes, with a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD one year, new or renewal, all for only $2.50. If you do not want the set complete, simply add 20 cents for each volume you desire to the subscription price ($1.50) and we will send you as many or as few as you want.

INDIA PAPER RED LETTER BIBLE. The text of the Bible is set in bold-face minion, especially designed for this work. There are 268 pages of Helps, or Concordance, and 17 superb Maps. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and very durable, weighs only twenty ounces. It is bound in American Levant, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, and makes altogether the handiest and most satisfactory Bible now on the market. We send this superb Bible, together with the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one whole year, and a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, all for only $3.00.

RED LETTER NEW TESTAMENT. Contains all the words spoken by our Lord, printed in red. Clear type, bound in American Levant, soft and flexible, with overlapping edges, red-under-gold, making a compact volume. No other Testament is as serviceable, owing to the emphasis it gives to Christ's own words, and the ease and facility with which one's favorite passage may be found. The Testament in either the Revised or Authorized Version will be sent, with a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, all for only $2.00.

Oldest and Best

THESE are the days one recalls all the good old-fashioned out-of-door games and plays them. Such a pretty lawn game is the old-time tissue-paper race. Have you ever played it? Cut a sheet of tissue-paper into as many pieces, four or five inches square, as there are players. At a word of command, let each player, armed with a palm-leaf fan, start to fan his bit of tissue-paper through the goal-posts set up about eighteen inches apart and twenty yards from the starting-place. You will have a merry frolic, I can assure you.

"Tom Tiddler's Ground"

THIS is a good old English game. American girls and boys play a variation of it, but I have never been able to discover that they gave it any name. Tom Tiddler pretends to be asleep in a chalked circle six or eight feet in diameter, marked off in the garden or on the lawn and scattered over with a dozen or more little stones. The other players venture near, crying all together, "Here we are on Tom Tiddler's ground, picking up silver and gold." As Tom Tiddler dozes they grow bolder, venturing nearer and nearer, until suddenly he wakens and dashes after them all at once. The one that is caught becomes Tom Tiddler. Another game something on the order of Tom Tiddler's Ground is

"Old Woman, Old Woman," or "Hen and Chicks"

HEN and chickens holding hands and circling round an old woman in the middle of a chalked circle, sing:

Cluck, cluck, cluckety, cluckety, cluck!
The kites are away and the cows are asleep;
It's time that my chickens had something to eat;
Cluck, cluck, cluck!

They drop hands and the following conversation takes place:

The Hen: "Why are you crying, old woman, old woman?"

Old Woman: "Because my needle is lost."

The Hen: "Why do you want a needle, old woman, old woman?"

Old Woman: "I wish to sew a bag, bag, bag; I wish to sew a bag."

The Hen: "What do you want with a bag?"

Old Woman: "To put some salt in, you silly chicken."

The Hen: "What do you want with salt?"

Old Woman: "To scour the sauce-pan."

The Hen: "What do you want of a sauce-pan?"

Old Woman: "To boil one of your chicks in."

The old woman jumps up and tries to catch a chicken, the hen tries to stop her. The next round the hen plays the part of the old woman.

"Nuts in May"

A CHALKED line is drawn on the lawn. The players stand in two rows on either side of it, facing each other. One row steps toward the other, saying all together:

Here we come gathering nuts in May,
Here we come gathering nuts in May,
On a misty, misty morning!

Then they fall back and the other row advances, answering:

Who will you gather for nuts in May,
Who will you gather for nuts in May,
This misty, moisty morning?

First row, with common consent, choose a boy or girl from the second row, and advance again, saying:

We'll gather Mary for nuts in May,
We'll gather Mary for nuts in May,
This misty, moisty morning!

Out-Door Games

The second row, advancing to the chalk line, then asks:

Who will you send to take her away,
Who will you send to take her away,
This misty, moisty morning?

Then:

We're sending Tom to take her away,
To take her away, to take her away,
This misty, moisty morning!

Tom steps out up to the line on one side and Mary on the other, each trying to pull the other one over it. The one that loses joins the other line, and the story begins again.

"Bobbie Over the Water"

CHOOSE one player, who shall be Bobbie. Bobbie stands in the centre, while the other players join hands in a circle around him, dancing and singing:

Bobbie over the water,
Bobbie over the sea,
Bobbie catch a blackbird,
Can't catch me!

At the last word, the players on the circle all stoop, while Bobbie tries to tag them before they can get into a stooping position. Should Bobbie succeed, the player he tagged changes place with him.

Fishes, birds, ships, butterflies and dragons cut out of bright-colored tissue paper, with silver and gold tinsel tied to baby ribbon, go flying through the air.

Other Out-of-Door Games

OTHER lots-of-fun out-of-door games are: Frog in the Middle, Fox and Geese, Skin the Goat, Leap-Frog, Last Couple Out, Partner Tag, How Many Miles to Babylon, and Tug-o'-War. If any Cozy Corner boy or girl has heard of a game and would like to know how to play it, write to the Aunt in the Cozy Corner, and she will tell you how.

Some April Fool Tricks

SUCH a good time as you will be having on April Fool's Day, browning cotton doughnuts and sewing the buns, biscuits and the loaves of bread through and through with white thread, soldering pennies on to nails and hammering them here and there to be picked at by the unsuspecting; sewing towels to the racks, fixing up apple-pie beds for olders to fumble their way into, pasting a very narrow sliver of tin-foil across a mirror to make it look as though it had been broken, hiding the old cock that crows the loudest behind the wrought-iron front of the fire-place in the spare room, and a hundred other pranks. Write me about yours and I will write you about some funny tricks we used to play in my dear old home in Kentucky.

Next week we will publish in the Cozy Corner a page of our boys' and girls' own work and special prize offers.

PUZZLING QUESTIONS TO ANSWER

How many years from the fall of Adam to the Deluge?
How many years was it from the fall of Adam to the birth of Christ?
How old was Joseph when he was sold into slavery?
For how many years did Joseph rule over Egypt?

The names of the boys and girls sending in the four best answers will appear on the April Honor Roll.

Be sure to enter all these Prize Contests. It is great fun and a great deal to your credit to see your work in print here in the Cozy Corner, where other boys and girls all over the world, and olders too, may enjoy it.

Our Good-Night Verse

Is from the Song of Solomon: "Lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come."

Lovingly and faithfully, The Aunt in the Cozy Corner.

The Fate of the Fleur-de-Lis

By GRACE BOTELER SANDERS

HUNGRY-HEARTED, so homesick that she almost forgot her weariness, Jeanne Parigot came upon it one morning in early spring. It was in the very heart of the great city, far back from a street on which her discouraged feet had never wandered before.

She had been out of work ever since the shirtwaist workers' strike began. Through the early autumn and gloomy fall and biting winds of winter she had struggled, living on a pittance, all the while hoping and praying for a settlement. Spring came. The strike was lost. Immediately she set out to find other employment.

For two weeks she had gone the rounds, receiving everywhere the same answer. This morning, hearing of probable employment at the Eureka Box Factory, the largest in the great metropolis, she had started early on her long walk. Wearily she dragged herself across the viaduct which spanned the numberless tracks where the great engines were puffing clouds of grime and smoke.

She was thinking of France this morning; of sunny France; of the flowers which bloomed about her father's cottage; of Antoine, with whom she had parted in anger.

They had been sweethearts ever since they were children. On Michaelmas Day, Antoine had whispered that their cottage in St. Christine's Vineyard was completed. He had begged her on that spring morning nearly a year ago to marry him and she had promised that she would; but afterward the opportunity to go to the new land where she could find a fortune came to her, and with all a girl's hope of success, Jeanne had listened.

A contractor had visited Les Marches in search of lacemakers. To Jeanne, one of the best, he came first, offering transportation, and wages which seemed a small fortune. She was to go to America with a number of other girls she knew to help launch a new venture—the starting of the first lace factory in America. He promised that they should share in the profits; that as he prospered, so should they.

When the contractor went away, giving her three days in which to decide, Jeanne, glowing with hope, rushed to Antoine to sketch in brilliant colors pictures of the wealth she would win, of the glorious future which would be theirs. Antoine, manlike, hooted at the idea, refused to be convinced that the offer was a good one; so they had parted in anger. The next week Jeanne and a half dozen other girls from Les Marches set sail for America, and she had never seen him since.

At first all went well. After six months the factory closed for lack of funds, and the helpless French girls were turned upon the streets of a strange land, without resources.

Jeanne had fared better than the others. Her dainty embroideries brought her work almost immediately. The prices paid were small, but sufficient to provide a living and a little besides.

All hope of the fortune of which she boasted gone, Jeanne was ashamed to write to Antoine; with the fear of the fortune looming up between them, Antoine was ashamed to write to Jeanne. A year had passed since one had received word from the other; and now, this morning, the girl stood upon the bridge in a cloud of coal-smoke, dreaming of a white cottage which her lover had builded for her among the blood-red grapes in a vineyard in southern France.

The striking of a clock in a nearby steeple aroused the girl. Almost running, Jeanne Parigot hurried down the hill, but at its foot she paused again. Here was purity in the midst of the city's grime.

A great, old-fashioned, pale yellow brick house stood on the hill in the centre of an immense wooded, grassy lawn which was radiant with an array of gorgeous spring flowers. Hyacinths tossed their silver bells, tulips swayed their gaudy heads, and snowdrops and narcissus and jonquils bloomed by their side.

As Jeanne came nearer, she heard the sound of running water, and then she saw—— Her breath came fast. What could it mean?

In a hollow beneath a great laurel tree, Jeanne Parigot saw a round basin formed by blocks of pure white granite. A fountain was throwing jets of clear water up to the blue and it fell again—Jeanne could scarcely believe it—into a basin edged with tall green rushes, luxuriant and beautiful; and mingled with those satiny spikes were the glorious blossoms of a fleur-de-lis such as was found nowhere except in her father's garden.

A year ago she had held the dainty lavender blossoms, flecked with purple and buff and red, in her hands, and kissed them as she handed Antoine a flower "for remembrance." She had told him to keep it to remember her by until they met again. That scene had been enacted thousands of miles from here, but now the fleur-de-lis was here, blooming in a stranger's garden. Could she still be dreaming? A sudden gust of April wind tossed the branches of the trees, bringing to Jeanne's nostrils a whiff of delicious fragrance, such as no other flower possessed but hers.

She remembered her sixteenth birthday, when her father had led her to a secluded spot in the garden and uncovered a wonderful flower which was blooming in a tub of marsh mud. She remembered his words—her father was a gardener and florist of no mean ability—"I have been experimenting for months, little daughter, to produce a flower lovely enough to present to you on your sixteenth birthday. Here it is, as pure and sweet and beautiful as the precious dawn of young womanhood. Guard your womanhood more carefully than I have watched this flower, daughter, and some day the two shall be a precious heritage for a king and a nation!"

A homely, shaggy, black and yellow dog, barking fiercely and leaping high against the heavily barred gate, interrupted Jeanne's dreams. Telling herself that it was a wretched mistake, but cheered by the fragrance and beauty of the flowers, the girl quickened her steps.

It was yet a mile to the great factory, but Jeanne scarcely noticed the distance, the dirty streets, or the street cars with their clanging bells.

She entered the office of the great building, a misty smile upon her face. It was so charming a face, and so sweet a smile, that the clerk in the office took the trouble to introduce her to the forelady himself and to speak a good word for her.

It chanced that the girls were engaged this morning in filling a large order for a very exclusive candy house. They were to use their ingenuity and originality; to make no two boxes alike if they could find so many styles. Jeanne listened to the instructions smiling dreamily. How fortunate it was that lavender paper and paint and ribbon lay before her!

All the girl's artistic ability came to her finger-tips as she fashioned a mammoth fleur-de-lis. With a song in her heart, she darkened the lavender in spots of purple, laid on the gold and red just as they were painted in by the hand of Mother Nature. And when the box was finished and lined with moire paper, edged with imitation lace so like the dainty web which Jeanne had been weaving that it was hard to tell it from the real article, she carried it to the forewoman for inspection.

Madam, It Can't Be Done

No matter how skillful one is as a cook, one cannot make beans digestible in a home oven. It simply can't be done.

Some housewives say they prefer home-baked beans. Perhaps pride in one's skill has to do with it.

Men almost universally prefer Van Camp's.

But the real question isn't pride, taste or convenience. It's a question of simple digestion. Beans can't be made digestible in any home oven. They will invariably, when eaten, ferment and form gas.

Think how little it matters how good a food is if digestion is hard or impossible.

The center of the baking dish rarely gets heated above 100 degrees. That's not half enough heat for beans.

The top beans may be crisped, but not the beans farther down. The granules remain unbroken, so the digestive juices cannot act.

Beans should be baked at 245 degrees. They should be baked in small parcels so the full heat goes through. They should be baked in live steam so the fierce heat won't crisp the beans or burst them.

That's how Van Camp's are baked.

That's why they are nut-like, mealy and whole. And that's why they digest without trouble.

This wholesale baking is naturally cheaper than home baking if one figures fuel.

The beans come to your table with the freshly-baked flavor—just as though baked at home.

Both the pork and tomato sauce are baked with the beans, supplying a delicious blend. And the beans are always ready to serve in a minute. You can keep a dozen meals on the shelf.

Those are some of the reasons why a million housewives have ceased to bake their own beans, and are using Van Camp's.

Beans are a premier food—23 per cent. nitrogenous, 84 per cent. nutriment. Richer than beef in food value—cheaper by about two-thirds. They can be served hot or cold in a dozen ways which everybody likes. They form a hearty meal by themselves.

When you get delicious, digestible, convenient beans you will come to serve them nearly every day—saving time and work and meat bills.

"The National Dish" Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS "The National Dish"

Some housewives buy beans called "as good as Van Camp's." And they find them quite different from the beans we describe. But there are no disappointments with the real Van Camp's.

More homes use Van Camp's than all others together. That would not be so if there were others as good.

We pick out by hand, from the choicest beans grown, just the whitest and plumpest beans. We make our tomato sauce from whole, vine-ripened tomatoes, though it costs us five times what common sauce would cost. And we have spent 48 years in learning how to bake beans like these. You will never know how good beans can be until you get the real Van Camp's.

Three sizes: 10, 15 and 20 cents per can.

The woman's cold, hard face lightened like a November sky suddenly kissed by the sun of June. "It is lovely!" she cried delightedly. "You are an artist, girl! Make one hundred just like this! Begin at once!"

So, dreaming, Jeanne returned to the workroom to fashion hundreds of copies of the purple fleur-de-lis.

That night when she passed the great old house, she stopped long enough to throw a kiss to the nodding blossoms, which seemed to beckon as they wafted a fragrant message.

"Dear little flower, you brought me good luck this morning," whispered the girl. "Bring my Antoine back to me!"

Every day, so long as the flowers nodded by the fountain, Jeanne paused for a moment of silent worship. Things were going better now. The lucky choosing of the pattern that morning had brought her into the notice of the superintendent. The delivery of the boxes had brought an order for ten thousand more at a much better price than the Eureka Box Factory had ever been able to command. Different designs were to be used, but the fleur-de-lis was still the favorite, and the company had stipulated expressly that this box was to be sold to no one but themselves.

Roses—French roses—and violets and buttercups were added to Jeanne's list. From box-maker she was advanced to instructor, and from instructor to designer. Her wages were raised; her shabby clothing and shabbier boarding-place changed for better; and with the era of prosperity she thought of home.

Before the Christmas season she had written to Antoine, intending to send him a present; but she received no reply. Through the dull weeks of January and February, when other girls were idle, Jeanne worked steadily. Another springtime glided swiftly upon her. She was surprised, one day, to see the fleur-de-lis again blooming beside the fountain.

It was Saturday; and with well-filled purse but an aching heart, Jeanne started home. When she reached the great house, she saw that something unusual was happening. The gates were thrown wide open. The windows of the house were open too. As she crossed the street the clanging red auto fire-engine dashed through the gateway and up the drive, trailing the hook-and-ladder wagon and the firemen behind it.

Dazedly Jeanne joined the procession of people, and a moment later stood with them by the fountain. A stream of smoke was pouring from the roof of the old mansion. The first crash of the firemen's axes brought a rush of flame. A crackling and an ominous roar greeted the onlookers. The current from the fountain was turned into the hose, and the firemen's heavy heels crushed down the fragrant flowers.

Protestingly, as if to protect them from injury, the girl gathered the lilies to her heart. With a feeling of curious content she stood watching the busy streams of water which were fast subduing the flames.

"The family is in California; they've been away since January," Jeanne heard a man's voice explaining. "No one knows what caused the fire, but the chief attributes it to defective wiring. The house is not greatly damaged, thanks to that Frenchman. I suppose Johnson will give him a good reward. The old house is filled with valuable historical relics; has been in the Johnson family for a hundred years.

"Who is this man? One of their employees?" Jeanne heard a woman's voice ask.

"He is their gardener."

"Oh, that fellow who came here two years ago!" It was the woman who spoke, and Jeanne held her breath lest she should not catch every word. "I remember now. It is such a pathetic story. Mrs. Johnson told me herself. The poor fellow, who is very handsome and bright and all that, came here in search of his sweetheart, who had come here with the hope of making a fortune. It seems that, having not heard from her, he grew uneasy, came here to hunt her, bringing with him a peculiar kind of a fleur-de-lis which the girl's father had developed from a lily which grows wild in France. He hoped that the flower might be a means of bringing them together.

"It is truly a gorgeous blossom, so beautiful that Mrs. Johnson was delighted when he grouped them around the fountain. A few months after the first flowers bloomed, Long's candy-stores brought out a bonbon box which was an exact reproduction of the lilies which grew by the fountain. Poor Antoine was wild when he happened to see the ones which came to the house for Mrs. Johnson's Easter party. He thought that his sweetheart had made them, that she was found, and went at once to the store to find out where the boxes had been purchased. They refused to enlighten him, so Mrs. Johnson, to whom he had told the story, tried to secure the information for him, but without success.

"What a story! I'd like to see those wonderful flowers! Where are they?"

Jeanne heard the woman's voice reply, "By the fountain; there to the west of the house."

A sharp turn of the path brought man and woman directly in front of Jeanne Parigot, who stood as if turned to stone, her arms filled with the wonderful flowers.

"Mercy!" exclaimed the woman in a low whisper. "What a beautiful girl! how romantic it would be if that were the Frenchman's lost sweetheart! Let's question her!"

"Clear the way!" shouted a mounted policeman suddenly. Before the man could reply, the fire company, their work done, puffed down the drive, and behind them stalked the faithful Frenchman.

The gates slammed shut. The man turned his weary, thoughtful face toward the fountain to learn the fate of his lilies. They were gone. But in the foreground, her great eyes wide with wonder, stood a girl, and in her arms were the purple fleur-de-lis like the withered one which he had carried so long against his aching heart.

"Jeanne!" One bound brought the young Frenchman to her side.

"Antoine!" the flowers fell forgotten to the earth.

A band was playing. Friends on shore waved handkerchiefs and tearful good-bys to those on deck. Over the rail leaned a young girl and a handsome man, chatting joyously in French. They were planning for the furnishing of a white cottage which had waited three years for its mistress.

Generous Appreciation

A READER in Ohio writes: "I have read in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the article by Rev. J. J. Hallimond, D.D., entitled, "Transformed by Grace," and while I have for a number of years contributed to the Bowery Mission fund, when I find that it has been doing such grand work, even in a single case, as is recounted in the article referred to, I feel that I am entitled to do a little more for the cause, and I am enclosing a further contribution of $50. Likewise I am enclosing $50 for the Memorial Fund to Dr. Klopsch, one of the grandest characters in human history." The writer asks that his name should not be published.

Have you read

John & Jane

In the San Joaquin Valley, California?

A new story by Eleanor Gates. It is an interesting account of how a young couple made their way to a competency and the ownership of an irrigated farm in the San Joaquin Valley.

The author of "Cupid the Cowpunch" and the owner of "Los Ranchos de la Rosas" knows California. Her story pictures actual conditions as they exist in this wonderful valley.

The "land hungry," whether struggling in town or trying to pay rent, should read of the success of John and Jane in the San Joaquin.

OUR COMFORT CORNER

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Mental Depression

ONE of the most tragic conditions into which the human soul ever drifts is that of melancholy for which there is no apparent reason. Many years ago a wise woman said to me, "One can always deal with real troubles. Any one can fight an actual grief. The thing that cannot be fought is intangible." I was too young at the time to understand what she meant. It is sufficiently plain to me now that the people most in need of comfort are neither those who are suffering from bereavement nor those who endure what are called living troubles, but those who are groping in a fog that has settled down in midnight darkness on the soul. They fancy that God has deserted them. When they pray they declare that he does not listen. They complain that they have committed some strange unpardonable sin. Nothing that one can say seems to bring them relief. They hug their obsession and are reluctant to part with their misery. The explanation is in a majority of cases that the delicate machinery of the body is out of gear and the equipoise of the soul is, in consequence, disturbed. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me?" may be answered nine times out of ten by the prosaic reply that the liver needs toning, that the digestion is wrong, that there is occasion to call in the aid of rest, change, relief from anxiety or the remedies of a good physician.

Sanitariums are in order for the spiritually exhausted. They cannot always go to them. What shall they do? The one prescription which they can follow, in the hope of being comforted and restored, may be put into a nutshell. Never mind about feelings. Do something for somebody else. Look away from self. Whatever the disheartened one may think, God's love and care have never failed for an instant. Take the Bible and read the promises. There is one verse which may be read again and again, and always it should be read with a thought of him whose word it is, while the reader says over and over, "This word was said for me." "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him." Who said this? The same dear Saviour who said: "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." There is no situation so hard that this comfort cannot cheer it, no cloud so thick that it cannot be rifted by this sunlight.

The Desire of Expression

MANY a woman seated at her sewing in these spring days, patching the knees of Johnnie's trousers, slowly making her patient way through a pile of stockings which must be carefully darned, or perhaps planning new frocks for her little girls, thinks with a strange envy of the women whose lives have gone into different channels and who are able to express their ideas, as this busy house-mother sorrowfully feels, in a manner impossible to her. When she was a girl at school she used to write poetry. In a certain bureau drawer into which she occasionally peeps, there is an old portfolio in which as a school-girl she kept copies of what she wrote. Now when she gazes at those fading pages she stifles a sigh. She has no time to spend in idle regret, for Harry has cut his finger and is crying and she must run down, tie up the wounded member and bid the little fellow bear the pain like a man. "Soldiers never cry when they are hurt," she tells her boy, and the phrase repeats itself over and over in her ear, as glancing at the clock she sees that baby Evelyn must have her bottle and be put to sleep, and that if there is to be Sally Lunn for supper it is time to be supervising the young woman whose cooking is not yet that of a chef at the Waldorf.

Middle-Aged Women

MIDDLE-AGED women whose experience of life has been profound, and who have arrived at a table-land of comparative leisure, often think wistfully that they could write for the magazines and surpass the authors whose stories are constantly in print. It is indeed true that fact is stranger than fiction, and that successful fiction often has a foundation in fact. Authorship, however, is not to be picked up without previous training, and this is why disappointment so often is the portion of the woman who does her best and yet, in this day of eager competition, fails to write in the manner which attracts a publisher. The woman who cuts and makes the gown, the woman who paints a picture, the woman who succeeds in any line of business must serve an apprenticeship, and it is not especially easy for the ordinary woman to do this in these trades after her youth is past.

The desire for expression in writing is legitimate, but to turn to it with the idea of making it a bread-winning art, after fifty, is seldom feasible. If a young girl feels in herself the stirring of genius she should not be discouraged. She may not have genius, but there may be within her breast a useful working talent susceptible of cultivation, if she shall prove herself patient, persevering and willing to climb from the foot of the ladder. Many girls make the mistake of fancying that they may reach the top of the ladder at a single bound. To every youthful aspirant who thinks she can write I pass on the word, Blessed be drudgery. Read, work, study, accept criticism, and hold on with a definite goal in view. Do not too soon hasten into print. As Emerson has inimitably said: "Get your brick ready for the wall."

The Mistake of Being Obliging

FROM the earliest hours of childhood we are taught to be obliging. The little girl sitting at the table puzzling over fractions, is chided if she hesitate to run upstairs and get brother George's gloves which he left on the top of his bureau. The small boy must, of course, run on errands for his big brother, and the mother of six thinks it her imperative duty to impress on the minds of each of her brood their obligation to be self-denying. In a way much is to be said for this peculiarity of early education. Very likely our natural selfishness would get the better of us if it were not nipped in the bud when we were young, yet there is something to be said in favor of justice. There is no reason why children should, as a matter of course, be constantly interrupted and called from their special engagements that they may save steps for able-bodied folk who would be the better for waiting on themselves. The trouble is that justice is sacrificed to generosity. The too obliging person comes home from business tired, and before he has time to take off his coat is requested, if he be a husband, to walk to the village and procure several supplies that ought to have been ordered in the morning, and that might just as well wait until another day. Perhaps there are not a multitude of men in the world who have the weakness of being too accommodating. There are a few, and they are simply taxed by the thoughtlessness of their families until they are worn out. The overobliging correspondent in the family writes all the letters, although it probably is not her duty to do so. In a certain household I heard the observation that every social obligation, from going to a wedding to attending a funeral, was perfectly safe, for Jennie could be depended upon to represent the family and to do the right thing. "Suppose Jennie were ill?" some one asked.

The reply was laughingly made by Jennie's mother, that her eldest daughter had never been known to plead illness if there was anything to be done by which she could save trouble to some one else. What I am pleading for is an equal division of labor and responsibility in the family circle. Parents who are notably unselfish often bring up selfish children. The indolent self-considerate young girl tranquilly allows her mother to wear herself out over the fine laundry work made necessary by the girl's dainty toilettes. It does not occur to the latter that the mother's back and arms may ache, and her feet grow weary, as she toils over the ironing board. Why should it? The mother has all her life been too accommodating where her darling child was concerned.

Sweep the Corners

THE story is told of a little housemaid, far over the sea, who was once asked whether she realized that she was in any way different after uniting with the church than she had been before. She thought for an instant, and then smiling brightly, said: "Well, I sweep the corners." She could hardly have given a better demonstration of the reality of her religious life. Sweeping the corners meant that she did not neglect the part of her work that was out of sight. It meant that she was just as thorough about the trivialities and the little obscurities as about what was obvious to every beholder. Might it not be well for some of us occasionally to return to that self-examination once everywhere prevalent, and inquire of ourselves if we prove our piety by sweeping the corners?

The Loss of an Infant

A MOTHER writes that the baby who came only six weeks ago has been taken out of her arms and laid away in a little grave. "We have three older children," she says, "but, oh, how we miss this darling who came to stay so short a time." A father tells of the death of a little son before a week had passed: "How much we had built upon this child's future," he exclaims, "and how worthless life seems if ours is still to be a childless home." Life cannot be worthless to parents if they have the great joy of staying together even though they share an overwhelming grief. The child they have had is still their own, although out of sight. The mother who has other little children will discover after a time that, as they grow up and become boys and girls with ever-widening interests, the one child who remains to her forever her own will be the little one who nestled in her arms a few short weeks, and then went to dwell with the angels.

Success in Obedience*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

Naaman, the Leper

NAAMAN, the commander-in-chief of the Syrian army, was a great man. "By him Jehovah had given victory unto Syria." Naaman had been "an unconscious instrument in the hands of Jehovah" against the Assyrians. Just how he was used by Jehovah we are not told, but it is supposed that it was to conquer the Assyrians, who were at all times a menace to the Israelites, the chosen people of God. "But he was a leper." Still Naaman did not have the disease in a form that incapacitated him from being a leader among men. It must be noted that there were no laws in Syria segregating lepers, as was the custom in Palestine among the Jews, and is the custom in nearly all lands to-day. Iceland has a leper hospital, with about one hundred inmates, representing all of the leprosy to be found in Iceland. Canada has its leper colony. In Hawaii, one island is set apart for lepers—Molokai. Strangely enough, lepers are now allowed to roam in and about Jerusalem. In going from Jerusalem to Mount Olivet one must pass about a mile of lepers seated by the roadside, begging alms. Nothing can compare with their pitiful plight. A hospital is provided for them in Jerusalem, but they prefer the roadside because of the alms which they receive from tourists and travelers.

Visits Elisha

"Would that my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria; then he would recover him of his leprosy." These words were spoken by a little maid servant of Naaman's wife in a tender strain, showing that she felt deep sympathy for her great master. The key-note of her saying was hope. She was sure the prophet could cure him, and the prophet was Elisha, who had been doing wonderful things in the name of the Lord. It was very brave for the little maid to make this suggestion, for she was but a captive, a prisoner in a strange land, and the prophet whom she so lauded did not represent the religion of her master and mistress.

"Go now and I will send a letter to the king of Israel." So spoke the king of Syria, when Naaman told him what the little maid had said. And so the letter was written, probably on strips of parchment, with some sharp-pointed instrument. He departed and took with him ten talents of silver ($19,440) and six thousand pieces of gold ($58,500) and ten changes of raiment. Beautiful garments they must have been, worn only by people of distinction. Such a price was Naaman willing to pay for his cure: seventy-seven thousand, nine hundred and forty dollars in cash, besides the large value of the clothing.

"He brought the letter to the king of Israel." The latter became angry on reading the letter, for he thought he scented an attempt to involve him in a war. He rent his clothes from the neck downward, as a sign of his grief and danger.

"Let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel." These were the words spoken by Elisha when he was told about the letter received by the king.

"So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariots and stood at the door of the house of Elisha." The prophet did not go out to see his distinguished caller, nor did he invite him in. He simply sent a messenger to tell him to go and wash seven times in the River Jordan and his leprosy should be healed. Elisha kept in the background; he would take to himself none of the honor of healing Naaman, for that belonged to God.

"Naaman was wroth and went away." He felt himself uncivilly treated. He had not fathomed Elisha's intent. "He went away in a rage," railing at the muddy Jordan, which was not to be compared with the beautiful rivers in his own land, which were blue like sapphire and green like emerald. He railed also at Elisha that he did not come out and at least wave his hand over him!

Naaman Made Clean

"And his servants came near." They called him "Father," and persuaded him to go down to the Jordan.

Then he went down and dipped himself seven times in the Jordan, and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child. Did he begin to improve after the first dip, or the second? We are not told so, but rather we are led to think that after having dipped seven times, the cure was instantaneous.

Naaman was cured of his leprosy in the way of obedience, an obedience which began when he started away from the unseen prophet's door; an obedience which stood the test of a long day's journey from Samaria down to the Jordan. Doubtless he was tempted more than once to say: "I am playing the fool," but he persisted in his obedience, and came out victor! And then how glad he was to return to Elisha's house, and offer pay for the great cure he had received. Then Elisha came out to meet him, but not to receive a reward, which he steadfastly refused.

When Naaman stood face to face with Elisha, a healed man, he said: "Thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt offering, nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the Lord. Behold, now I know there is no God in all the earth but in Israel" (II. Kings 5: 15-17). The change in his spirit was even more blessed than that in his body, and it all came through obedience.

Salvation in Obedience

Many an unsaved man would become a Christian if he could read his title clear by giving a hundred thousand dollars to a Christian college or hospital without coming down from his chariot of pride to the Jordan of submission and prayer. The Abana and Pharpar of our works of righteousness, our gifts, our deeds, our sacrifices cannot take the place of the Jordan cleansing in the blood of Christ. Fifty, seventy, a hundred thousand dollars will not pay the Great Physician's fee for the healing of a soul. Only obedience to the plain commands of God can save us.

> Working will not save me;
> Purest deeds that I can do,
> Holiest thoughts and feelings too,
> Cannot form my soul anew.
> Working will not save me.

As we obey we are saved.

A skeptic once asked a minister: "How came I by my wicked heart?" "That," replied the divine, "is a question which does not concern you so much as another, namely, 'How shall you get rid of it?' You have a wicked heart which renders you entirely unfit for the kingdom of God, and you must have a new heart, or you cannot be saved, and the question which now most deeply concerns you is, How shall you obtain it?" "But," said the man, "I wish you to tell me how I came by my wicked heart." "I shall not do that at present," replied the minister, "for if I could do it to your entire satisfaction, it would not in the least help you to a new heart. The great thing for

A Woman Wants What She Pays For

In buying a watch, or anything else, a woman is practical.

She has an eye for style and beauty of design: but she insists on value, and gets it wherever there is a standard to judge by.

She demands a reliable make of watch. She asks for it by name—but she doesn't know, perhaps, that the name refers only to the works. The place she is in danger of being fooled is in the watch case—where standards are frequently cheapened in a way that doesn't show on the surface.

Now she can be sure of absolute integrity in bullion value, in assay and in the workmanship of her watch case if she will look for our marks inside the cap of the case.

These trademarks are her safeguard. They are standard with the fine jewelry trade and have been for fifty years.

A Welcome Visitant

Once a week without a slip, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD comes to our home, a welcome visitor. Very little on its pages escapes my perusal. Next to the good book, the Bible, I deem it the best, cleanest, and purest periodical published to-day. The great amount of charitable objects it cares for, including those of its own founding; the great uplift to all mankind, along all lines of charitable work, will never be known till that great day when the books are opened, and men's works tried as with fire. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will stand the test, as surely as it receives the approval of the occupants of the thousands of homes whose doors are open wide for its reception.

The Baby Calendar is a beauty, and the photogravure of the lamented Dr. Klopsch is just splendid. I have it framed, and as I look into that seemingly tired face, as he sits at work at his desk, laboring in the interests of humanity, temporal as well as spiritual, I am led to say, "Your works will stand the test of time and eternity." I am pleased to say that THE HERALD seems to improve with every recurring issue. Its bright appearance and Christian messages are an inspiration to all who have an incentive for the good and pure. Long may it live to complete its mission of love and charity for all men, the rock and foundation upon which it was reared.

which I am solicitous is, that you should become a new creature, and be prepared for heaven." As the man showed no wish to hear anything, but still pressed the question how he came by his wicked heart, the minister told him that he resembled a man who is drowning, while his friends are attempting to save his life. As he rises to the surface of the water, he exclaims: "How came I here?" "That question," says one of his friends, "does not concern you now. Take hold of this rope." "But how came I here?" he asks again. "I shall not stop to answer that question now," replies his friend. "Then I'll drown," says the infatuated man, and spurning all proffered aid, he sinks to the bottom.

There was another man who rode in a chariot near to Samaria, who found blessing in the way of obedience. He was the treasurer of Queen Candace, and he had come a journey of one thousand miles that he might learn of saving grace. He had sought Christ in the city of Jerusalem, and found him not. And there he had bought a copy of the Scriptures that he might learn from them about Christ. The Lord, looking down from heaven, saw him in his way, and sent to him Philip the evangelist, who was at that time preaching in Samaria. It was certainly by the power of God that Philip was able to overtake the man in his chariot. He was reading in the book he had bought: "He was led as a sheep to the slaughter," etc. "Understandest what thou readest?" asked Philip. "No," replied the man. "Come into my chariot and explain it to me." And so Philip did; he preached unto him Jesus, and so quickly did the man believe and desire to obey, that he had the chariot stopped, and asked Philip to baptize him in the name of the Lord Jesus. And Philip baptized him, and then the man re-entered his chariot and pursued his long journey home.

Under Orders

A soldier who had long desired to be saved, but could not be made to understand just the way of it, was addressed by a soldier who was already a Christian: "Suppose the lieutenant should send for you to-night to report to him, what would you do?" "I'd report, sir." "Right off?" "Certainly, sir; I obey orders." "When you should come to his quarters, what would you say?" "I'd give him the salute and say, 'Lieutenant, what's the orders?'" "And you got the orders?" "Then I would do 'em, sir." "Well now, Tom, the Lord Jesus has sent me to you to-night, and orders you to report to him at once." "I'll do it, I'll do it, sir," making a move as if going to headquarters to report. It was then explained to him that Christ was present; that his orders required him to use all his influence to lead his relatives and associates to repentance, which he promised to do, and then he knelt down to "report to Jesus," saying, "Here I am, Jesus; I report for duty. All you order me to-night and to-morrow and as long as I live, I am going to do." He went out saying: "I am under orders." There was a marked change in his life. He was never off duty in trying to do something for others in the name of Christ.

The few words spoken by the little maid were the means of healing and saving the greatest man in Syria, excepting the king. No word spoken in Syria even by the wisest men had been as powerful as the words spoken by the little maid. It was so because the blessing of God went with her words. And so let children be encouraged to say all there is in their hearts about the Lord Jesus. Many pages could be filled with stories about how God has used little children to teach older people to love and serve him.

Juvenile Reform

DISCOURAGING words lately spoken in high quarters regarding the effects of prison discipline, have only emphasized the general impression that our present methods of dealing with criminals are ineffective. The percentage of men who respond well to reformatory treatment is almost negligible. Even an excellent institution, like the Elmira reformatory, which admits only fairly hopeful cases, acknowledges that its measures do not bring satisfactory results. In fact, the foremost social workers are now almost a unit in their belief that, though efforts for the improvement of bad men and women must be continued indefinitely, it is upon children that the most of our labor should be expended. Rescue the children and you will reduce crime more rapidly than in any other way. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has often alluded to the excellent work done by the New York Juvenile Asylum, in "The Children's Village," at Chauncey, where more than 40,000 children have been cared for, ninety per cent. of whom have turned out well. There are similar institutions elsewhere, but their number is utterly inadequate. Let more and yet more be established. There is no more economical method of ridding society of its most wasteful and expensive member, the criminal.

Mr. T. H. Manners-Howe has just issued a little book upon this subject. In it he describes the system in vogue in the institution which has reached, perhaps, the highest development yet attained in boy reformation. This is the Boys' Prison at Borstal, England. The basal principle there adopted is that every evil-doer, up to a certain age, unless mentally deficient, is potentially a good citizen. Accordingly the lads committed to Borstal are treated with a certain respect, which develops manhood. They learn whichever trade they prefer. They acquire habits of steady, hard work, and learn the joy of turning out good products. In five months, the boy who does his best is promoted to the "blue dress," and is given extra privileges. He is closely followed after he leaves the prison by the Borstal Association. This society finds homes and positions for the boys, and acts as a "big brother" to them. Such a supplementary aid to the practical drill of the prison is invaluable.

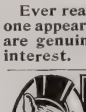
A FOOD STORY

Makes a Woman of 70 "one in 10,000"

The widow of one of Ohio's most distinguished newspaper editors and a famous leader in politics in his day, says she is 70 years old and a "stronger woman than you will find in ten thousand," and she credits her fine physical condition to the use of Grape Nuts.

"Many years ago I had a terrible fall which permanently injured my stomach. For years I lived on a preparation of corn starch and milk, but it grew so repugnant to me that I had to give it up. Then I tried, one after another, a dozen different kinds of cereals, but the process of digestion gave me great pain.



"It was not until I began to use Grape-Nuts food three years ago that I found relief. It has proved, with the dear Lord's blessing, a great boon to me. It brought me health and vigor such as I never expected to again enjoy, and in gratitude I never fail to sound its praises." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Gideons and the Bible

THE organization known as the Gideons is now engaged in placing over 70,000 Bibles in hotels throughout the country that are frequented by commercial travelers. A short time ago this organization placed 6,000 Bibles in the leading Chicago hotels, and these have already produced such excellent spiritual results that they have been encouraged to prosecute the work vigorously on a much wider scale. Mr. W. E. Henderson, National Secretary of the Gideons, who is now in New York, states that 25,000 Bibles will be shipped to San Francisco in June. This large number of Bibles will be on the platform of the National Sunday School Convention in that city, and will afterwards be distributed among the commercial hotels. The Bibles are the American Standard Version. Boston will be the next point of hotel distribution and a big meeting is planned for Tremont Temple. It is next proposed to make a large distribution of Bibles among the commercial hotels of New York.

W. E. Henderson, Nat. Secretary

There are said to be over 600,000 commercial traveling men in the United States, and the Gideons not only hope to place a Bible in each guest room of every hotel they frequent, but to try to win each one of the guests for Christ. They cordially invite all Christian commercial travelers to join them in this campaign for righteousness. In many cities, the leading business men are now associate members of the Gideons, co-operating with them for the betterment of traveling men. In Chicago, such firms as J. B. Farwell Company, Marshall Field & Co., Carson, Pierie, Scott & Co., Hibbard Spencer, Bartlett & Co., Sprague, Warner & Co., Reid, Murdock & Co., Franklin McVey & Co., Lyon & Healey, and others are associate members.

The Man Who Found Himself

Taken in the heart of the conflict outside Petersburg—47 years ago.

Copyright 1910 Patriot Pub. Co.

A gray-haired citizen of Tampa, Florida, turning over the pages of the November Review of Reviews, saw this picture, and in the young man on the ground with the bottle, was amazed to discover himself. Like a flash the years vanished, again he was outside Petersburg in '64, the air roared and shrieked with the fire of two armies, and he and these other members of the 9th A. C., U. S. A., whiled away a few weary minutes having "their pictures taken." Afterward he had forgotten it. To-day, he is grown old, but the picture will be forever young.

This photograph is but one of 3,500 which we have just discovered after they were buried for nearly fifty years. Theirs is a dramatic and amazing story.

Through the Civil War with the Camera went Mathew Brady, the genius whose photographic studio in New York was sought by world-famous men and women. With special permission from Lincoln, he accompanied the armies and navies for four years. He took thousands of photographs showing every phase of the struggle.

Here you will see no spick and span Fourth of July parades but the real soldier on the battle line—coatless and hatless and shoeless, with heavy growth of beard and tousled head, dirty and very, very tired. Here you will see the shambles of the great, rough field hospitals, the bitter tragedy of the prison cells, the pathos of the broken-up homes—all that story of the war that never has been told elsewhere and that passes before your eyes in these pictures—a living, vivid panorama, just as it passed before the eyes of Brady's cameras.

18 OF THESE PICTURES GIVEN AWAY

We have enclosed prints of 18 of the photographs in a large portfolio. These we will give you free if you send ten cents for the cost of mailing.

At the same time we will tell you the strange romance of Brady and the photographs — how the government paid $27,800 for a similar collection, how Gen. Garfield valued them at $150,000 — how the famous detective Allan Pinkerton had a share in taking them.

Each of the eighteen prints is on a sheet 12 x 19½ inches in size and has under it the full story of that particular picture.

Temptation*

ONE of the great infidels has acknowledged in many of his writings that the old Hebrews did a great work in the world, which has been continued by Christianity. He allows this because they were the first nation, he says, to establish "a God with a character," all-righteous, all-just, all-merciful.

The God of the Hebrews was majestic in virtue. He hated only sin. Then came his Son, the perfect image of the Father, but adapted more exactly to the apprehension of finite beings, and possessing a character so beautiful that no human conception had ever hitherto attained unto it.

Such a God could not yield to temptation, neither could he tempt any. He even promised that none of his followers should be tempted above what they were able to bear; but that with the temptation a way of escape should be provided. It is because we do not avail ourselves of this way of escape, that we are ever overcome by temptation.

Each man has his own peculiar temptations. Perhaps the commonest one is what is called the loss of temper. You may have heard Gipsy Smith's story of the woman who longed for her husband's conversion. She was a truly religious woman and she prayed, and begged others to pray, that he might be turned to Christ. The minister and all the other good people seconded her efforts. The man was attracted to the church and several times he was nearly ready to declare himself a Christian. Then he would suddenly cease coming to the meetings and the work would have to begin all over again.

It was his wife's temper which did the mischief. In spite of her many good qualities, her violent passions would sometimes get the upper hand of her. Then, as her husband heard her angry words, and saw her slamming the doors and knocking the children about, he would say, "If that is religion, I don't want it."

"But," says Gipsy Smith, "there came a time when she said that she would conquer her temper, and God's grace helped her."

Her husband broke a beautiful lamp, which was very precious to her. He expected that she would fly into a passion—but, no; she merely said, "Never mind, husband. We will try to get another one."

"Why, Mary," he said, "how wonderfully you bear this. How is it?"

"I am trying with God's help to overcome my dreadful temper," she confessed, with tears.

His heart was touched. He saw the power of the Saviour, and that it was what he most needed, and he gave up his heart to Christ.

In Whittier's noble poem, "The Two Voices," is pictured the struggle which goes on in every human breast. The tempter urges the man to cease his fight against evil.

> Give o'er the thankless task; forsake
> The fools who know not ill from good.
> Eat, drink, enjoy thine own, and take
> Thine ease among the multitude.

The man listens. He is sick and tired of his apparently useless and unrewarded efforts. Then, suddenly he hears another voice. This one bids him take heart, and reminds him that

> The meed unearned is food unblest;
> Thou hoard'st in vain what love should spend;
> Self-ease is pain; thine only rest
> Is labor for a worthy end.
> So haply, when the dark shall end,
> The wrong shall lose itself in right,
> And all thy wrestlings overcomings blend
> With the long Sabbath of the light.

Thus shall it ever be with him who stays his tempted soul on God, the great Helper.

Joshua*

THE book of Joshua covers a period of from seventeen to twenty-seven years, and contains some of the most interesting and thrilling incidents in all literature. Its essential truth is confirmed by many writers of so-called profane history.

Thus, Procopius, a writer who flourished in the sixth century, relates that numbers of the Girgashites, Jebusites, etc., settled at Tangier in Africa. "There," says he, "near a large fountain, appear two pillars of white stone, having this inscription engraved on them in Phœnician characters: 'We are those who fled from the face of Joshua, son of Navè, the robber.'"

It was only natural that these conquered and exiled tribes should call Joshua "a robber"; but he had robbed only in order to make way for a better people and a purer religion. Another historian of the same class calls him "the murderous wolf."

Augustine, the saintly bishop of Hippo, as quoted by Jamieson, relates that if any of the boors in the neighborhood of Hippo or Carthage was asked who he was, or of what country, he answered that he was a Canaanite. Eusebius adds his testimony that the Canaanites, when routed by Joshua, settled near Tripoli in Africa. Mela, the noted ancient geographer, who lived in the reign of Claudius Cæsar, and was a native of Tangier, says that the people of the vicinity were of Canaanitish origin.

In Schwartz's Palestine, it is said that the grave of this noble hero is pointed out at Kefar Charas. It is ornamented with a handsome monument, only a fit memorial of his useful and blameless life. Jewish traditions add that the sepulchre was decorated with an image of the sun, in memory of the miracle of Ajalon.

So perfect and stainless was Joshua that the Scripture (Heb. 4: 8) suggests him as a type of Christ. In all his life of slavery in Egypt; his attachment to Moses as his active "minister"; his wonderful war-record; and his later absolute rulership of Israel; no flaw was found in him. We know that he was human and that he must have had faults; but no doubt he struggled valiantly against them and overcame them, through the great Helper in whom he trusted.

Moses naturally looked about him anxiously for helpers, when the great responsibility fell upon him of leading Israel into the promised land. His discerning eye saw in Joshua one of the most able and useful in the vast multitude. When he was selected for special honor, he might have become puffed up and arrogant, but he bore with modesty all the marks of favor bestowed upon him.

Observe the persistency which he showed when he returned from the survey of Canaan. His shrewd mind saw that it was good. His faith supported him in the belief that through God's help the fierce and idolatrous tribes inhabiting it could be conquered; and with the good Caleb he kept to his word, even when he was stoned for his faithfulness.

Then throughout all of the vexatious backslidings of his brethren, observe his patience and his unfailing personal adherence to Jehovah and his chosen agent, Moses. Never was a sublimer example of loyalty. Joshua must have been one of the great comforts of the mighty leader of Israel during those forty terrible years. Obedience, loyalty, modesty, persistency—these are only a few of the lessons to be learned from this wonderful life.

About Remembering

By ELBERT HUBBARD

HENRY DICKSON

America's Foremost Authority on Memory Training and Principal Dickson School of Memory.

FOR a long time I have been promising myself to write up my good friend, Mr. Henry Dickson of Chicago, and I have not forgotten.

Mr. Dickson is teaching a Science or System, which I believe is of more importance than the entire curriculum of your modern college.

MR. DICKSON teaches memory.

Good Memory is necessary to all achievements.

I know a man who is a graduate of three colleges. This man is neither bright, interesting nor learned.

He's a dunce.

And the reason is that he CAN NOT REMEMBER.

He can not memorize a date or a line of poetry. His mind is a sieve.

Education is only what you remember.

Every little while I meet a man who has a memory, a TRAINED MEMORY, and he is a joy to my soul.

The manager of a great corporation never misses a face. If he sees you once, the next time he will call you by name. He told me how he did it. He studied memory-training with Prof. Dickson. He said a lot of nice things about Prof. Dickson, that I hesitate to write here lest my good friend Dickson object.

This Dickson system of memory-training is very simple. If you want to enlarge your arm, you exercise it. The same with your mind. You must put your brain through its few easy exercises to discover its capacity. You will be surprised, how quickly it responds.

You do not know when you will be called upon to tell what you know, and then a trained memory would help you. To the man or woman whose memory plays tricks, I recommend that you write to Prof. Dickson, and if his facts do not convince you, you are not to be convinced.

Our First Woman Police Officer

LOS ANGELES, Cal., has taken to itself the distinction of being the first American city to appoint a woman to a position on its regular police force. The accompanying photograph

Photograph, Underwood & Underwood, New York

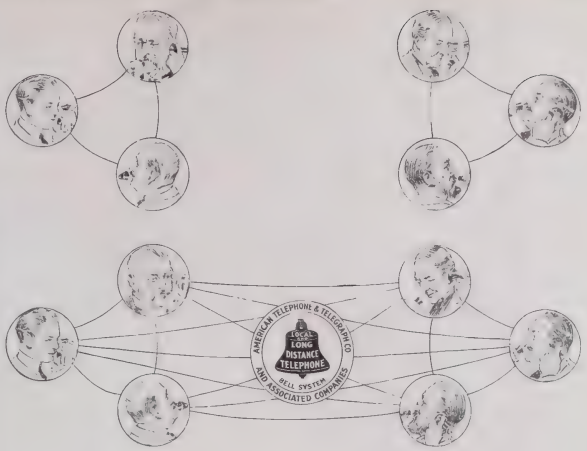
Mrs. Alice Stebbins Wells
The First Woman Police Officer

shows this officer, Mrs. Alice Stebbins Wells, in street costume, wearing her badge. Mrs. Wells is small and slight of figure, and is possessed of a sympathetic face and manner. It was due to her own action in bringing pressure to bear on the civic authorities that Mrs. Wells received her present appointment. She is convinced that the woman police officer can fill a niche in the affairs of a community, into which the policeman proper can never fit himself. This is especially true in cases where girls or women have infringed the law, or through ignorance or disregard of it are about to do so. In the matter of protection for the youth of the city Mrs. Wells has more than justified her appointment. She has more than proved the soundness of her theories to the benefit of Los Angeles.

AN ACCIDENTAL DISCOVERY

BLOTTING-PAPER was discovered purely by accident. Some ordinary paper was being made one day at a mill in Berkshire, England, when a careless workman forgot to put in the sizing material. The whole of the paper made was regarded as being useless. The proprietor of the mill desired to write a note shortly afterwards, and he took a piece of waste paper, thinking it was good enough for the purpose. To his intense annoyance the ink spread all over the paper. Suddenly there flashed over his mind the thought that this paper would do instead of sand for drying ink, and he at once advertised his waste paper as "blotting." There was such a big demand that the mill ceased to make ordinary paper, and was soon occupied in making blotting-paper only, the use of which soon spread to all countries.

THE FIRST ROBIN'S SONG



BE THE winter what it may,
Long and cold or dark and dreary,
Springtime's never far away,
Bursting buds and bird song cheery.

Let the day bring what it will—
Gloom and sadness, pain or sorrow—
Still it might be gloomier still;
Let's just trust Him till to-morrow.

Wherefore double any trouble,
Which may come to us to-day,
With one borrowed from to-morrow?
Trust will drive them both away.

Keep up heart and keep on hoping.
You'll soon pass this Marah too.
Maybe you can make it sweeter
For the next who passes through.

Union Increases Use

When two groups of telephone subscribers are joined together the usefulness of each telephone is increased.

Take the simplest case—two groups, each with three subscribers. As separate groups there are possible only six combinations—only six lines of communication. Unite these same two groups, and instead of only six, there will be fifteen lines of communication.

No matter how the groups are located or how they are connected by exchanges, combination increases the usefulness of each telephone, it multiplies traffic, it expands trade.

The increase is in accordance with the mathematical rule. If two groups of a thousand each are united, there will be a million more lines of communication.

No one subscriber can use all of these increased possibilities, but each subscriber uses some of them.

Many groups of telephone subscribers have been united in the Bell System to increase the usefulness of each telephone, and meet the public demand for universal service.

Fairy Soap

People who use it have often asked: "How can you make as good a soap as Fairy for 5c?" And when the price of the edible products from which Fairy is made goes soaring, it is sometimes a pretty delicate problem. Only years of soap-making experience and the aid of a wonderful organization make it possible.

Fairy Soap—the white, handy, floating, oval cake—is the best soap value in the market to-day.

Try it for your toilet and know the true meaning of soap luxury.

Fairy Soap has always won highest possible honors wherever exhibited in competition. At St. Louis and Portland Expositions Fairy was awarded first place over all other soaps.

"Have you a little 'Fairy' in your home?"

Sunny Monday

Laundry Soap

Sunny Monday Soap is different from any other laundry soap, and combines the virtues of all with the faults of none. It contains no rosin. The fats and oils used in Sunny Monday cost several times as much as rosin, but Sunny Monday has just that much added value and efficiency. Sunny Monday is white; it looks and is pure.

Sunny Monday is a wonderful dirt-starter and will wash woolens and flannels without shrinking, colored goods without fading, the finest fabrics without injury. It will wash equally well in hot, cold, lukewarm, boiling, hard or soft water. All waters look alike to Sunny Monday.

Because of its purity, and freedom from rosin, Sunny Monday has greater cleansing power than other soaps, and one bar of Sunny Monday is worth two bars of any yellow laundry soap.

Boys Who Fought In Our Civil War

Copyright 1911 Patriot Pub Co

A Powder Monkey of the North And a Drummer Boy of the South

These are two out of our magnificent collection of 3500 Photographs of the Civil War. Lost for fifty years, now just found again.

3500 Photographs Taken During the Civil War

RIGHT into history they marched, these bright boys of both armies. Only fourteen or fifteen years old, they bore the burden like men. The Powder Monkeys on board the ships (who took this name because they carried powder and shot to the gunners) were a jolly, daring little lot of boys, very proud that their Admiral (Farragut) had once been a powder monkey himself. The Drummer Boys on land did more than their share, brightening the long march, cheering the camp and inspiring the discouraged men on the battle line with the crashing beat of their drums. Often, too, they helped the surgeons in the field, and often they grabbed a gun and plunged into the fight themselves. Just boys! But right in line with their older comrades, they took part in the greatest battles the world has seen.

An Army of Boys

Hundreds of thousands of boys of fifteen and sixteen got into the Union Army by swearing they were eighteen, that being the age limit for enlistment, and the Federal troops have been called "an army of boys."

In the Confederate ranks, also, there were thousands of boys who enlisted in the same way. And the ships on both sides had their full quota of boys.

And we have 3,500 photographs that the world has never seen of those two armies and navies. Did you ever hear the story of the taking of those photographs?

Adventures in the War

Mathew Brady was a great artist photographer in New York, in the days when photography was new. When the war broke out he went into the fight, armed not with a gun but with the camera. Many were his narrow escapes. Once he wandered for days in the woods, armed only with a broadsword and dreading capture at every moment; once the Confederates mistook his cameras for guns and opened fire on them.

The Splendid Result

But he stuck to his great task, and when the war ended, he had a superb collection of thousands of photographs of the men on land and sea, in camp and battlefield, in hospital and prison. Here in these pictures you will see a real war—the greatest war that ever took place on the American continent, and one of the mightiest wars of all history. And this is no imaginative artist's handiwork. It is the living impression, caught in the heat of the conflict, and preserved on the camera plates, so that it is as clear, as new, as fresh to-day as it was fifty years ago when this boy slung his drum over his shoulder and beat the strains of Dixie.

Lost for so many years, these photographs are now at last in such shape that every American can own them, for the Review of Reviews has put them in ten tall volumes, and you can have them for less than one cent a picture.

"Chas. E. Mosby, at the age of 13 years, enlisted as a drummer, May 10, 1861—Elliott Grays Company I, 6th Va. Regiment of Infantry"—so reads the record—andthatchildserved in the Confederate army right through the four years of the civil war. Two companions, being slightly older, were put in the ranks.

OUR PATROL ALONG MEXICO'S BORDER

WHAT is probably the biggest peace patrol the world has ever known is now assembled on the Mexican border, where 25,000 of our "boys in blue" are guarding night and day 1,400 miles of territory from Brownsville to the Pacific Ocean. It is a large patrol and the posts are necessarily far between.

The standing army of the United States, including all posts from Alaska to the Philippines, consists of some 82,000 officers and men. Of this number one-fourth are in the South. The chief body of troops is stationed at San Antonio. Here there is a division of three brigades of infantry and a brigade of cavalry under Major-General W. H. Carter. There is a brigade at Galveston under General A. L. Mills, and one in the Los Angeles (Calif.) district under Brigadier-General Tasker H. Bliss. The locations of these troops are a little removed from the border line, but on the line itself and along the banks of the Rio Grande three thousand regular soldiers are constantly kept patrolling. At Fort Sam Houston there are also three brigades in camp.

There are over two thousand United States marines in Mexican waters, including the Gulf of Mexico, the Pacific and Gulf of California. At Guantanamo, Cuba, are the battleships Connecticut, North Dakota, Michigan, Minnesota, Idaho, Mississippi, Vermont, Georgia, Nebraska, Rhode Island, Virginia, Tennessee, Montana and North Carolina. Patrolling the coast of Mexico are the scout cruiser Chester in the vicinity of Tampico, the cruiser Tacoma in the vicinity of Puerto Mexico, and the gunboat Princeton, steaming in the neighborhood of Salina Cruz. Most of the Pacific fleet is assembled at San Diego. This place, which is a very strategic base, is but twenty miles from the Mexican border; here are the armored cruisers California, Maryland, South Dakota, West Virginia and Pennsylvania, with the gunboat Yorktown. In addition are the torpedo boats Truxtun, Paul Jones, Perry, Preble, Stewart, Davis, Fox, Goldsborough and Rowan, and the submarines Grampus and Pike. This already formidable fighting force has been recently augmented by 500 marines brought from San Francisco on the transport Buffalo. All told, there are almost twenty-five thousand United States soldiers and sailors confronting Mexico at the present time.

No doubt such a mighty mobilization of our army and fleet on the borders of the southern republic is apt to arouse suspicion in many minds that our forces are there for other than peaceful purposes. As usual the alarmists have been talking of Japan, seeing in their dreams the shadows of the little brown men of the Orient scrambling over our borders and sweeping the country before them. Some will have it that a secret treaty exists between Mexico and Japan providing for an alliance both offensive and defensive, and that according to it should Mexico call on Japan for assistance in time of war the conquerors of Russia would be compelled to supply both men and munitions of war. Baron Uchida, Japanese Ambassador to the United States, officially and strongly denies that any such treaty exists. Japan, however, has been colonizing along the west coast of Mexico for the past ten years, and it is claimed there are now some 150,000 Japanese in the republic. Undoubtedly, Japan would like a naval base on this side of the Pacific, but that she has any intention of antagonizing the United States is too absurd for consideration. There has not been at any time any contemplation of Japan as a factor in the situation, so far as this country is concerned.

The excitement which was caused throughout the country by the mobilization of a big force of troops and marines on the Mexican border has considerably subsided, for most people are satisfied with the assurances from Washington that our government has no intention of interference with the Mexican situation beyond what may be necessary for the protection of the lives and property of Americans in Mexican territory and also to prevent filibustering parties from using our border territory as recruiting ground. The presence of American soldiers and sailors has little or nothing to do with the internal affairs of the Mexican republic. They are there for three principal reasons. In the first place, as was announced in the beginning, the purpose of manœuvring is a primary cause. The section is good for this purpose and a drill of three or four months is expected. It is incumbent on any army to keep itself fit in anticipation of emergency. In the next place, the troops have been sent down to enforce the neutrality laws, which have been flagrantly violated. It is well known that the insurrectos have been enabled to carry on their revolt through means of ammunition and other supplies brought over the border from United States ground. Not only have the insurgents received arms and food, but many Americans have actually joined their ranks. Thus they have been enabled to prolong the struggle and defy the federal troops at every turn. To put a stop to this and maintain neutrality, our government

The Keystone in the Arch of Life

TEXT—I. Cor. 15: 14

THE resurrection of Jesus is a subject of such magnitude and moment that one is hardly able to choose a satisfying method of approach in its consideration. To say that it is the central fact in the history of the race is simply to state a truism. It is the keystone in the arch of human life. The apostle Paul, than whom no greater logician ever lived, saw clearly that with the resurrection Christianity must stand or fall. If Christ be not risen we Christians are of all men most miserable; we are yet in our sins. We have forsworn the actual joys of this perishing life and espoused the fancied joys of a life which never had existence. If Christ is still dead, Christianity is still dead, and all who believe in him as a living Saviour are deluded, miserable men, building the house of their life upon the shifting sands of superstition and prejudice, and doomed inevitably to bitter disappointment and failure. No fact conceivable is of more importance than this. It deals with one of the two common experiences through which every human being must pass. We must all be born: we must all die.

Universality of Death

We must die. There is something magnificent in the thought of the universality of death. It is not always a curse. It will come this bright Easter day to many thousands of people in the form of an angel of light, bringing them relief from their suffering, opening to them the door of a larger existence, and bringing them the opportunity of seeing God face to face. But death is grim at best. The inevitableness of it causes a man to think solemnly. There is something sublime in the fact that no one can escape. In the crude machineries of justice, even among the most civilized races, many guilty men escape; many innocent men suffer. But the unerring finger of death finds the pulse of every man. The rich man can protect himself from a thousand ills, but not from this. The wise man knows a balm for many a heart, but none for this. The ignorant man has strength of a certain brutish character with which he can lift burdens, but not strength to lift this. Death finds us all. The king upon his throne and the peasant in his cot stand side by side and pass through the same door. In this the world is one. "Pale death knocks with equal step at the palace of the rich and the cottage of the poor," was the observation of a poet in ancient Rome. We see the same fact, magnificent, dreadful, relentless, to-day, even as it has been in all the past.

Now, is there any exception? If there is not, I do not think it matters much about your being here or anywhere else; I do not think anything matters much. In that case, the only difference between you and the other animals would be your greater capacity for suffering and for being deceived. The birds of the air are intent, in this spring time, on finding a place sheltered and secure for their little nests, where they can raise their young. They are anxiously evading their enemies, industriously finding food and building. Their little season soon o'er, they have no heed or need for any other. They are not tantalized by any voices from any other fancied world. The strong instinct which lifts them into the sky and carries them a thousand miles at the heels of the seasons—this is the only voice from any other world which seems to call them. They are better off than we, if there is no exception to the universal fact of death. They are not haunted by hopes that are simply painted across the sky by the mocking finger of some mirage. We all of us have a question stirring our hearts.

"Shall He Live Again?"

We ask it when we are conscious of the increasing pressure of the world upon our weakness. We ask it again when our tears fall upon the face of our dead: "If a man die, shall he live again?" The very asking of that question is one of the vast achievements of human nature at its best. If a man die, if a man die, shall he live again? No answer from the philosopher, none from the scientist, none from the poet, none from nature. The tree that is dead in the fall is dead in the spring. The tree that comes out with blossom and bud in the springtime was alive when winter flung its blanket over it to keep it in its hour of sleep and rest. But if the tree die, it lies where it falls forever. It is dead. If a man die, shall he live again? I wonder when that thought first trembled into the soul of man! What an achievement it was! What an upward step! What a golden key to unlock glorious, unfathomable possibilities of progress! Or was it a leaden key to unlock the door of despair and disappointment? If a man die, is it possible that there should be an exception in nature?

The Testimony of History

History tells us—the fact is substantiated by evidence that is unimpeachable—history tells us that once a Man was dead and buried and became alive again. Apart from the evidence altogether, it is impossible to reject that proposition without involving one's self in difficulties greater than those involved in its acceptance. Take, for instance, the contrast between the day of Pentecost and the Good Friday upon which our Lord died. Then his enemies were in the ascendent. The high priests and their satellites were on the throne of power, and he was hung upon the cruel cross with the throbbing pain in his hands and feet, with hot anguish darting along his nervous system, with his heart broken by the hate and rejection of his kind, and with the whole sky black with the vast clouds of suffering that separated him from his God. His friends had left him, bowed beneath a misunderstanding which they could not penetrate or shake off. They took him down at last from the cross dead. Loving hands carried him away and laid him in a tomb, and a great stone was rolled against the door.

Then his enemies had a guard placed to see that his disciples did not steal the body. There he lay dead, dead, a dead Christ. With him died Christianity. With him died the hopes of his followers. Dead and buried! Forty days later, in Jerusalem, where he was crucified, there stood a man who had forsaken him, who had denied him, who had shown his absolute disbelief in the whole proposition. He stood there in the face of the very man from whom he had fled, a transfigured character. In that great inaugural with which Peter announced the coming of the new kingdom of God, his message was this: "He whom ye by the hands of wicked men did crucify and slay hath God raised up, because it was not possible that he should be holden of death."

Triumphing Over Death

There are at least nine appearances of the risen Christ to a great variety and number of witnesses; to five hundred at one time. The last appearance was when he went away into the sky, vanishing out of the presence of his assembled followers. Now, according to his promise, he has sent his Spirit upon the Church, and there thrills in the hearts of his followers a new, living power which Paul describes as the power of his endless life. Here you have the complete destruction and death of Christianity. Here you have its new birth. No other fact is great enough to bring us through those forty days from the abyss of that ruin to the pinnacle of this power which could convert thousands of his enemies to a belief in his resurrection. You cannot account for it on any rational basis, except that it is a fact.

Now, I want, in a brief word, to lift up before you the meaning of this fact. The first thing for you and me this Easter morning to recall is, that Jesus was completely identified with man. Without any reservation whatever, he took upon him the form of man. He took a man's body; a man's capacity for suffering; in many respects, a man's limitations. He took upon himself the lowly life of a laboring man. He knew hunger, thirst, weakness, weariness. He was tempted—when we rise to the moral realm of human nature—in all points like as we. Oh! you man know that after you have spent half a lifetime in girding and upbuilding your spiritual and moral nature, there leaks through some crevice of that wall you have builded, the muddy floods of sinful tendency and temptation.

So that while we are making this journey, we must never relax our vigilance or lower our wall, or sleep at our post, for sin croucheth ever at the door. Our Lord was tempted in all points like as we, through the whole range, from those spiritual temptations characteristic of distinguished and beautiful natures, to the pitiless abyss of physical temptation which is peculiar to the baser natures which form the bottom layer of society; through the whole gamut, up and down, he was tempted as we are tempted. He was absolutely identified with man—with man's body, man's mind, man's soul, man's temptations, man's aspirations, man's life, man's death.

He accepted all the responsibilities involved in that identification. At last, he hung upon the cross He died. He was buried. He was identified with man's destiny. Not simply in relationship to this world, but to all other worlds; for man is not a creature of this world alone. Our being here is simply an incident. God placed us here because he had something for this race to do in this world. We are units in that universe which comprises all worlds. Our relationship does not stop with the environment which holds us here, and the natural laws which sustain our being. Our relationships penetrate to the very nature of God. We cannot die, because we are creatures of a deathless universe. Christ identified himself with these relationships. They had been broken; they had been scarred and obscured. He identified himself completely with sinful, fallen, dying man in all his relationships, good, bad and indifferent. He fulfilled them all. He flooded through all the veins of man's being to the uttermost extremity. With his Presence and Spirit he baptized all relationships. And he once more connected the spirit of man with the spirit of God. That is the fact.

The Resurrection Message

That identification would have meant little, meant no more than the identification of Socrates with the best men of his age, or Plato or any other good man in any other time, except for the fact that he rose again, rose triumphant from the grave.

So I come to you with this beautiful, reassuring, inspiring message. Life for you is divided into two worlds of continents and oceans, the same as the natural universe outside of you. There is one world of sorrow, into which you fall, which bows and blights your spirit. It may become a frozen, lifeless world; it may become fruitful. The clouds of sorrow may drop the gentle rain upon your seared spirit, and falling thus, it may bring to you a new life and a new growth. It depends upon your relationship with the "Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief."

I tell you, sorrowing heart, that it is possible for your tears to set forth a beautiful rainbow of divine love. It is possible for the throbbing pain of your heart to bring to you health of spirit and of life. That possibility is wrapped up in the fact that Christ, the Man of sorrows, is alive now. And, if you will identify yourself individually with him, as he has identified himself racially with mankind, you will then understand what is the height and the depth and the breadth of the love of God which passeth knowledge.

The Ever-Living Christ

Some of us are lost in a dark world of sin, distorted vision, consciousness of weakness, a sense of unreality, a deadness towards spiritual appeal. Sometimes our better nature asserts itself, and we cry with Paul, "Oh, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" It is a hard struggle. All life is, that is worth while. I can turn you to no source of power, except to a living Christ. A dead Christ would be a menace, not a blessing. If I were to ask you to live the principles of the Sermon on the Mount without a Saviour to help you live them, I would be mocking your weakness. I present to you One who has lived the whole law of God, who opens his arms and lifts you tight against his heart, and gives to you his life, his faith, his overcoming power, his righteousness, his holiness, so that in Christ you are more than conquerors through him that loved you.

This great message is for your daily task as well. God bless the man and the woman who works. No other has a clear title to manhood. A man who produces something is the real man. All others are simply parasites, imitations. You men and women

The Klopsch Memorial

I THINK your plan an excellent one in the endowment of a Louis Klopsch Memorial at Mont-Lawn. This will be a testimony of friends to the benevolent energies of Dr. Klopsch. His was a constructive mind, always seeking to build and better conditions in all institutions with which he was connected. His heart was one of intense sympathy and great interest in the welfare of the needy.

I enclose therefore my check of $15 for ten subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, accepting your gracious offer to give half the amount towards the endowment. I do hope his prayer, that subscriptions from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family will reach the million mark, will be answered. I look upon it as one of the greatest of honors to be remembered as a Patron of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, which, when endowed, will always be a source of blessing to the waifs of the hot city streets, by giving an experience in the cool mountain air that suggests an answer to one petition in the Lord's Prayer for a taste of heaven on earth," in the Children's Paradise.

I can never forget the tendencies of quickened sympathies that have impelled me to greater zeal in Christian service in the ministry through visits to Mont-Lawn, and made me, I believe, a ready disciple of the one who said "I love God and little children." I shall count it one of the greatest honors of this life to have my name in enduring bronze as a Patron of the work, and thus be identified as a friend of Louis Klopsch and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home.

Every Prayer Answered

By EUGENE THWING

IT MAY seem strange for one who is a firm believer in prayer to say that it is painful in the extreme for him to read the "answers to prayer" that are published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. These "answers to prayer" seem to convey the impression that God is partial, that the answers to prayer are exceptional and extraordinary; that some prayers are answered, while the vast majority are not answered. It is the contention of the writer that all prayers are answered. "Yes," I hear some one say, "the real earnest and sincere prayers are answered!" But is there any prayer that is not earnest and sincere? The teachings of Christ are very explicit upon this subject. He does not teach that some prayers, a few prayers, are answered, but that all alike are answered; but not in the same way.

The great mistake that tens of thousands, yes, millions, of people are making is, they imagine that no prayer is answered that is not answered as they imagine it should be, that there is no answer unless it be an affirmative answer: that there can be no negative answer; that the Father must always say "Yes," and never be permitted to say "No!" Does not the earthly parent answer his child just as much when he says "No" as when he is compelled to say "Yes"? And is there not as much love when he says "No" as when he says "Yes"? Shall we not permit our heavenly Father sometimes to say, "Wait, my child"? and when he says "Wait," is not that sufficient answer? Are we to say he never answers us unless he answers in the way, at the time, in the manner we think best? Have we forgotten that all prayer has as its basis the thought, "Thy will, not mine, be done?"

It is sometimes said that God cannot answer prayer in all cases, for two persons may ask for directly opposite and conflicting things, as when one prays for rain and another for sunshine. Cannot infinite wisdom and love say "Yes" to the one and "No" to the other and answer both in the best and wisest way? Paul prayed earnestly three times that the thorn in his flesh be removed. It was not removed. He did not say God had refused to answer him! The answer was: "My grace is sufficient for you." God answered in the best way for Paul. A wife may pray for the conversion of her husband and then not see him converted immediately, or for her child and see no results. It may be that the Father is answering her by saying, "Wait, practise patience, set the right example, let your light shine." And what could be a better answer than that? Shall we not gladly let the Father work by means and sometimes use us as the means in working out his beneficent purposes?

There was at one time a lady in my church who was suffering from a frightful cancer of the breast. She was a devout and most sensible woman. One afternoon at a little prayer meeting one of the ladies said: "Sister M., did you ever pray to be healed?" "No, I am quite as willing to die from cancer as in any other way." "Would you object to have us pray for your healing?" "I believe in prayer, and would not object, provided that if God sees fit to heal me, I am to become a better and more useful woman. I want no selfishness in this petition." "Very well, we will make it that way. Will you kneel with us?" "Certainly, but I must insist that the Father's will be done." They knelt for a few minutes in quiet prayer. They arose and that woman was healed from that hour. Some said, "How wonderfully these prayers were answered!" That good woman would have said: "The answer would have been just as real to me, had he said: "Not now, my child, but you shall have grace to bear the suffering and the waiting."

If in the future "answers to prayer" are to be printed and read by thousands, shall we not see among those answers the report of grace given, of negative answers, or answers quite different from what we, in our shortsightedness, think best? Shall we not thank God sometimes that he has quite as often said "No" as "Yes" to our unwise and narrow petitions?

BLESS YOU, dear brother, it is largely a matter of definition. Most of the misunderstandings in life come from the different definitions given to words.

Undoubtedly all sincere, earnest prayer is "answered." I have heard some prayers that very probably did not reach above the ceiling of the room in which they were uttered (Matt. 6: 5). Such prayers, I believe, were not answered, but the fault was with the one who prayed, and not with the loving Father above. There cannot be any real difference of opinion among believing Christians as to the great fact that God hears and answers all true prayer. As to the meaning of words, however, there can be important differences. In the general understanding of those who send their testimonies to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD "answered" means "granted." They are telling of blessings received in answer to prayer. They delight to tell of answers that said "yes" to their petition and bestowed the things desired. Your boy asks for skates; you answer him "no." He loves you and believes in you, and your refusal does not destroy his belief; but he may not go straightway and tell everyone that he asked and the answer was a refusal. If you say "yes" to his request, he runs to his friends and tells them in delight, "I asked my father for a pair of skates and he gave them to me." It is natural to tell of the pleasant things we receive. When, in answer to some definite request, the heavenly Father grants the thing desired, it is good to acknowledge it, but of course we must trust him and acknowledge his love at all times whether we understand his ways or not.

THESE same correspondents of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who tell of requests granted could tell, no doubt, of many earnest requests which the heavenly Father had seen fit to deny; but still they believe him and love him. Their faith in prayer is not lessened. They believe that all things—the requests granted and the requests denied—work together for good to them that love him. They know he has answered them for their good whether he has said "yes," or "no," or "wait." But they cannot see his reasons now. They cannot discern the good that is hidden for a while in his providence. So they do not proclaim it now, as they do the good things they can see. When the revelation comes, how quick they are to acknowledge it!

Many of the greatest blessings in life come to us through the disappointments of our desires. We ask earnestly for things that the heavenly Father knows would be injurious. He sends experiences very different, and later we see that they came from the hand of love. Knowing our own faulty judgment and believing in his perfect wisdom and love, we always pray, "if it be best," and "not my will, but thine, be done." Time and again, as we realize the eagerness with which we are about to rush into some plan, we fear to trust ourselves, and we pray, "Dear Father, thou seest how much I want to do this thing. If it be wise and right in thy sight, prosper it; if not, do not let my eagerness carry me on, but defeat my pet plan, and turn me into thy way, and I will praise thee."

HOW thankful we are that God does answer our prayers, and how much more thankful we are that he answers them according to his wisdom and not ours! That being true, should not a large portion of our praying be just a recognition of his goodness and love—just an uplifting of praise by trustful hearts—just an outpouring of love, free from all greed and selfish desire?

East and Easter

By Amos R. Wells

OUT of the East the royal Sun,
Sign of a glad new day begun,
Out of the East, to heal and bless,
Rises the Sun of Righteousness:
Out of the East is Easter.

Out of the East the Stars arise,
Myriad suns of other skies;
So is Judea's Saviour found
Lord of all races the Earth around:
Out of the East is Easter.

Out of the East the Wise Men came,
Led by the wondrous, heavenly flame.
Now the King of their starry lore
Rises to reign forever more:
Out of the East is Easter.

Out of the East the warmth and power,
Light and love for the living hour,
Joy unceasing and full and free,
Meant for the lowliest, even me:
Out of the East is Easter.

"Diplomatic Wedding" at Washington

AS THE official circle at the capital of the nation is under the necessity of devoting itself to rather formal functions during the winter it invariably turns to less rigid and proportionately more enjoyable festivities with the coming of spring. A fashionable wedding being of all events the prime excuse for merriment and the display so dear to the hearts of the dwellers at the capital, officialdom considers itself cheated if the spring social calendar does not contain at least one big wedding.

There is certainly no cause for disappointment this season, for the Ambassador of Germany and the Countess von Bernstorff have announced the marriage of their only daughter, Countess Luise-Alexandra, on Monday afternoon, March 27, to Count Pourtales, an attaché of the German diplomatic corps. If an official wedding, which presupposes a brave display of gold lace, is always welcome to the lovers of the spectacular, one may imagine with how much more eagerness an international wedding is awaited, for this insures a still more gorgeous dress parade, thanks to the participation of the diplomatic corps. Then a wedding in which one or both principals are members of the official foreign colony is practically certain to enroll as guests the President of the United States and his wife, members of the Cabinet and leaders of the Supreme Court circle—celebrities who lend prestige to the occasion without committing the crime of overshadowing the bride.

The Bride and Groom—Count and Countess Pourtales

International marriages such as the one scheduled for this month are rare at the capital of the nation. Diplomatic weddings—that is, the marriages of men in the Diplomatic Corps—are comparatively frequent, for scarce a season goes by that one of the envoys or secretaries or attachés stationed at Washington as a representative of a foreign power does not take unto himself a wife. The novelty of the present case is that it unites the fortunes of two foreigners, but young people in whom the American public has come to take a friendly interest, aside from that stimulated by their wedding. Cosmopolitan Washington, which is accustomed to seeing foreigners in the role of bridegroom, has from past observation grown to expect that the daughter of an envoy—particularly in the case of European nobility—will return home to choose a life partner. Then there are other features that add interest to this March wedding. For one thing, it is unusual to fix the date of a big official wedding in Lent, and then again it is to take place in Concordia Church, which has not become known to the public as the scene of such events to the same extent as some other places of worship, for instance St. John's, which has been dubbed the "Court Church" or "Church of the Presidents." The explanation is found, of course, in the circumstance that the Teutonic diplomats attend the German church; whereas the British and most other Protestant diplomats are worshipers at one or another of the Episcopal churches. As Concordia Church is only a moderately large edifice some curtailment of the number bidden to the ceremony was necessary. A great reception, serving both as congratulatory levee and as leave-taking, was held at the German Embassy to compensate for this; here all official Washington was invited. The happy couple will sail for Europe on March 30.

The pretty little Countess von Bernstorff, the bride, is an interesting example of how thoroughly Americanized a young lady of foreign birth may become in a comparatively short time. When the present German Ambassador arrived at his post, gossip represented his American wife as considerably surprised at the latitude allowed young women in their social activities. Her twenty-year-old daughter, on the other hand, was plainly delighted at the unrestrained way in which American girls were allowed to go about, and as is usual in the United States, the young lady carried her point. That this liberal policy has remained in force is attested by the fact that the favorite pastime of this interesting couple was found in automobile rides in a runabout built for two, with the Count Pourtales acting as driver.

The young Countess von Bernstorff has entered enthusiastically into the social life of official circles at Washington. Soon after her arrival, she became one of the friends of Miss Ethel Roosevelt, then a White House débutante, and latterly she has been one of the intimates of Miss Helen Taft, in whose honor an informal party was given at the German Embassy a short time ago, at which the President "dropped in," after his habit, late in the evening. Other chums of the young countess include the Misses Meyer, daughters of the Secretary of the Navy; Miss Mary Southerland, daughter of Rear-Admiral Southerland; Miss Elsie Aldrich, daughter of the former Senator from Rhode Island, and Miss Cecelia May.

Members of the Bridal Party

The young Countess von Bernstorff is slender, and save in the delicate coloring of her complexion, does not suggest the traditional German type of beauty. Her blue eyes and the tint of her hair cause her to be classed as a blonde, but she is not the plump, flaxen-haired type. That she speaks English perfectly is, of course, not at all strange, for aside from the fact that it is her mother's tongue she was grounded in the language as well as in German and French by the governesses by whom she was educated and had an opportunity to practise it during the four years that her father was attached to the German Embassy in London, as well as later in Cairo, Egypt where the Bernstorffs were stationed prior to coming to Washington, and where the young countess made her début in society.

Count Pourtales, who perhaps has a slight advantage over his bride-to-be in his ability to speak the English language with never a suspicion of an accent, is regarded as one of the handsomest young men in official circles in Washington. He is a clean-cut, manly chap, suggestive of the best type of young business or professional man. His chief fad since coming to the United States has been a motor-car, though that is no innovation at the German Embassy; for the young Teutons accredited here to practise statecraft appear to have a commendable penchant for tinkering around automobiles. It is no costly car, however, which has been a source of such fun for Count Pourtales and his countess, but merely an inexpensive American-made runabout—indeed, not nearly so valuable a vehicle as the electric car which the German Ambassador some time ago presented to his daughter.

According to the gossip of the mutual friends of the young couple, the Bernstorff-Pourtales wedding may be regarded as the climax of a real romance such as is all too rare in fashionable and official circles. The young people met for the first time only about a year ago, when Count Pourtales came to Washington as attaché of the German Embassy—his first assignment in the diplomatic profession following six years in the Guards at Berlin. Count Pourtales, who was reared in Switzerland and educated in Munich, is twenty-eight years of age, or six years the senior of his prospective bride. It is expected that following his wedding trip he will be given a European post in the diplomatic service.

Count von Bernstorff is one of the most popular diplomats ever sent to Washington by any nation, thanks largely to his genial and democratic manner. The count, who is in his forty-ninth year, was born in London while his father was serving as German Ambassador there, and when he was only twenty-five years of age he married an American girl, so that it is no wonder that he too speaks English as though it were his native tongue. He began his diplomatic career some dozen years ago, serving first at Constantinople and later at Belgrade, Dresden, St. Petersburg, Munich and London. It was while at the English capital, where he served for four years, that the count came especially under the notice of Emperor William, owing to his work in dissipating the existing ill feeling against Germany. TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD —THE FILMS of a moving picture machine show in a small theatre at Bolozole, Russia, exploded and set fire to the building during a performance on March 5. One hundred persons were burned or trampled to death.

—IN A RECENT article on the Centre of Population in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a correspondent stated that there was no railroad in Brown County, Ind. There is a railroad running from Indianapolis to Bloomington. The stream to which the name Silver Creek was given is not known in Southern Indiana by that name. The name by which the writer called it is taken from that of a picture of a Southern Indiana stream.

—THE RECORD for sea-flight in a flying machine was made on Sunday, March 5, by Lieutenant Bague, formerly of the Fourth Algerian Rifles. In a Bleriot monoplane he flew from Antibes, fifteen miles southwest of Nice in France, to the little island of Gorgona, lying off the Italian coast between Corsica and Leghorn, the total distance being 125 miles. The nearest approach to this record was made by J. A. D. McCurdy, as told in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, when, on January 30, he attempted to fly from Key West to Havana, but broke down when within ten miles of the Cuban shore, after covering a distance of ninety-one miles.

—LAZZIM BEY OF BEIRUT, Syria, passed through New York recently on his way to Canada to study industrial and agricultural conditions. When asked as to present conditions in Syria, Lazzim Bey said that they had improved very much under the new Turkish Government. Taxes had been reduced, and agriculture was encouraged thereby. Several industries have been started at Beirut, which is returning to its former importance. Some of the mountain tribes which formerly gave a great deal of trouble are more contented under the new rule, and there has been less friction between the Mohammedans, Christians and Jews in Syria over religious questions than has been known before by the present generation.

—GREAT BRITAIN'S anti-Mormon agitation promises to be fruitful in results. There are said to be 1,178 Mormon officials in England conducting a constant propaganda, holding meetings, distributing literature and visiting houses. Their "converts" are largely servant girls to whom they supply the money for passage to America.

Taal's Eruption Kills a Thousand

The Only Survivors in the Volcanic Section

Mount Taal in Active Eruption

Villagers Who Perished in the Lava

JUST before dawn on Sunday morning, January 29, more than one thousand persons perished on and around the island of Taal in the Philippines through the sudden eruption of a volcano. Entire villages were buried beneath the boiling mud which poured with terrific noise from the crater's mouth. The death which overtook the unfortunates was one of unspeakable horror to the superstitious people. The only light that greeted them when awakened by the crater's roar was that from the raging flames which swept from the mouth of the burning mountain. The cries of mothers for their children, whom love would vainly seek to shelter, were lost in the terrific detonations which thundered from the eruption.

Whole villages with their inhabitants seemed to be absolutely blotted out in the space of a few minutes. Only a few contorted bodies and broken trees covered with gray mud and dust were left to indicate that there once had been life within the radius of the volcano of Taal.

In one village five wounded and terror-stricken survivors were found, but only one had strength enough to tell something of what had taken place, but through fright and exhaustion his story was much disconnected.

The volcano has now sunk into the sea, carrying down with it the entire island covered with the débris and death of the awful catastrophe. On the waters, which swirled into the crater, could be seen many dead clay-covered bodies, twisted and shapeless, lashing to and fro with the motion of the current. Several who lived near the shore sought refuge in the little lake which had surrounded the mountain, but the water was made so hot by the fiery stones and boulders belched forth from the crater that it boiled and bubbled and became unbearable to the touch. Some, however, in madness plunged in to meet a terrible death; among these was a white man, whose body afterwards drifted ashore, disfigured and unrecognizable.

Between the outpourings of mud from the volcano, poisonous gases escaped, steamed and rolled down the hillside and, enveloping a whole village in their descent, destroyed all life, human, animal and plant.

More than a century and a half ago Taal had spoken death to many, but since then its infrequent threatenings had brought no trouble to the forgetful inhabitants of the valleys, so that when recent warnings in the way of local earthquakes and volcanic mutterings were given to the people they seemed totally unimpressed. The terrific eruption 150 years before, of which their grandparents had told them, had left a wonderfully fertile soil, and it was this very gift of the volcano given so long ago that held the poor people and kept them from seeking safety in flight until too late, until the mountain had exacted the death toll for what it had given.

Three days after the volcanic trouble we reached Manila from the fertile island of Mindoro and learned that homes and employment had been offered by the Sugar Plantation Company of Mindoro to two thousand of the Taal survivors. We had just accompanied to Mindoro and left there our first company of Christian colonists from Cebu Island.

By ELIZABETH W. JANSEN,

CEBU, P. I.

The hopelessness of the mountain Christians' poverty and their intense desire to give their children the advantages of a school education, had made them willing to leave their isolated farms and beautifully situated mountain homes, where they had found refuge during the revolutions and war of the Philippines. The last request pressed on us by these Christians as we left them in their new surroundings, was that we would at once send them Bibles and hymn-books in the dialects spoken by other settlers and workmen, to whom they were already speaking the Gospel at their first morning service. We did not then know that disaster and sorrow had reached so many of their countrymen on the island of Taal.

One outcome of the awful eruption for the survivors has been a loosening from some of the superstitions which bound them. In their fear and distress many ceased to call upon their favorite saints and cried to God instead in their trouble. This fact was pointed out by some of the Christian villagers near Taal, as showing how their neighbors in the threatened districts were brought to an end of all hope in any but God. Also, as the terror-stricken eyes of many gazed on the flames which issued from the crater, and which were accompanied by awful detonations, they were disillusioned in the belief that earthquakes were caused by a monster beneath the earth turning in his sleep, and that volcanic eruptions were brought about by suffering spirits.

The survivors who have gone to fertile Mindoro will find the Cebuan mountaineers living according to the Gospel of the pitying Saviour of men. For years they have forsaken evil customs and sin and found their one unfailing comfort in the Lord Jesus. They truly are well suited to speak hope from God to the refugee sufferers from Taal. Their one request for help from us is that the Bible may be given them for their new neighbors to lead them into the light of the salvation of Christ.

was compelled to send the troops, and on account of the immense length of the frontier and the fact that the Rio Grande can be crossed at almost any point it was necessary to draft a large number of soldiers so as to scatter them all along the line. Lastly, the mobilizing of our army and navy is for the purpose of protecting both our own and foreign interests in Mexico should the occasion arise. The United States in mines, manufactures and other enterprises has more than one billion and a half dollars in property at stake. England also has a vast sum, and France, Spain and other European countries have large interests. These must be protected and by the United States, too, for the Monroe Doctrine cannot be abrogated. However, there will be no excuse whatever for American intervention unless the Mexican Government proves negligent in protecting the persons and property of foreign residents. Such negligence would have to be strongly established, however, before the United States would take any steps to antagonize Mexico.

As it is, the two countries have nothing but friendly feelings toward each other, an attitude of mutual good will, both endeavoring to bring about a condition of affairs that will make for the common welfare. Mexico has offered no protest to the presence of our troops on her border or to the presence of our warships along her coast. There is no occasion for protest, for she thoroughly understands why they are there.

On his recent visit to El Paso Mr. Roosevelt expressed the sentiments of the United States towards the neighboring republic in presence of the mayor of the Mexican town of Juarez, when he said: "This country wishes to see Mexico in prosperity, the prosperity that means material well-being and industrial success, coupled with order, justice and independence."

Most emphatically it is the policy and the wisdom of the United States to be on friendly terms with every country in the Western Hemisphere.

In the meantime the insurgents are still carrying on their guerrilla warfare, especially in the northern States, that of Chihuahua being the most disaffected. There the revolutionary fires are blazing with the fiercest intensity. Business in the State is at a standstill and famine is not far distant if conditions do not improve soon. The railroad bridges for a distance of one hundred miles around the town of Chihuahua have been burned down. The American Smelting & Refining Works, which gave employment to over six hundred men in this neighborhood, have had to shut down for want of coke. In fact, all public works are paralyzed and many places are plunged in a chaos of terror and despair. Juarez, just on the border, over the Rio Grande from El Paso, has been another sanguinary theatre. There have been some fierce engagements here between the federals and the insurrectos. Here, too, business has been suspended, and no freight whatever has gone south from El Paso since the first week in February.

In the neighboring State of Sonora railroad ties have been torn up and the telegraph wires cut to prevent communication with the outside. Many of the towns are held in siege by the revolutionists and thousands of women and children are suffering from want of food. Hundreds have fled to the hills, preferring to take their chances in securing what nature provides in the way of wild fruits and tubers rather than remain in the towns to suffer the pangs of slow starvation. No preparation is being made to prepare the soil for the coming season's crops. The haciendas are lying waste and the cattle are roaming about at will, existing as they may. Large areas look as if some fire-breathing monster had stalked over them, withering and scorching all that came in the way. Desolate stretches, extending for miles, pain the eye where it once was delighted with the perspective of smiling landscapes bathed in sunshine and clothed in flowers. The good of the future will be heavily taxed in undoing the evil of the past.

With the policing of the border by our soldiers and the watching of the ports by our warships, both of which will undoubtedly rigidly enforce the neutrality laws, yet retaining an attitude of absolute impartiality towards the Mexican contesting forces, there is no question that the ammunition and supplies of the insurrectos will soon run short. In such event they may soon be compelled to lay down their arms and return to their allegiance.

It is to be hoped that such a happy consummation will not be long delayed and that the dove of peace will ere long spread its white wings over the troubled republic.

Where Extremes Meet

SOCIAL extremes meet in the Bowery Mission. On a recent evening a party of people prominent in the wealthy circles of the metropolis came straight from a dinner given in one of the finest homes in New York down to the Bowery Mission, where several of their number addressed the men from the platform. It is strange to note how quickly, under such conditions, a complete fraternal understanding can be established between those who are above the reach of want and those who do not know where the next meal may come from. Sympathy and a genuine desire to be helpful lies at the root of these visits of the people of wealth to the old Mission. It is the most typical of its kind on this continent—a lighthouse for the derelicts and human shipwrecks. Mr. Frederick Townsend Martin, the spokesman for the visitors, must have felt the enthusiasm of the true sociologist when he said from the platform that, as the result of that night's experience, he would devote the rest of his life to the interests of humanity. How much nobler and more in accordance with human reason and divine purpose would be a life so spent than one given over to the shallow pleasures and selfish excitements of the world! One struggling brother or sister helped; one blighted life rehabilitated; one heart strengthened and encouraged to new effort in the right direction would bring more abiding satisfaction to the agent of this transformation than any mere worldly triumph. There is a splendid field of activity for the well-disposed wealthy men and women of New York in connection with the Bowery Mission. The Lord's work, done for the sake of humanity, pays better dividends than any other business we know of.

Easter as a Human Experience

THE world's festival of gladness—the most joyous feast of the Christian era—is again at hand. Though we do not greet each other, as in the olden days, with the kiss of peace and the salutation "Christ is risen," receiving the answer "He is risen, indeed"; yet the gladness of the Easter celebration has not died out and never can die out. Our joy in our risen Saviour is eternal.

There may be, however, a great difference in our relation to Easter. We are accustomed to observe it only as a celebration. We stand outside, as it were, and look on. Reverent we may be. Glad and thankful we may be that Christ rose from the dead. But as we celebrate his birthday at Christmas time, and his passion on Good Friday, so we celebrate his resurrection on Easter Sunday as grateful and adoring spectators or worshipers. It was his birth; it was his passion; it was his resurrection; we will sing our anthems, bow our heads, and then go our ways until another year swings around and brings another celebration. And thus we fail to grasp the greatest blessing of all.

Easter must be more than a celebration. It must be an actual human experience. Our own resurrection need not wait until the "worms destroy this body." It can be now. The promise, "because I live, ye shall live also," is not one which must wait for its fulfilment until after we leave this world. Now is the time and right here is the place for us to live—for us to have our resurrection.

Have we already "passed from death unto life"? Do we comfort ourselves that we no longer are "dead in trespasses and sins"? Even so, there is always newer and higher life to be gained. As Paul said, "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect; but I follow after, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before."

Are we, indeed, fully alive? Does our belief in God, in the immortality of our own soul, in heaven and hell, in Christ's great sacrifice for us, really influence our conduct? Is our business planned and controlled in harmony with this belief? Is the part we take in God's work an eloquent testimony of our belief? Do we realize in our daily experience the truth we hear and accept from the pulpit on the Sabbath? Do we speak of Christ as "the Saviour" or as "my Saviour"? Can we ask ourselves such questions and then honestly say that we are in very truth alive in Christ?

If we find, after examination, that our life is not complete, that many of the things we believe with our minds are not realities in our lives, that, after the way of the world, we have been dying faster than we have been gaining life, then certainly we want to make this Easter a time for our own resurrection. Perhaps there was a time when, with the impulse of a fresh consecration and pledge to our Master, we felt all aglow with life. Then the cares and pleasures of the world crowded in upon us and death began. The earth needs a resurrection every spring. Even the Christian churches feel the need of annual revivals, which means, literally, renewals of life. Alas, these "revivals" too often are not renewals of life! If the individual members of these churches could first have a genuine resurrection, the new life would surely awaken the churches.

Christ is risen, indeed; and he came, as he said, that we might have life and that we might have it more abundantly. We are only at the gateway of life—"both young men and maidens; old men and children." It matters not how many or how few are the years we have lived here, nor how near we may be to the laying away of our bodies in the grave. The countless years stretch ahead, and they may be years of rich and joyous life. If some of them are to be spent here, we want them to be full of the "more abundant" life Christ came to give. If we must soon pass out from the home of time into that of eternity, we shall be glad indeed that we did not merely celebrate, but that we also shared with our Saviour in his resurrection.

A "Church of Dead Souls!"

A CORRESPONDENT writes to us asking the following question:

> In view of the fact that there are not a few churches that seem to make no spiritual progress from year to year, but remain apparently at a standstill—churches whose pastors address their congregations not as Christians, but as unconverted sinners, given over to worldliness and dead in trespasses and sin—would we not be justified in the conclusion that there is literally such a thing as a church of dead souls?

The suggestion is an intolerable one, if it is meant to convey that there can exist a church beyond redemption. We take it, however, that our correspondent has in view rather the conditions described in Eph. 2: 1 and Col. 2: 13. Some churches apparently make but little progress in the spiritual life, yet even to these there comes a time of awakening and of spiritual arousal and quickening, if the Gospel be faithfully preached.

It is told of a missionary who went to China in the early days of Gospel effort in that country that after some fifteen years of earnest work he became discouraged. He wrote home to his board and to friends who supported him that he had done his best and preached Christ to the heathen, but he had become convinced that his ministry was a failure as he knew of no conversions. The church at home, however, thought otherwise; it stood by him loyally, increased his allowance and wrote urging him to remain at his post and to continue his faithful labors, which would be supplemented by the prayers of God's people at home. Next year, the unexpected happened—the miracle came. Conversions by dozens and scores and hundreds astounded the missionary. His doubts fell away like an old garment; he saw clearly now that the seed he had planted and which had been so long in ripening had come to the harvest and that cumulative blessings had attended his long and faithful ministry. Would one have been justified in calling it a "dead" field during all these years of seed sowing?

So with the church at home. If we are to believe that no worthy effort for Christ and humanity is ever made in vain, we must also believe that the Gospel is never preached in vain. Some good seed always finds fruitful lodgment.

Let us take hope, then, in the fact that while there may be here and there a church of which i may be said as was written of the church at Sardis "Thou hast a name that thou livest and thou ar dead," even such a church is not beyond quickenin and reinvigoration. First, there must be a pasto who is an earnest, working Christian, and who wi not only spread the Gospel but will arouse his pec ple. God's Word never returns to him fruitless We know of such churches which, under the Spirit' power, have cast off the yoke of indifference an are living up to their privileges, active in home an foreign missions, careful of their poor, and earnes in every good work. The awakening has show them the folly and wickedness of living to the worl Their spiritual quickening has given them an ear nest of forgiveness and acceptance with God.

Law and Order on the Border

IT IS an old and very true proverb that "the wors events are those that never happened," and thi applies with considerable pertinence to the politica forecasters who have been predicting all sorts o trouble as the outcome of our military display alon the Mexican border. We have the published officia assurances of both our own government and tha of Mexico that there is a clear understanding be tween the two governments. Doubtless when th official veil of secrecy has been wholly removed, i will appear that the motive of the present extensiv naval and military movement had reference solely t the maintenance of neutrality and the protection o American and foreign subjects and interests prop erly entitled to it. We cannot permit our frontie to be made a recruiting ground for any insurrectio against a friendly State. Nor can we permit Mexi cans, whether federals or insurrectos, to arres Americans on our own territory, as has bee charged. But on the whole there is nothing in th situation to excite apprehension, and which canno be satisfactorily cleared up by official explanations

It has been said that our military display on th Mexican border does not harmonize with the atti tude our government has assumed on the genera subject of international peace and arbitration. Per haps the outcome may show that it is not so much a variance as might appear on the surface. There i a wise way of using strength, as well as a wicke way. It should not be forgotten that in the eyes o the world we are largely responsible for the preser vation of order on this continent. If the presen demonstration in the South proves to be in the in terest of humanity and justice and for the restora tion of order, it will receive the approval of peace lovers generally notwithstanding their aversion t the costly pomp and panoply of war which it ha involved.

Important Public Personages

THE prolonged convulsion in the Interior Department of the government has resulted in the resignation of Richard A. Ballinger and the appointment of Walter L. Fisher as the Secretary of that department. The new member of the Cabinet was born at Wheeling, W. Va., on the 4th day of July, 1862, and the patriotic impulses of the day on which he was born have been a characteristic of his life. He was graduated at Hanover, Ind., and entered upon the practice of law in Chicago, where he took a conspicuous and influential place in the professional and political world as an exponent of the highest individual character and public virtue. Secretary J. D. Norton leaves his position at the White House to take an important place in one of the great business institutions of the country, and President Taft has selected as his new private secretary Charles D. Hilles, who is now Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Hilles is a man of singular native ability and fine education, is tireless in his industry, incorruptible in his integrity, a devout Christian and a loyal supporter of the Church. Before his appointment as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury he was for a number of years at the head of the Juvenile Village at Chauncey, N. Y., one of New York's greatest charities. Mr. Hilles in this field manifested such a genius in the development and reformation of incorrigible and semi-criminal children as to give him a national reputation as a philanthropist. He has a fine personal presence, is courteous in his deportment, is tactful in his disposition, is a fine judge of men and affairs, and will make an ideal private secretary to the President. We would not be surprised if before he is through with his administration the President should ask him to take a step higher into the Cabinet.

Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, one time French Minister and Chargé d'Affaires at London, member of the French Senate from the Department of the Sarthe, member of the Hague Conference and recipient of the Nobel prize, recently arrived in America to make an extended tour in the interests of world peace. The baron comes here under the auspices of the American Association for International Peace and is said to divide with Count Apponyi, who recently visited this country, the honors of being the foremost European advocate of international good will. The baron says that in his addresses he will deal with many matters which should engage the attention of those who seek for world peace. He will explain the results already obtained at the two peace conferences at The Hague in which he took part, and about which his diplomatic career has particularly fitted him to speak. After dealing with the settlement of the Dogger Bank matter between England and Russia and the Franco-German difficulty at Casa Blanca, he will pass on the recent Anglo-American arbitration on the Newfoundland fisheries dispute. The early advice given in the selection of leaders seems to have been followed by President Taft.

Found Lost Brother

Charles T. Markham, president of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, left Chicago with his wife the other day on a tour of inspection of the road. The trip was to end at Hopkinsville, Ky., where he was to meet his brother, John T. Markham, an humble brick mason of that place. John T. Markham entered the Confederate army during the Civil War when President Markham was a baby, and for fifty years his whereabouts has been unknown to his brother, who had tried in vain to find him until recently, when the place of his residence was discovered, and President Markham has arranged to take him, now an old man of seventy-five years, in his private car from Hopkinsville to Chicago, where the humble bricklayer will be made comfortable the rest of his life. In these days of jealousies and contests between brothers over wills and questions of one kind or another it is beautiful to see this expression of brotherly love, which is so becoming and commendable. The proposed meeting reminds us of the joyful reunion of Joseph with his lost brother:

And he fell upon his brother Benjamin's neck, and wept; and Benjamin wept upon his neck. (Gen. 45:14.)

Prefers Cooking to Idleness

Mrs. Kate Starr, a cook in a home at Clifton Heights, Pa., received news the other day from relatives in Pittston that she had fallen heir to $25,000. When sixteen years of age she was married to Frank Lingsturm. On the death of Lingsturm, she married a Mr. Starr, who also died several years ago. She was compelled to make her own living and did so as a cook in a private family. The $25,000 which has just come to her from her first husband's estate would keep her very nicely the rest of her days without work, but she says that her financial good fortune will not interfere in any sense with her life work, and that she will continue her task as a servant in the house. We are inclined to think that Mrs. Starr is acting wisely in the premises. It is likely that there will be some man who will court her and pretend that it is her beauty or worth that attracts him, when in reality he will be after a portion of the $25,000, and there will be other temptations and opportunities for her to part with her money, but she will no doubt have the wisdom to put it in the savings bank, or some other secure investment, and go right on with her cooking, which is one of the highest callings in the world. So much of health and happiness in a home depends upon the culinary department, and yet there is scarcely any feature of American life that is so neglected and abused as that of the kitchen. First-class cooks are rare, and valuable as rare. Those who have ability and skill can command good places and wages and a self-respecting woman can have an honorable and happy mission. In our personal pastorate we knew two Welsh servants, cooks in the home of the late William H. Vanderbilt. They were very competent and upright, and saved their wages for years until each owned a valuable flat, accommodating a number of tenants. While owning their flats they continued their work at cooking, and passing to their reward they left their fortune to the Church of Jesus Christ, and one of the important Methodist churches of New York City has an endowment fund of good proportion, which was furnished by these able and consecrated cooks. The department of cooking is being wisely introduced into the select and public schools of this country, and the kitchen is likely to be lifted to a higher plane in American home life. Samuel's estimate of the position of the cook in the family is not very exalted (circumstances were responsible for that estimate), for in the warning he gave the people who asked for a king, he threatened among other calamities that the new king would send their women into the kitchen to become cooks.

And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers. (I. Sam. 8:13.)

A New Anaesthetic

Scarcely a week goes by that there is not some new discovery in medical science. By a telegram from Baltimore it is learned that lukewarm water, pure and simple, is now being used as an anæsthetic in operations for appendicitis at the Johns Hopkins' Hospital. A surgeon of national reputation connected with the institution says that all that is necessary is to inject lukewarm water under the skin in the vicinity of the part operated on. He claims that in most cases it serves a better purpose than any drug that could be used. While the operation is in progress under this new anæsthetic the patient is said to feel no pain, is conscious and watches with interest the man with the knife. This news seems almost too good to be true, and yet the seemingly impossible is being proven constantly to be possible. Water is one of the fountains of life, is one of nature's sweetest purifiers and grateful remedies. It is natural that in the Old Testament as well as the New it should be the symbol of moral purification. Christ uses it as the type of spiritual life and purity.

But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life. (John 4:14.)

Bible in Public Schools

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church in Brooklyn, at a union meeting of Jews, Universalists and Unitarians at the Hudson Theatre on a recent night, said some true and brave things upon irreligion in our public schools. Among other things he said: "There are ten million children and youths under sixteen years of age that have never crossed the threshold of any synagogue or church. But the republic means that every citizen must be a scholar toward the intellect, a patriot toward his country, and an obedient man toward his God. For years the Ten Commandments, the Bible and the fundamental principles of ethics have been kept out of the public schools. Superficial men have confused the teaching of morals that are universal and concern market place, street, home and forum, with the teaching of denominational tenets. But the Ten Commandments are not denominational any more than the multiplication table is denominational, or gravity or an eclipse of the sun. The simple fact is this: the Catholic priests, the Protestant teachers and the Hebrew rabbis have been jealous of one another. Rather than have the Ten Commandments taught in the public schools, and have one denomination gain at the expense of another, they have preferred to let 10,000,000 boys and girls grow up moral illiterates, while 16,000 murders take place every year. Now the Republic has come to a crisis." The surrender of the Bible in the public schools by Christian communities has been as bad in policy as it has been wicked in principle. Morals which have not their basis in religion are of little value and the religion which has not the Bible as its foundation is an unreliable one. It is impossible to raise a nation of good men and women from the boys and girls without instruction in the morals of Jesus Christ. Schools of to-day ought to echo the call of the Psalmist:

Come, ye children, hearken unto me: I will teach you the fear of the Lord. (Ps. 34:11.)

Cow with New Record

As championships pass from one to another in the contests between railway trains, ocean liners, athletes, etc., so the championship of the world's record for milk is taken away from Josephine and given to Sophie, the 19th, a beautiful Jersey cow at the Hood Farm, Lowell, Mass., which gave during the past year more than seven tons of milk and over a half ton of butter. She is known as "the queen of the dairy" and holds the record for milk and butter production of cows between four and five years of age. A test of the cow which shows such an enormous product has been authenticated by the Massachusetts Agricultural College under the rules of the American Jersey Cattle Club. The milk sold for ten cents a quart, and deducting the cost of feed there was shown a net profit on the cow of $562.22. A productive cow of the future was foretold in these words:

And it shall come to pass in that day, that a man shall nourish a young cow and two sheep; and it shall come to pass, for the abundance of milk that they shall give, he shall eat butter. (Isa. 7:21,22.)

$20,000 More for China's Famine

The Christian Herald Sends Another Remittance to Feed the Sufferers, while the "Buford" Is on the Way

THIS week, $20,000, being the largest single remittance yet sent to the China famine field from any source, has been cabled by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD through our State Department in Washington. This sum, which will be evenly divided between the two Relief Committees at Chin-kiang and Shanghai, will immediately be converted into foodstuffs and used to keep the people alive until the arrival of our relief ship, the Buford. It is due to the splendid generosity of our readers and their friends throughout the country that the great fight to save human life is being kept up so bravely. We do not doubt that their efforts will be blessed to the saving of many thousands of lives.

Rev. Maurice J. Walker, chairman of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Missionary Committee at Chin-kiang, writes of general famine conditions in his section. He says: "We were very glad to receive the $4,000 this week through the consul. It will enable us to send help to Hsu-chow-fu, also to Tsing-kiang-pu and to Rev. Mr. Bostick at Po-Chow. I am enclosing letters from Mr. Cameron of Chang-sha and from Mr. Bostick. The latter gives a very sad description of the terrible state of the country and the desperate condition of many who are on the verge of starvation."

In his letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mr. Bostick tells how, with a little money he had in reserve, he offered to employ a few of the neediest men at days' work at the rate of 3½ cents per day. The news spread and not hundreds but thousands applied even at that low figure. They knelt and begged and told the most heart-rending stories of suffering.

A distressing feature of the present famine, though not unforeseen, is the great increase in applications at the orphanages that are conducted by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Orphanage Committee. Missionary H. R. Caldwell writes from the M. E. Mission Orphanage at Ngu-Cheng, near Foochow, that he has had hundreds of applications for the admission of little children whose parents have either died or are starving to death. These little unfortunates are totally unprovided for and unless they are taken up by some kind missionary with a heart and a faith bigger than his pocket-book, they will be among the first to perish.

Missionary G. Trudinger, of Antung-ku, writes:

Many who went south are being forced back and now they simply do not know which way to turn. Doors, beds, even beams from their houses are being sold for food. Children are being offered for sale on the streets, but even though the price is lower than fifty cents (gold) they do not find ready purchasers. Many people are living on only one meal a day, and that scarcely worth the name of a meal. The thin, sunken faces one sees daily, tell their own tale. I sent our Bible woman the other day to take a little rice to one of our Christians, as she looked so weak, for she had a dreadful cough, and had been longing so for better food. The Bible woman saw the meal the family was preparing. It consisted chiefly of potato leaves. There are many in almost as pitiable a plight, but we dare not begin to help any, except where we can make an excuse of sickness, etc., or we would be simply besieged with applicants. We have seen families who for days have had no other food than refuse leaves from the market gardens. We are trying to help our Christians by having some of their children here for a time, but we are almost overwhelmed with the number of applications. The country is in a most lawless condition. Scarcely a day passes but one hears of robberies committed. Many have to sit up all night, lest their homes be attacked and the little they have taken from them.

Writing from Po Chow, a missionary of the Southern Baptist Convention compares the Bread Line of the Bowery with the present suffering in China, where millions are in the Bread Line. He says:

The Bread Line at the Bowery Mission presents faces the history of which would stir the inmost heart of mother, father, wife or sister; yet in all history, there has not been a more pitiable picture presented than that at the different distributing stations in this present famine. And think how scanty the allowance is—about fifteen pounds of the crudest rice being given to last each person not less than a half a month, and if funds are not soon forthcoming a longer time. Remember, too, that a very large percentage of the needy are not able to receive even this scanty help, because the means for help is not in the hands of the distributors. Though it rained all day during a few of the recent days of distribution, many people plodded over the muddy roads for five, six, seven, or eight miles for this rice. On the way homeward, some fainted and died from cold, hunger and exhaustion. Others were found beside their grain faint and unable to move, though still living. One poor fellow fell and died and his grain and clothing were stolen.

Many of us are praying that God will mysteriously and mightily work on many hearts and cause much giving for the needy. Those who are handling the means and pleading for more have their highest hopes set no higher than that one cent per day per person may be had for these hungry ones. This will be sufficient to sustain life till harvest. I think you will be well pleased with the way these funds are being distributed.

Some tell me heart-rending stories of need. One able-bodied woman told that of her six sons she had given away three, and wanted some one to take the others as she could not feed them. One told of his whole family passing over the days with only sixteen ounces of meal a day to make into soup. Some had eaten nothing in three days. One family, living just by us here, had only a half cent a day, and with that they bought wheat bran. This was all that a family of seven had to live on.

Full accounts of the farewell services at the sailing of the Buford show that notwithstanding inclement weather the occasion was a most impressive one. The crowds stood in the pouring rain while the speakers, bareheaded, but earnest and eloquent, delivered their addresses. In the course of his remarks, Rev. A. W. Leonard spoke of the event as characteristic of our Christian civilization. The loaded transport with its precious cargo proved that there are many good people in the world. Such merciful acts stand our great nation in good stead in the future. These gifts, besides relieving China's suffering, will give us China's good will. Closing, he said:

"To have the good will of China and her teeming millions will mean much for our great nation. May God bless those starving, dying people beyond the sea; may he bless the captain of this ship and all the crew, and may the winds and the waves be kind to them. May God bless all those who have originated this movement, and all whose gifts have made it possible, and may his choicest blessings abide with the two great nations who by this means are brought nearer to each other in mutual helpfulness."

President J. W. Maxwell of the Commercial Club of Seattle said that the liberality of Congress in granting the transport and the generous aid of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had been chiefly instrumental in making the relief ship movement a success. Help had also come from Seattle and from every quarter of our land. In the name of the Commercial Club he thanked all who had a share in the enterprise.

Cargo per S. S. "Buford," 21,000 sacks flour (1,029,000 pounds)	21,100.00
Total to date,	$77,100.00

The cargo of the Buford was thirteen hundred tons dead weight, comprising 2,374,560 pounds of flour, of which 1,029,000 were contributed by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. This is in addition to salted fish, whole wheat, condensed milk, hardtack, dried peas, rice, rolled oats, corned beef, dry goods, and potatoes. The entire cargo is valued at $50,000. The principal donors were: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York, $21,000 represented by 1,029,000 pounds of flour; Red Cross Society, $7,000; J. P. Morgan, Jr., New York, $1,000; Cyrus H. McCormick, Chicago, $1,000; unknown donor, Reading, Pa., $1,000. The remainder of the cargo was purchased with a fund collected by the Commercial Club in Seattle, and all parts of the country.

Hundreds of letters are received by every mail, containing contributions for the Famine Fund. E. J. S., Wellsville, Mo. ($5), writes, "with my prayers and good wishes that this little gift may be a blessing to those starving people, as a cup of water in his name may help." Mrs. W. H. B., Salem, Ia. ($6), writes: "Whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother in need and shutteth up his compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?' I hope every one who reads THE HERALD will send what they can." Her gift includes contributions from J. M., W. H. B. and herself. "I hope the blessing of God will go with this to the good of the poor famishing ones in China," writes M. L. P., Saumerain, Ill. ($6). Mrs. M. G., Conneaut Lake, Pa. ($1), says, "I sincerely hope the famine cloud will soon be lifted from those poor unfortunate people." "I wish this were $250," writes M. E. M., Philadelphia ($2.50). "How easily, with a little self-denial, they all could be fed." An old subscriber, Kinsman, Ill. ($6), says, "I hope the good work will continue which Dr. Klopsch so nobly began. I send in my widow's mite." P. D. B., New Jersey, writes ($2), "This was contributed by the Farmersville Public School. In geography class one day, while studying the famine region, I told them about the great suffering there. They were interested and sympathetic. I feel that God will surely bless this gift of his little ones." Superintendent F. P. Klock of the Sunday School at West St. Johnsville, N. Y., forwards $2, the gift the children. Mrs. S. A. E., Morristown, N. J., sends $1.25, which was gathered in small sums of pennies, nickels and dimes by the children of Fairview Place for the Chinese sufferers.

Mrs. L. A. B., West Sunbury, Pa., sends $1 with the prayer that "it may save some poor little child in China." Mrs. A. R. P., Port Townsend, Wash. ($2), writes: "May it help to save a human life from the horror of starving." "How good the dear Lord has been to me while others are suffering," writes Mrs. M. B., Peterborough City ($1). "I pray with all my heart that this small gift of mine may be honored to God's glory," is the fervent wish of J. M. R., Charlotte, N. C. ($1). Mrs. C. E. B., Hoosick, N. Y. ($1), writes: "I am glad of a share in the great work of life saving." Mrs. W. G. H., Angier, N. C. ($9), representing also W. H. G., writes: "Let us do what we can, that in eternity we may hear the words, 'I was hungered and you gave me meat.'"

J. A. McP., Leroy, N. Y. ($1): "I have been reading to my eight-year-old boy about the great famine in China. He wanted to save his pennies to send, so I am sending money order for $1 in his name." A. M. and R. A. S., Bethel, O., send $7.25, a contribution from the Salt Air Society which will go out with the next cable remittance through our State Department to China, where it will do the Lord's work among hungry little Chinese children.

Mrs. F. M., Reading, Pa., send $3.50, which represents contributions from Mr. and Mrs., $1; from a friend 50 cents; Mrs. J. N. $1, and Mrs. C. H. $1. It comes with the prayers that "the Lord will multiply this small offer." Miss F. M. T., Roselle, N. J., sends $2 from the Home Department of the First Baptist Church, Roselle, N. J. Mrs. R. J. W. sends $10 in behalf of the West Point Missionary Society, and adds, "I hope it may help a little in the good work you are doing."

Superintendent J. S. Meyers of the Verona, Wis., Baptist Sunday School, sends $5.50 as the school's contribution to the fund—a generous and timely gift. Mr. and Mrs. H. F. R., Scottdale, Pa., send $5 and write: "May it be used not only as a means of sustaining physical life, but also for the salvation of souls." The Dorcas Society of the Fourth Reformed Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., sends $5 to the fund. "May God in his mercy soon lift this haevy famine," is the prayer of A. D. Glen—Gar Ranch, New Castle, Col. ($5). Mrs. J. S. Q., Chappaqua, N. Y., writes: "I am enclosing a $2.50 gold-piece which I received as a Christmas gift. I am sure I can make no better use of it than to send it to the Chinese Famine Fund." Parkland Mission, Louisville, Ky., through Gustave Edeich, contributes $11.

There are encouraging indications that the plague has been localized and that it is no longer in danger of spreading southward over the famine provinces. This is due very largely to the skill and zeal of the foreign medical experts who have been co-operating with the Chinese, Japanese and Russian doctors and who are also enjoying the aid of the Chinese authorities. A double quarantine by China and Russia is to be enforced along the Siberian border. In northern Manchuria there is a very decided inprovement and the mortality has been greatly reduced. This is also the case at all the known centres of infection, except Mukden, where the epidemic still rages unchecked. In several places it has spread to the lower animals, including the donkeys in Fushan and dogs in Chang-chun. There have been a number of fatal cases of the plague at Amoy. The present boundaries of infection are from a point north of Harbin to a point south of Tientsin and from Port Arthur to Peking. The capital itself, however, is well protected by special precautions taken by the Chinese authorities. Notwithstanding the danger of spreading the infection, it is said that the trade in human hair for export to Western countries is being extensively carried on within the plague area.

Acknowledgments of contributions to the Famine Fund will appear in next week's issue.

Possibilities of a Backyard Garden

By IDA G. BENNETT

THE possibilities of a back-yard garden are seldom fully developed unless some definite plan is followed, a plan which aims to utilize every foot of space either for the economic production of vegetables, the growing of flowers or the artistic betterment of the home surroundings. The purpose to which the ground is devoted really does not so much matter, as that something definite is gained from it, other than a place to discard rubbish. If it can be transformed, by a moderate expenditure of time and money, into an attractive and profitable bit of ground, why, then, the family life will be just so far improved and beautified. Living will be on a higher plane and there will always be something to look forward to at the end of the business day; for I can assure you who have never tasted the delights of gardening, that there is nothing more absorbing and fascinating.

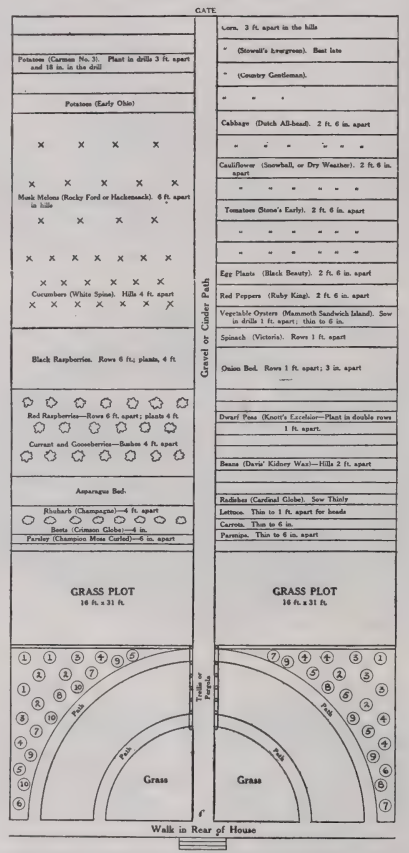
The ordinary town lot is full of possibilities, especially if it should happen to be one of the old-fashioned town lots four by twelve rods in area. It is really surprising the amount of stuff which may be grown on a small plot of ground if things are planted in straight, easily cultivated rows, allowing only room for the vegetables themselves and eliminating any allowance of room for weeds. If one starts out to grow both on the same bit of land it will be found that all out-of-doors is not large enough, but given close cultivation and no weeds, every inch may be made profitable, whether planted to flowers, vegetables or grass.

The accompanying plan supposes a four-by-twelve-rod lot with the house rather well towards the front, leaving a back yard in the neighborhood of four rods wide by eight rods deep. Allowance of three feet for walk at the rear of the house is made and from this a straight walk of cement, cinders or gravel leads to the alley in the rear. Directly in front of the rear of the house a half circle two rods in diameter is laid in sod. This is surrounded by a narrow walk or path about two feet in width. Surrounding this semi-circle is another some ten feet in width devoted to hardy perennials or, if the home is only a temporary one, to annuals. This also has an encircling path and the three-cornered plot formed by the "squaring of the circle" is devoted to shrubbery and affords opportunity for some very effective and satisfactory planting.

Adjoining this shrubbery is another section of sod the entire width of the yard and a rod or more in depth. This affords a point of vantage from which the shrubbery can be seen from the rear, and separates admirably the flower from the vegetable garden. These four sections of sod may be made lovely in early spring by planting crocus in informal disarray over the surface. The edges of the shrubbery and perennial beds should be edged with tulips, setting them six inches apart each way. These will be beautiful in May and June; and when through blooming and when the leaves are ripened they may be lifted and stored in paper bags until time for planting out again the following fall.

The little pergola, which is the width of the walk and about ten feet long, may be covered with rambler roses or with clematis as preferred. Although a definite suggestion of shrubs to plant is made it is by no means arbitrary, and one may consult his or her own preferences, only bearing in mind that tall-growing shrubs give best effect when planted in the rear and that the planting should slant from the highest point in the rear of the bed to a comparatively low growth at the ends and front; this slope, however, should be broken and natural.

All the shrubs suggested are so fine in their several varieties that sufficient variety will ensue. The Altheas, for instance: no one familiar with these beautiful shrubs would be content with but one color, but would wish both the white, the white with the crimson eye, and the red or the purple, or all. Of the lilacs, the new French sorts are so fine that one would wish one of each distinctive color, pure white, pink, blue and crimson. The Deutzias are some of our finest hardy shrubs and the varieties listed the most desirable. All are perfectly hardy, succeeding in almost any soil and situation. The Tamarix has different periods of bloom, commencing with T. Africana, which blooms in May, and following with T. Hispida Festivalis, which blooms in July and August, and T. Indica in late summer and fall.



The shrubbery and perennial border is an idea place for colonizing hardy lilies, and they should be planted wherever room can be found for them among the larger plants. Auratum, Candidum, Giganteum, Brownii, Longiflorum, and all that class should go into the shrubbery, while the lower-growing Japanese or Speciosum lilies may be used neare the front among the hardy perennials.

While it will be found that better effects are gained by planting a number of one sort of hardy perennials, rather than only one or two of a kind the arrangement suggested is by no means arbitrary and one may suit individual preferences in the matter. The Oriental poppies are magnificent, and once established, a very persistent perennial. German iris comes in such wonderful colors and combinations of colors that they are really indispensable and are of such easy culture and increase so rapidly that they are one of the most satisfactory plant grown. Of course to bring all these delightful things to perfection requires favorable conditions good soil, proper and sufficient fertilizers, sufficien moisture and cultivation and freedom from weeds The last condition is one easily obtained if one sim ply does not allow the weeds to start at all, which i not so difficult as it might at first appear. It simpl involves going over the ground frequently with th scuffle-hoe, in addition to such cultivation as may b needed to keep the ground loose.

Where one is living in a rented home and does no feel like planting perennials, the maturing of whic he may not enjoy, excellent effects may be secure by planting annuals, bedding plants and the like i place of shrubs. Cannas, caladiums and cosmos ar all too well and favorably known to need more tha a suggesting mention. Suggestions for annual must be merely tentative. Every one has favorite Many will prefer to make solid beds of one flower o to divide the circle up into two or three beds wit paths between, growing one sort in a bed. Exceller results may be achieved in this way, especially i care is taken to use harmonious colors in adjoinin beds. It must be remembered that two shades o red seldom harmonize, but that where one must hav them, white is a great peacemaker. Yellow an blue form a good combination and lavender will g well with scarlet and some other shades of red, bu yellow and red are not desirable, though either excellent with white. Then, the use of a contrastin color in a low, edging plant is always excellent an much increases the capacity of the bed. Pansie tufted violets, ageratums, dwarf nasturtiums, dwa phlox Drummondii, English daisies, lobelias, swe alyssium, are all desirable edging plants of th easiest culture and greatest freedom of bloom. is only necessary to add one more word in regard t the flower garden. Do not crowd the plants, bu give each individual sufficient room to grow ar develop fully. Pick the flowers of all plants whic bloom continuously, freely, not allowing seeds form, for in this way a far greater amount of bloo will be realized. When their season of bloom over, remove all seed pods that the beds may rema neat and attractive though no longer in flower.

It will be noticed that in planning the vegetab garden those plants which are most ornamental character are placed in front, near the bit of law parsley appearing on the left-hand side and pa snips, which are also quite ornamental, on the rig though carrots could be used here equally as we being of very fine feathery form and attractive col and very good to use in bouquets. Next the parsl beets may be planted, the deep red of the large, wa

THEIR EASTER OFFERING

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE Old Ladies' Home at Wilberforce Junction was the pride and boast of the entire county. For one thing, it was an innovation. The custom of the countryside in the good old Pennsylvania neighborhood had for years been that each family should take care, as long as they lived, of the old folk belonging to it. There had been no thought of sequestrating a superfluous grandmother or aged Aunt Maria in an institution of any kind. Each household kept its warm corner by the fire and its comfortable chamber upstairs or down, for the old lady who might be little querulous or combative in argument, who might be infirm, dim-sighted or deaf, but who had served her generation, worked hard and long in her day, and in her eventide was borne with, cared for and, as a matter of course, maintained by her nearest relatives.

Sometimes one or two old ladies who had survived their ability to care for themselves, and who belonged to no one in particular, but whom it would have been a crime to send to the poorhouse, continued to live in their own cottages as formerly, while their neighbors tactfully and unobtrusively contributed to their support. In such cases it was an easy matter for one farmer to drop a timely load of wood at such a door; for another to send a ham, and still another to run in from time to time with bread or cake.

Five years before the Easter of which I am writing, Miss Henrietta Elliot, a woman of wealth who had summered for some years near the Junction, had purchased ground, built a spacious mansion, thoroughly equipped it with a heating plant, a half dozen bath rooms, a modern kitchen, a cozy reception room, and a library, and had then donated it to Wilberforce County as a perpetual gift. Here were to be gathered the feminine derelicts from near and far. Each was to have her pretty room with its hardwood floor, its bright rug, its white iron bed and luxurious springs and mattress, its bureau and toilette table, and as Miss Henrietta had provided a liberal endowment, there were to be maids to wait on the old ladies, and they were not even to lift their hands, make their beds or do the least thing for themselves, unless they positively insisted on this disposition of their time. The house was three stories in height, had wide verandas and was surrounded by a beautiful garden. Any old lady who could not enjoy herself in such an environment must surely be a freak. Was not this home a great improvement upon the rough comfort of some of the adjoining farm houses, and would not women who had drudged their lives long find it a delightful change to be waited upon like queens?

The first difficulty was, greatly to its founder's surprise, to find occupants for the Elliot Old Ladies' Home. In her walks and drives Miss Henrietta had often been painfully impressed by the number of aged women whom she had seen here and there, many of them as she thought not half considered enough by those with whom they lived. Her pet scheme had long been to smooth the path of old age in some definite way for a definite number of women. Her Home was meant to accommodate forty at a time.

The first forty were not easily gathered. Children cried at the idea of giving up grandmothers, and while grandmothers did not invariably get on too smoothly with daughters and sons-in-law, they preferred a little interesting friction and the sort of thing to which they were accustomed, to the novelty of life in a strange place with companions who were new to them, and with three meals a day which they had no hand in preparing. Little by little, Miss Henrietta's Home was finally filled. The Board of Managers met regularly once a week. A matron was appointed, and the household began to move in the manner of households not bound together by ties of kinship or old friendliness. As I have said, Wilberforce Junction took pride in the building, the garden, the munificence of Miss Elliot, and in everything except the fact that the old ladies who were captured as inmates, coaxed, bullied, or even dumped there, as now and then happened when exceptionally selfish relatives wanted to get rid of them, were discontented, disliked luxury, chafed at the routine and, on the whole, were inappreciative and ungrateful.

Affairs had reached a crisis, as the fifth year brought Easter around in mid-April. Two or three old ladies had passed away. Others had replaced them and filled their vacant chairs. They had been, so to speak, imported, the full contingent of ancient women in the county having been mustered to dwell in the Old Ladies' Home. The management was at this time in despair. Nothing seemed to please or satisfy the inmates. Women who all their lives had been satisfied with a Saturday night tub of the laundry variety, found fault with the dainty porcelain tubs and elegant bathrooms of the Elliot Home. Women who had hitherto been peaceful of disposition quarreled with their next door neighbors and were not on speaking terms with the matron. Jolly and genial old ladies who had once been magazines of fun wore a down-trodden and injured air. When their relatives visited them they went away feeling positively wicked in permitting such boredom to continue. When Miss Henrietta visited the place, as she took pains to do frequently and unexpectedly, she left with chagrin and disappointment in her heart. She had an acute sense of failure. Nothing had turned out as she anticipated.

"The old ladies chafed at the routine"

At the Easter time of which I write, Miss Henrietta Elliot was spending a month in a cottage which had been her summer home for years, and with her as a guest was her niece, an enthusiastic young doctor. To Dr. Susan the aunt expressed her feeling that she had made a mistake.

"It is the more bitter," she said, "as I wanted to do so much for their comfort, and not one of the dear old things enjoys it, while every one of them hates me for being the author of their wretched luxury."

Dr. Susan laughed cheerily. "I am delighted," she said. "It is the very place for a convalescent home, and oh, aunty, I know so many, many tired city girls who come out of the hospital after an illness without a place where they ought to lay their heads, or a chance of getting well. What we must do is to turn the old ladies out, change the entire intention and bring some of my convalescents in. Aunt Henrietta, there are a great many more Old Ladies' Homes than are needed, and of Convalescent Homes for working girls there are sadly few. All that I can advise is that yours should right about face."

Miss Elliot looked doubtful. "I am afraid it can't be done," she said. The management would object."

"Leave it to me," said Dr. Susan.

In the fortnight that preceded Easter, the bright, chatty young doctor paid a great many visits to the old ladies. She dropped in upon them at luncheon. She called on them in their rooms, she talked of her work in the city, of young girls worn out with work in stifling factories, of girls slowly recovering after operations, of girls whose homes were in close rooms, shut in from air and light. Her enthusiasm was contagious. The old ladies were fired by it until their energy kindled into a flame. They entered with keen interest into a plan proposed by her.

On Easter Sunday morning all who wished attended church as usual, in the village. In the afternoon they were to have a musical service in the pleasant library of the Home. This was a function to which many good people came from the adjoining country. The players and singers came prepared to give the inmates of the Home a treat, and the Easter music rendered was noble and uplifting.

Then the minister made a short, appropriate address, a box was passed around for offerings. As it was deposited on the table before the minister, he rose and made a prayer that it might be blessed. As he sat down one of the inmates of the institution, a sweet-faced elderly woman dressed in black, with a white kerchief crossed over her bosom and a white cap on her head—a woman whose air was dignified and look decided—rose in her place and addressed the meeting.

"You all know me," she said. "I am Mrs. Hiram Jones. There is hardly any one here except the visitors from the city who has not seen my house where I used to live, the yellow house that stands back from the street on the corner of Locust Avenue and Willow. My grandson lives there now. I am seventy years old, but I am able to do a day's work yet. I came to this Home in one of my weak moments. I was overpersuaded, and I admired Miss Elliot because she had the enterprise to start it, and because she was so liberal with the money her father left her.

"Now, I knew her father and her grandfather, and I knew if I came it would give the right stamp to the home and bring other respectable women here; but, dear friends and sisters, and reverend sir, we old ladies have been used to doing what we chose, when we chose, to washing blankets and hanging them out, to stepping down cellar and up garret as we liked, to cooking dinners, darning stockings, and looking after babies. We are grateful to Miss Elliot, but we've all made up our minds to make this Home of hers and ours an Easter offering to the good Lord. It's going to be our Easter offering, and we'll let her join in. Dr. Susan's been telling us about the girls who need this place, as we don't. Here," waving her hand toward the garden, Mrs Jones went on, "are flowers and apple blossoms and soon there'll be strawberries and all sorts of garden truck. Here are the great mountains that the Lord made for sick folks to come to and get well. Here's everything on earth for convalescents and not a bit of expense, except to change the name over the front door, and we will pay for that, if Miss Elliot will let us. I move that before the benediction this congregation rise and sing, 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.'"

The occasion was unique, and the event awakened no little comment. The old ladies had made their Easter offering with a willing mind, and they went back to their normal and lifelong conditions with hearts overflowing with happiness. As for the Convalescent's Home, it met a felt want, has turned out a great success, and at Wilberforce Junction the people are as proud of it as they were during its former state.

Miss Henrietta is reconciled to the change, and Dr. Susan feels herself a benefactor.

Brilliant Close of the Women's Jubilee

Mrs. Champ Clark | Mrs. Henry W. Peabody | Mrs. T. C. Doremus | Miss Jennie V. Hughes | Mrs. Helen Barret Montgomery

WITH ever-increasing momentum the Woman's National Foreign Missionary Jubilee has swept across the continent and reaches its grand climax in New York City this week. Throughout the month of March, while Springfield, New Haven, Providence, Boston and Portland were in turn celebrating their local jubilees, New York had various kinds of preliminary meetings in anticipation of the great programme scheduled for the closing days of the month. Reports from other cities and towns stimulated the interest of the Eastern women. Speakers who were heard throughout the West and South paused "on the wing" as they took their flight into New England, to give the New York women added inspiration. Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, originator of the Jubilee Movement, said, "These other meetings have been a series of dress rehearsals preparing for an unprecedented gathering in New York City."

The "Pageant of Missions" is the most striking and picturesque feature of the New York celebration. Nearly a thousand young people represent, by tableaux vivants and pantomime, the progress of womanhood during the past century. Three hundred women enter in silence, dressed in the costumes of various countries, representing the women in heathen lands one hundred years ago, before the message of Faith had been brought them by the missionaries. To them comes a group of twenty-five angels, while an unseen choir sings sacred music. The women listen to the song and follow the angels. Other scenes show missionaries teaching a group of women at a well in a jungle in India; Bible women, nurses, and doctors outside a Chinese hospital; little children in gay kimonos in a Japanese kindergarten; a village street in Africa, with the natives being taught the use of sewing machines and instructed in other industrial occupations; a Turkish scene represents first the women of the harem, imprisoned body, mind and soul, then in contrast a graduating class of the American College for Girls in Constantinople receiving diplomas.

Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church is the centre for praise and prayer services and conferences for workers. Nine denominations unite in the Metropolitan Jubilee, besides the national and local boards of the Young Women's Christian Association and the Woman's Union Missionary Society. This last-named missionary society, organized in New York in 1860 by Mrs. T. C. Doremus, was the first incorporated organization for religious work by American women for the women and children of heathen lands. The chairman of the executive committee, Mrs. Samuel J. Broadwell, president of the Woman's Missionary Society, is a niece of Mrs. Doremus, of hallowed memory. A daughter of the founder is serving as a vice-chairman of the executive committee. Many women prominent in New York's social and philanthropic circles are acting on committees, among them Miss Helen Miller Gould and Mrs. Russell Sage. Fifty-nine drawing rooms are offered for afternoon meetings attended by invitation. Mrs. William Jay Schieffelin and Miss Grace Dodge preside at the missionary luncheon to be held in three banquet halls of the Hotel Astor and in the Waldorf-Astoria and the Plaza, 5,000 women participating. The speakers announced are Mrs. Henry W. Peabody of Boston, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery of Rochester, Miss Jennie V. Hughes of China, Dr. Mary Riggs Noble of India, Miss Hortense Long of Japan, Miss Elizabeth M. Strow of China, Dr. Mary E. Carleton of China, and the venerable Mrs. William Butler, the "Mother of Missions."

After all, it is not the $1,000,000 for foreign missions that forms the highest aim of the women who conceived and carried to completion this remarkable movement; their greatest desire has been that the spiritual motive should be uppermost, and their petition is "That the jubilee may open the vision of those unaware of, or indifferent to, the things of the kingdom." Special prayer services have been held for two months, that the Divine blessing may be poured out in abundant measure upon those attending the closing Jubilee celebration.

A Kindergarten for the Master

Miss Agnes Brill

THE pastor of the Union Church, Corona, New York City, has found valuable assistance in the services of a kindergarten teacher and class which adds materially to the church attendance and to the spirit of the morning hour of worship. He found in visiting his parishioners that many mothers were hampered in going to church because of the "blessed" baby.

Miss Agnes Brill, who is enthusiastic over the "Day Nursery Idea," suggested a "Kindergarten Church" and volunteered her services to care for all babies during the church hour, excepting those brought in long clothes, which must be accompanied by a maid.

Miss Brill has had three years of kindergarten experience, having studied in the Froebel Normal Institute, and believes in setting free and training the spiritual powers inherent in child life. She believes in religious gifts and occupations for the young lest these innate tendencies always lie dormant. She has a magnetic and sweet personality, which attracts the littlest, and she is happy helping the child to think of Jesus, to obey God, and to control itself. The babies from two to six years of age are left with Miss Brill in the library room by the mothers on arriving at church, and are delivered back at the same place at the conclusion of the morning service. The children are taken to the infant classroom with its low seats. In their room they repeat the "Shepherd Psalm," sing songs and answer to the roll call (if they know their names). They are told Bible stories. The stories of Noah, Joseph, Samuel, David and Jesus delight them over and over again. "Dropping Pennies" is sung while they give an offering for Jesus, for they insist in that part of the church service. They are taught to pray, and some hear prayer for the first time. A sweet "Good-by Song" is sung when they part. Miss Brill now has two assistants, Miss Grace Shell and Miss Helen Peck, the pastor's daughter. W. J. P.

OUR RISEN LORD

RING the bells, this Easter morning,
RING them! ring them loud and clear!
O'er the wide world let their echo
Carry gladness, hope and cheer.
Christ, the risen Christ above,
Reigns supreme, the God of Love.

Death, the grave and all their powers
Yield to Him, our risen Lord,
As did winds and waves and demons
To His all prevailing word!
Great and marvelous His ways,
Give Him glory! sing His praise.

Once the lowly Son of Mary,
For our sins He gave His life!
Now the Son of God, exalted
Far above all earthly strife.
Where the thorns once pierced His brow,
Rests a crown of glory now.

Christ, our risen Lord, we honor,
Love Him, laud Him evermore!
He who took our curse upon Him,
We will worship and adore.
Jesus triumphed o'er the grave!
Thus He proved His power to save.

Passaic, N. J. JOHN M. MORSE.

RUSSIA AND CHINA AT ODDS

—THE RUSSIAN foreign office at St. Petersburg recently instructed M. Korostovetz, its minister at Peking, to make verbal representations to the Chinese Government that would leave no doubt as to Russia's firm attitude concerning Russian consular and commercial privileges in Ili and Mongolia, as provided in the Russo-Chinese treaty of 1881. This is a sequel to the recent announcement that the foreign office was not satisfied with China's second reply to the Russian demand. Only the immediate compliance by China of her treaty obligations toward Russia can interrupt the advance of the army which is to occupy Kulja. Two brigades of sharpshooters, four companies of Cossacks, two batteries of field guns, and eight batteries of machine guns were dispatched from Margelan, Turkestan, shortly after the receipt of China's second reply. The instructions which the foreign office telegraphed to-day to M. Korostovetz contain an ultimatum embodying two points—first, the reopening of Russian consulates at the points specified in the treaty of 1881, and, second, the establishment of free trade in certain products, including tea.

The Loftiest Pulpit in the World

Rev. Gerhard J. Schilling

THE Rev. Gerhard J. Schilling, District Missionary Superintendent of the Methodist Church of Bolivia, and at the same time pastor of the church at La Paz, has the distinction, it is believed, of preaching the Gospel from the highest pulpit in South America, if not in the world. His church is located more than twelve thousand feet above sea level. La Paz is romantically situated near some of the highest peaks of the continent, in a charming valley through which flows the Chuquiapu River, which at La Paz is spanned by twenty bridges. The city has paved streets, handsome promenades, drives and parks and a fine climate.

Mr. Schilling is well adapted to his lofty parish, having a fine mental and scholastic training, a good constitution, a strong heart and superb digestion, and withal a contagious faith in the final victory of evangelical Christianity over all other faiths. He was born in Germany, converted in India, educated in theology at Drew, and has toiled as a missionary in Burma, Chile and Argentina under the Methodist Board. He is married and has the valiant assistance of his wife in the labors of this lofty parish, though deprived of the companionship of his children, as the lack of educational facilities has made it necessary for them to be sent to the United States. During each week Pastor Schilling preaches from the one pulpit to four congregations in English, German, Spanish and the native Indian language. Recently he has used the stereopticon in evening addresses on the "Birth and Youth of Jesus," "The Miracles of the Lord," "The Parables of the Lord," and "The Lord's Passion and Resurrection." The President of Bolivia has recently commended his work, referring especially to his influence over the young men of the country. W. J. P.

SOME PRIZE WINNING VERSES AND PICTURES

THE ATTIC

You ought to come to our house,
And see the sights I see;
There's everything that's old and quaint
From off our family tree.

There's heaps and heaps of dusty things
I see no use in keeping;
There stored up in our attic room,
Right next where I am sleeping.

"My Chum"
Drawn by Alice Lundt, age 17

There's spinning-wheels, and ancient reels,
And whatnots, a cornshuck broom,
And cotton-cards, candlesticks and moulds,
And a carpet loom.

There's hackles, and there's winding blades,
All covered o'er with dust,
A flint-lock, sword and pistol,
All red and rough with rust.

There's a trundlebed, and a cradle
Made of a sugar trough;
But somehow the smell of lavender
Always makes me cough.

I don't frequent the attic
Except when mother goes
To peep out the queer old window
And air the old-time clothes.

But what's an attic good for,
If not to hide away
The treasures of the past
To call back another day?

CLEMENT M. MICHAEL, age 14.

GOOD-NIGHT

I don't like bed time at all;
The clock looks so big and tall;
It seems to be saying, "Tit-tat, Tit-tat!
You're a 'fraidy cat."

Water Color
Lovinia Lettice, age 14

I shiver with fright from head to toe
When the light is blowing and burning low,
And I hear that sound all the time: "Tit-tat,
Tit-tat! you're a 'fraidy cat."

I think and think of burglars bad
Till I can't sleep, and I call dear dad,
And the clock keeps saying, "Tit-tat, Tit-tat!"
And I know I'm a 'fraidy cat.

JARVIN E. RANSDELL, age 12.

THE ATTIC

It was in last vacation,
Upon a sunny day,
We went to Aunt Jane's farm
To play among the hay.

The stacks were just the right size,
To climb and then slide down,
And we were having the bestest time
When the sky began to frown.

"The Pet of the Family"
Lucile Woods, age 12

And presently the rain drops
Came pattering quickly o'er us;
We made a bee-line for the house
And all cried out in chorus:

"Now, what are we to do to-day,
If we can't play out-doors?"
Aunt Jane says, "You just hurry round
And help me with these chores;

"Then we'll all go to the attic
And see what we can see."
So we all got in and helped her
And we were up there presently.

She soon unlocked old trunks for us,
And such a bright display!
We played that we were kings and queens
And lords and ladies gay,

With flowers and ruffs and many a frill,
And gowns so richly trained,
Aunt showed us through the minuet,
And we quite forgot it rained.

The spinning-wheel, a box of books,
An old sword and a gun,
A coat of mail we tried to wear,
Oh, that was lots of fun!

And when at last we came down stairs,
We all told dear Aunt Jane
That next time we came to visit her
We hoped that it might rain.

JOHN D. HAMILTON, age 13.

THE ATTIC

I want to go to Grandma's
Most every rainy day;
For I like to play in the attic
Where things are stored away.

Grandma had broken china
For her dollie's tea;
See my handsome tea set
Which my papa gave to me.

There is Grandma's rag doll, Dinah,
With her charcoal eyes and nose;
See my French doll, Arabella,
With so many pretty clothes.

IDA E. WALLACE, age 11.

ROSE MARIE

One time I had a pretty doll,
Her name was Rose Marie.
I loved her! How I loved her!
And she thought the world of me.

She had so many lovely ways,
And always was polite;
I spent all day just teaching her
To act exactly right.

When company came, she always did
As nice as nice could be.
Oh, I have another dolly now,
But she's not so dear to me.

CLARICE E. GREEN, age 9.

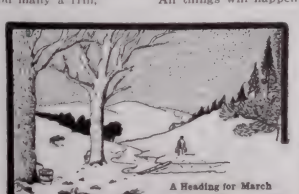
DOLL'S LULLABY

Hush-a-by, baby,
The night draweth nigh;
The stars are beginning
To peep from the sky.
The brook, as it passes
So swiftly along,
Is rippling a sweet
Little lullaby song.

The Man in the Moon,
With his wide open eye,
Is guarding the earth
From his throne in the sky;
And there, looking down
On the world, will he stay
Till the big yellow Sun
Comes and drives him away.

The dear mother bird,
In a round little nest,
Is cuddling her little ones
Under her breast.
And I'm sure every baby,
At this time of day,
Should softly to Dreamland
Be sailing away.

EMILY S. STAFFORD, age 12.



THE KITCHEN CLOCK

You mustn't climb up there, pussy;
It's not the thing to do;
For clocks are made to tell the time,
And not as toys for you.
You mustn't touch the hands, pussy,
And move them to and fro;
For that will surely break the clock,
And then it will not go.
You mustn't touch the face, pussy;
The world cannot go right;
We shall be sleeping all the day,
And romping all the night.
For clocks make time go right, pussy,
And if no good clock goes,
All things will happen up side down
As everybody knows.

Forest Wallace, 15; Judson Brewster Stevens, 7; Dorothy Penniman, 11; Helen A. Monsell, 15; Clara E. Livingston, 10; Bruce C. Hale, 6; Jessie McKennan, 10; Mary Stanger, 12; Ruth C. Linton, 11.

"The warm, or hot, bath is the only cleansing one; and, for my part, I do not see how anybody can be physically clean who does not take at least one such bath, with soap, every day."

Frederic M. Lawrence, M. D., in Hampton's Magazine.

Please note the words "with soap."

Please note, too, that they are italicized in Dr. Lawrence's article.

Take a cold bath, before breakfast, by all means—if you are in good physical condition. But do not lose sight of the fact that it is not possible for anyone to be physically clean who does not take at least one warm bath, with soap, every day.

Use Ivory Soap. It floats; and it is pure. These are the qualities that make Ivory Soap unequalled for use in the bath. Purity, in a bath soap, is of paramount importance. And a bath soap that floats is immeasurably more convenient than one which, when needed, is at the bottom of the bath-tub.

Ivory Soap . . . . It Floats

To Boys and Girls Everywhere

MY DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: I hope you are as proud of this page of your work as I am. I think it is, by all odds, the best one we have had, and our April page of your own work will be better still; for, you see, the standard is rising from month to month.

Remember, your inventions, drawings, stories, verses, even if they are not published, are carefully examined and compared with work of the same kind done by boys and girls of your own age. Every boy and girl in the big CHRISTIAN HERALD Family who has not already begun should certainly start right in and work along with the other boys and girls. There is no place in any other magazine in the world where young people are given so great an opportunity to see their work in print where other boys and girls all over the world may see it too, as in the Cozy Corner of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Good-Night Verse

For, lo, the winter is past,
The rain is over and gone;
The flowers appear on the earth;
The time of the singing of birds has come.

Lovingly and faithfully,
The Aunt in the Cozy Corner.

Questions and Answers

R. M. C., Asbury Park, N. J. A society of which I am a member is interested in the operation of the Government Immigration Department at Ellis Island. We have been led to believe that the incoming foreigners are inhumanly treated at the railway terminals and docks when they come from Ellis Island to entrain for their destinations. Are immigrants landed at night and compelled to wait for hours on unsheltered piers?

As far as we can learn you have been misinformed. The government buildings on Ellis Island are quite adequate and recent inspections have proved the food to be sufficient and wholesome. The conditions at the railway terminals are sometimes rather bad, as the accommodations are taxed to the limit by special rushes of incomers. This, however, is unusual. The various national societies and the railway employees do their best to help the foreigners to get their proper trains, etc. Parties are landed in the evening only when it is necessary to make connections with evening or night trains.

M. V. B. P., Salem, Mass. Please explain parenthesis in Neh. 2: 6.

As the Persian monarchs did not permit their wives to be present at their state festivals this must have been a private occasion. It was probably due to the fact that it was an extraordinary circumstance that it is recorded at all. The queen referred to was probably Esther, whose presence would tend to embolden Nehemiah in making his request.

R. C., Virginia. Please explain the difference in time between Philadelphia and Cincinnati.

A standard time was established by mutual agreement in 1883. According to this system America is divided into five sections, each of fifteen degrees of longitude. The first (Atlantic) includes the Maritime Provinces of Canada. The second includes all the territory between the Atlantic Coast and an irregular line drawn from Detroit to Charleston, S. C. The third (Central) section includes all the territory between the last-named line and one drawn irregularly between Bismarck, N. D., and the mouth of the Rio Grande. The fourth (Mountain) section includes the territory between the last-named line and one which follows fairly closely the western borders of Idaho, Utah and Arizona. The last (Pacific) section is from this line to the Pacific Coast. Thus when it is 12 o'clock noon in Philadelphia it is 11 A.M. in Cincinnati.

Subscriber, Totoket, Conn. I would like to ask how communication may be had with those who have passed on to the spirit land.

There is no way of communication, though some claim preposterous things in this connection. However, many believe that those who have passed on know, through the Divine intelligence, what is transpiring here on earth.

J. B., Manfred, N. D. Can you tell me how many tons of hay can be put into a barn 20 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 15 feet high?

It all depends on the way you pack the hay. A ton of pressed hay is supposed to take up 500 cubic feet. The cubical content of your barn is 20 x 10 x 15; that is, 3,000 cubic feet. Five hundred is contained in this six times, therefore your barn will hold approximately six tons of pressed hay.

R. B. C., Harrisburg, N. C. Please explain vivisection. Does it only mean the cutting up of dead animals?

It has nothing to do with "the cutting up of dead animals." Vivisection is a term applied to experiments on animals for the purpose of physiological and pathological investigation. The term, although strictly applicable only to cutting operations, is extended so as to embrace all scientific operations upon living animals, such as the administration of poisons and the inoculation of diseases. The advocates of vivisection claim that by studying the functions of the organisms of animals knowledge can be obtained of the workings of corresponding organs in human beings. Anti-vivisectionists, however, say that such is not the case, and maintain that as man is radically different in his structural make-up and habits of life, no good results can be obtained from experimenting on animals.

P. J. C., Hampton, Ia. In what verse of the Bible are all the letters of the alphabet?

Ezra. 7: 21.

E. J. C., Portland, Ark. How and when were the ancient cities of Babylon and Nineveh destroyed?

Babylon was taken after a two years' siege by Cyrus, king of the Medes and Persians, in 583 B.C. Cyrus turned the water from the canals that ran through the city into a dried-up lake, and finding the water gates open he entered the city and took it as described in the Book of Daniel. The fall of Nineveh is shrouded in mystery. The exact date is not known. It seems that Cyaxares, the Median king, and Nabopolassar of Babylon besieged the city for a long time, but with little success. Finally the river Tigris rose above all recorded levels and destroyed sections of the city walls. The allies thus entered the city. Saracus, the king, shut himself in his palace, and set fire to it, and so died.

B. N., Phillipsburg, N. J. What is the largest church edifice in the world? Give its dimensions, and tell how many people it will accommodate.

The largest and grandest temple of worship in the world is St. Peter's in Rome. The total length of the interior is 612½ feet; transept, 446½ feet; height of nave, 152½ feet; diameter of cupola, 193 feet; height of dome from pavement to top of cross, 448 feet. The great bell alone without hammer or clapper weighs 18,600 pounds. The foundation of this mighty pile was laid in 1450, but it was not finished until 1880. In fact it is not finished yet, as it is being constantly beautified and new additions added. The cost of construction probably exceeded one hundred millions of dollars. It will accommodate 55,000 people.

H. R. S., Dubuque, Ia. How often did Christ speak on the cross and what did he say?

Seven times. 1. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." 2. "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise" (to the penitent thief). 3. "Woman, behold thy son" (to the Virgin Mother, referring to the beloved disciple St. John). 4. "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" 5. "I thirst." 6. "It is finished." 7. "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

Reader, W. Va. What would you give as the correct definition of the word "pleasure"?

The word has several meanings: 1. An agreeable sensation, resulting from or accompanying normal or healthful action of the physical or mental powers or organism. 2. Any pleasing or agreeable emotion. 3. Any occurrence or amusement in which the mind finds satisfaction or diversion. A strict demarkation should be made between pleasure which ennobles and uplifts and that which brings only degradation and regret.

Mrs. D. A. P., Columbia, S. C. 1. Why are the Sunday School Lessons published two weeks before time? 2. I have heard that there were two accounts of the creation in Genesis. 3. In John 18: 15 do you think that other disciple was John or Judas?

1. They are published for the convenience of teachers and students generally, so that they may study them fully in advance and thus be well prepared. 2. In the first chapter of Genesis there is a general statement of the creation. The second chapter is not a new version or different account, but merely a supplementary account, and the two together form the complete whole. 3. The other disciple is believed to have been John himself, the writer of the Gospel. He followed Jesus closely and lovingly and knowing Caiaphas, the high-priest, he was permitted to enter into the court, and even to bring in Peter also, while the other disciples had sought safety in flight.

B. F., Decatur, Ia. I see by the newspapers that a member of the House of Representatives, in praising Peary's work in the Arctic, took occasion to refer to the famous passage, "Peace on earth and good will toward men," as having been spoken from Mount Sinai. Was he misreported?

No; he was correctly reported, we understand, and how any Congressman could have made so gross a blunder is incomprehensible. Another member (Mr. Bennett of New York), speaking in the name of the Biblical scholars of the House, directed attention to Exodus, nineteenth and twentieth chapters, and the second chapter of Luke, where all might learn what was spoken at Sinai and what the angels sang at the birth of the world's Redeemer.

G. R. G., Vancouver, B. C. Kindly give a definition of "Inspired." Did they write from God's dictation? See II. Tim. 3: 16.

In the passage in question, the statement is clear that the Scripture is given by divine inspiration—that the perceptions and work of the writers were divinely influenced. The Holy Spirit filled the hearts of those men with a message and led them to write that message for the world. This is what inspiration means. The inspired writers were holy men, prophets, evangelists and spiritual leaders who lived close to God and were in constant communication with him through prayer and meditation, and who, by their hearts and lives thus consecrated, were endowed with the power to convey to men his Word, sometimes in one form, sometimes in another. They were the chosen channels of divine communication, interpreting God's purposes in authoritative language, which could be understood by those for whom it was intended.

D. M., Clayton, N. M. I have read of the Chinese Bible. What kind of book is this Bible?

The Chinese Bible is a work which was compiled and partly composed by Confucius. It consists of five parts: (1) The Yih-king, a treatise on cosmogony; (2) The Shu-king, comprising the acts and maxims of Yaou, Shun, and other ancient kings held in religious veneration; (3) The Shi-king, which contains 311 sacred poems; (4) The Ee-king, or book of rites, containing maxims and directions for everyday life and all conditions of men; (5) The Chun-tsien, which is a history of Confucius' own times.

F. W. R., West Brookfield, Mass. Will you kindly inform me what the word "Sorosis" means? I have wondered why that name was chosen for a woman's club.

The word Sorosis means a compound fruit, resulting from the consolidation of a number of flowers, receptacles, bracts, etc., as the pineapple. The word seems to have been chosen arbitrarily when search was being made for a name that would not stand in the way of any object the club might later desire.

M. A. W. D., Nunda, N. Y. What is the best book on ancient tablets, inscriptions, etc., that throw light on the Bible?

You will find Modern Research as Illustrating the Bible, by Professor Driver ($1.50; Oxford Press), or Light From the East; or the Witness of the Monuments, by C. J. Ball ($6; Nelson & Co.), suitable for your purpose.

J. J. B., St. Paul, Minn. About what time were the Gospels written? How is it possible to fix the date?

It is a matter concerning which there are many differences of opinion among commentators. The growing impression is that they were written not later than A.D. 60 and possibly earlier. This is the latest conclusion arrived at by Professor Harnack, the distinguished German theological scholar. Others hold that all four Gospels were composed in the latter half of the first century. The date cannot be fixed absolutely.

Mrs. M. N., New York. Who was the man who, when pressed by his enemies, hid in a cave, and when his foes came to hunt for him, they found the mouth of the cave closed by a spider's web? Was it a historical occurrence, or did it happen in Bible times?

The story is an untraceable legend. It is told of Mohammed when his life was sought by the Koreishites. It is also told of Robert Bruce, King of Scotland, but is repudiated by his biographers. No such story in the Bible.

G. B., Buffalo, N. Y. Was it customary for Jesus' disciples to wear swords? See John 18: 10.

There is nothing in the Gospels to warrant the assumption. Jesus had repeatedly told them that his kingdom was not a worldly but a spiritual one, and he had discouraged violence. Peter, apprehending personal danger to the Master, had procured a sword, which he no doubt kept concealed until the moment of the arrest in the garden, when he used it. The rebuke he received is sufficient evidence that he alone of all the disciple band resorted to the use of a weapon. The whole incident accords with Peter's character as a man of strong, resolute will and impulsiveness, even to the point of disobedience.

Mrs. M. E. C., Washington, D. C. What is meant to be conveyed in Isa. 63: 16? Of whom was Abraham ignorant and whom would Israel not acknowledge?

The Jews had wrongly rested on the mere fact of their descent from Abraham and Jacob; now, they renounce this and trust to God alone. They appeal to him that even though the patriarchs—whose covenant with God they had forgotten and from whose simple faith they had strayed—should disown them in turn, he should not (see Ps. 49: 15 and 27: 10). They no longer claim the privileges arising from their patriarchal relationship, and regard themselves as unworthy of such an honor. The whole chapter is part of a penitential confession and prayer for restoration to Divine favor.

R. G., Bartlett, Texas. It is said that all the books of the New Testament are sacred, except four. Which four are they? Why are they not sacred?

In compiling what is known as the canon of Scripture, the authoritative councils of the church rejected many books which are now known as apocrypha, or of doubtful authority. Those that remain and which we now have, were accepted as authoritative and inspired. This includes not only the Gospels, but the Acts, which is a history of the doings of the apostles, the Epistles and Revelation. No one has authority to state that any one of these books are not of the character indicated.

M. J. H., Portland, Ark. Please explain Hebrews 10: 26.

It refers to deliberate and presumptuous sin committed after the person has been spiritually enlightened and with a full knowledge of its wickedness. It is sinning against the Spirit and against Christ's redemption. Only one who has been high can fall so low, and the offense—being that of a wilful backslider who has already known the preciousness of God's grace and love—is far more heinous than that of one who has never had such an experience and who sins through ignorance.

Miscellaneous

Superintendent S. G. Berry, County Board of Health, Tyndall, S. D., writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, taking issue with the statement of Dr. Snow recently printed in these columns that anti-toxin does not cure diphtheria. He declares anti-toxin serum to be "the greatest remedy the medical profession has worked out in many years," and adds that practically the whole profession recognizes this.

T. R. J., Pen Argyle, Pa. 1. The books attributed to Moses have undergone revision at various times, as have all the other books of the Bible. In such revisions, there have doubtless been changes, after due comparison with the oldest records accessible. 2. The words printed in italics in the Bible mean that they are not in the original Greek or Hebrew, but are put in the English text by the revisers and translators, to complete the obvious sense and thus render the full meaning.

E. L. S., Wye Mills, Md. The origin of the Devil and his fall from his once high estate, are matters concerning which whole volumes have been written, but they are largely legendary and speculative. We have no facts beyond what is contained in Scripture itself. That a Power of evil does exist in the world, making war on the souls of men, is beyond denial. It may be a part of the divine plan of developing the human race. There are many difficult things which cannot be fully explained in this life, and which we must await God's good time to make clear.

M. S. B., Taylor, S. C. How time was measured among the antediluvians is not known. It may have been by seasons, instead of by years as now. We cannot find any basis of fact for reckoning the ages of those who lived before the flood. That their ages were much greater than those who came afterwards is made evident from Gen. 6: 3, 5, 16 and other passages. Commentators have concluded that one of the reasons that contributed to men's exceeding wickedness before the Flood was their long lives, in which they had time and opportunity to do much evil.

Opportunities In Advertisements

DID it ever occur to you how many of the conveniences of everyday life we would have to do without if it were not for advertising?

Without advertising the telephone system, as it is to-day, could never have been perfected. The telegraph, the cable, electricity in all its forms, automobiles, gas ranges, and a hundred household conveniences are only made possible to the public by the advertising that sells the volume, and so reduces the cost to the individual.

In view of what these things mean in the betterment of your daily life, don't you think that you, as a citizen, owe a little consideration to the advertising question? When you have money to spend, it is only fair that, in so far as possible, you should patronize those merchants and manufacturers who study, invent and promote, by advertising, so many additions to your comfort.

It will interest you to look through the advertising columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD; in fact, it is probable that you will be benefited by finding an opportunity to save money on something you want to purchase.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement. This guarantee does not apply to investment advertisements.

SEEING WITH GOD*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

The Searchlight

BEN-HADAD, king of Syria, again and again had found that he could not gain a victory over the host of Israel, for when he thought to come upon them, they had slipped through his meshes and were gone. Ben-hadad called together his military board and said to them, "There must be a spy among us." In this act the king reminds us of some boys who were about to steal apples. They looked to the right and to the left, then in front and behind, to see if they could discover any one watching them. One boy, better than the others, said: "There is one way you haven't looked," and he pointed up toward God. One of Ben-hadad's officers was looking in the right direction when he suggested that the prophet Elisha was the one who gave information to the king of Israel concerning the movements of King Ben-hadad. "He telleth the king of Israel the words thou speakest in thy bed-chamber," said the officer. That was a figure of speech, because Elisha was not a visitor at the Syrian court. The officer who made the statement knew that the source of Elisha's information was the God of Israel. It might be said of Elisha, as it was of Moses: "He endured as seeing him who is invisible."

Elisha moved and had his being in the light of God. Take the searchlight as an illustration. How clearly and perfectly it reveals all there is to be seen, both good and evil. It was our privilege to sail among the sea islands adjacent to Stockholm. The occasion was an excursion given to the delegates of the Peace Congress. Beautiful vines and trees and castles were revealed to us, and groups of people arranged in charming tableaux. How much we would have missed without the searchlight! On the other hand, it will be remembered how, when a massacre of Christians was threatened at Beirut, only a few years ago, the American admiral gave the order, "Turn on the light," and the would-be assassins fled before its searching, and bloodshed was prevented. The searchlight of God's truth in a human soul gives vision for all goodness and all sinfulness.

Gift of Vision

"Beware that thou pass not such a place, for the Syrians are coming down," was the message which was often sent to the king of Israel. And on the other hand, when Elisha himself was surrounded by the Syrian army at Dothan, and Ben-hadad was sure of his capture, in the light of God Elisha saw that the host of heaven had been sent for his defense and deliverance—a host which far outnumbered the Syrians. The young man who was his servant was not a man of vision, and so he was greatly alarmed and exclaimed: "Alas, my master! how shall we do?" Elisha did not pray to God to turn on the light, but his prayer was that he should give vision to the young man: "I pray thee, open his eyes that he may see." And Jehovah opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw, and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha. King David had vision when he wrote, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them" (Ps. 34: 7). Let us note that neither the name of Elisha nor David appears in this promise, nor that of any other person, and so it is for all humankind. Let us connect this with another promise of similar import: "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." These words are our Golden Text. This promise is given to those who have vision: those that "dwell in the secret place of the Most High" (Ps. 91: 1).

In answer to Elijah's prayer the Lord opened the eyes of his servant, the eyes of his soul, for he was not blind in his physical eyes. God pity the young men who see things only with their physical eyes! How distorted are their ideas of life! How narrow their judgment! How few their pleasures!

A Good Movement

Let us rejoice in the "Men and Religion Forward Movement," which will be inaugurated in September, 1911, for the purpose of bringing the claims of the Christian life and service attractively and forcibly to the attention of the men and boys of this land, three millions of whom the church is said to be missing. The International Sunday School Association and the Young Men's Christian Association are federated for this work with the Episcopal, Baptist, Congregational, Disciples, Lutheran, Methodist, United Brethren and Presbyterian denominations. There will be eight-day campaigns held in ninety chief cities of the United States and Canada, continuing until May, 1912, by teams of experts in the various lines of work for and by men and boys. We look with hope to this movement not only for the betterment of individual lives, but for improvement in social conditions and civic righteousness—in short, for a better world here and now. Let us pray, Lord, open thou the eyes of men and boys!

Elisha's Way with Enemies

Through prayer Elisha made the eyes of an army blind. They were the men of the Syrian army, who had come to Dothan to capture him. It seems almost ridiculous when we think that the king of Syria had sent "horses and chariots and a great host" to take a man whose sword was the word of God, whose helmet was the defense of the Most High, whose breast-plate was righteousness! And the great host was conquered by the one poor man whom they expected to deliver to their king. It seemed a cruel thing for Elisha to call down blindness on Ben-hadad's host of several thousand men, but his intent was that the blindness should be only temporary, as a mist hung before their eyes; for he led them to the city of Samaria, their enemies' capital, not that they might be destroyed, but that they might see the greatness and the strength of their foes, and so cease from warring against them.

The king of Israel and some of his followers wanted to kill the men of the Syrian army, there in their city, when they were in their power. Elisha answered: "Thou shalt not smite them; set provisions before them, and when they are fed, let them return to their king."

Thus Elisha's stratagem brought about an era of peace, for "the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel." That was God's way of killing enemies (see Rom. 12: 20).

The Peace Movement

Elisha's command to the king of Israel was: "Lay down your arms." The king might have claimed his right to arms for "legitimate defense," but willingly he laid down his arms, and took up instead the cup and the dish, the emblems of love and charity, and there was no disaster to his people; his enemy did not turn upon him and take possession of his land. The argument of "legitimate defense" was vigorously discussed at the World's Peace Congress last summer in Stockholm. It was said among other things: "If we pass the proposition, all the militarists of the world will quote the license to kill issued by the International Peace Congress as a complete vindication of their own operations." And so the matter did not come to vote, and was disposed of neatly by "taking up the previous question."

Sunday School Lesson

Apropos of the peace idea is the American Peace Society of Japan recently formed. One of the founders said: "A large number of Americans residing in Japan desire to unite in the great movement devoted to the advancement of peace and good understanding among the nations, now active throughout the civilized world, and to give effect to this desire have assembled in the interest of their common purpose." A resolution was passed, which was in part as follows: "Resolved, that in our opinion the people of Japan have at all times entertained the most cordial and friendly sentiments towards the government and people of the United States, and that there never has been, and is not now, any feeling other than one of confidence and gratitude," etc. His Excellency Thomas J. O'Brien, American Ambassador to Japan, was present and made an address. Some of his words were as follows: "It seemed to me when I first heard of the intention of Americans in Japan to organize such a movement as this, that a most excellent work had been begun. . . . While the people of the United States are anxious for news and for something startling, at bottom they do love the truth, and in the end they will come out right side up in respect to this whole question. There is no cause under the sun why there should be misunderstandings between these two great countries." In referring to the settlement of national disputes through courts of arbitration, Mr. O'Brien said: "We may feel a distinct pride in the record of our country in this respect, and especially since our position, our sincerity, and our good faith have won for us the respect of other nations, and place us in better position, perhaps, than any other to forward a universal peace movement."

In Charge of the Angels

What a vast host of angels had charge over Elisha and his servant at Dothan! They easily outnumbered the Syrian host who had come up against God's servants. We have no way of estimating how great is the angelic host. When the apostle Peter unsheathed his sword in defense of the Lord Jesus, Jesus bade him put his sword again into its sheath, saying, "Thinkest thou that I cannot beseech my Father and he shall even now send me more than twelve legions of angels?" (Somewhere near seventy-two thousand.) We realize how very close to earth these legions may come when we read about the captain of the host of the Lord speaking to Joshua in the night, outside the wall of Jericho, saying: "Put off thy shoe from off thy foot, for the place whereon thou standest is holy."

We may know how helpful the angelic host may be to man as we read the instructions given to David when he went out to fight against the Philistines: "And it shall be when thou hearest the sound of marching in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt bestir thyself, for then is the Lord gone out before thee."

We may not know how many angels God has given charge over those who put their trust in him; but the promise leads us to think there stands a holy watcher by every friend of God. May God give to us each a vision of all he has in store for us to help us in this world, and to enrich us for eternity.

Millions and Millions of Cans of Jap-a-lac Are Bought Every Year by Housewives All Over America

It is as necessary to a well conducted home as soap and a broom and a dusting cloth. You simply can't keep house without it.

THERE is only one Jap-a-lac, and it's only made by one factory. The name is trade marked, and the quality is insured by the reputation of the manufacturers.

Wherever you find the biggest business, you can be sure that it has been built only through giving the biggest values.

Everything used in Jap-a-lac is 100% in purity and quality.

To begin with, the Kauri gum in Jap-a-lac is expensive and pure. We could use rosin or Manilla gum—you couldn't tell the difference in the tin, but you could in the wear; so we send clear to New Zealand and import a "body" which will guarantee satisfaction to you and success for Jap-a-lac.

JAP-A-LAC

Made in 18 Colors and Natural (Clear)
Renews Everything from Cellar to Garret
You Can't Keep House Without It

We buy Jap-a-lac colors in Germany. Aniline dyes are far cheaper, but they fade, so we pay top prices for permanent colors, and even then we blend them in our own laboratories. Therefore, we can safely warrant that Jap-a-lac will never fade or change, and we can assure you that there isn't even a technical difference in the shade of the Jap-a-lac from one hundred different tins.

The oil in Jap-a-lac is always of the same gravity and the same flowing qualities. It must be 100 per cent. pure. After we get it from the refiners, we make it come up to our own standard of refinement and filter it through fifty thicknesses of cloth so that when it is pumped into the tanks, ready for mixing, a microscope can't detect an impurity in a gallon of it.

We use linseed and wood oils for Jap-a-lac. This blending is one of the Jap-a-lac's secrets of perfection. It produces a permanent elasticity and gloss and keeps Jap-a-lac from cracking or blistering. Wood oil comes all the way from China; but we can't find an equally satisfactory oil nearer at hand so we ship it from the other end of the world "for goodness' sake."

You can't buy anything better than Jap-a-lac, and you aren't buying Jap-a-lac unless it is made by the Glidden Varnish Company. There is nothing that's the same. It's the best by test—by test of the years. Insist upon it. If you have used Jap-a-lac, you do—if you have not used Jap-a-lac, make your first trial to-day.

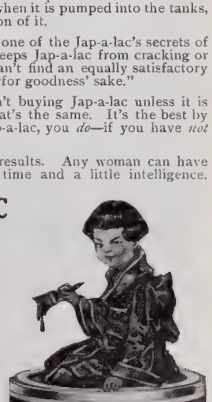
You require no skill or experience to secure satisfactory results. Any woman can have her home in tip-top shape with a little Jap-a-lac and a little time and a little intelligence.

Here Are a Few of the Uses for JAP-A-LAC

For hardwood floors. No other finish is quite so enduring. It shows no heel marks or nail prints, and retains its high gloss for months.

For painting the tops of the kitchen table. Cheaper than oilcloth and outwears it. Far more sanitary. Can be washed thousands of times without losing its porcelain-like glaze.

For coating the pantry shelves, thus doing away with covering them with paper or oilcloth, leaving them one hundred per cent. clean and sweet, and enabling you to rub them off daily with a damp cloth.



For enameling bath tubs and exposed plumbing.

For varnishing furniture and restoring old woodwork.

For varnishing faded pictures. A coat of Natural Jap-a-lac thinned with turpentine restores them to their original freshness of color.

For recoating iron bedsteads.

For gilding radiators and picture frames. Gold Jap-a-lac will make them look like new with a single application.

It takes a book to tell you in how many ways Jap-a-lac comes into your daily life. The book is free. Send for it. Buy a can of Jap-a-lac now. Sold everywhere. All sizes, 20c to $3.00.

EASTER

COLD was the East and gray,
No sign of light;
Suddenly breaks the day,
Born of the night.

Deserted the wood and drear,
No songster there;
Suddenly robins appear,
And violets everywhere.

Cold was life's sky and gray,
Loveless, forlorn;
Lo, from the Heaven a ray—
True Love is born.

Doubt swept the soul garden bare,
No faith had grew;
Grim death forced the heart to despair,
No bird of hope flew.

But out of the tomb for us all
Christ rises benignant and strong;
Faith flowers, hope sings at his call:
Fragrance and light and song.

A Bad Master*

AN Arabic proverb says: "While the word is yet unspoken, you are master of it; when once it is spoken, it is master of you." Another proverb which deals also with this vital subject is: "Thy friend hath a friend and his friend hath a friend. Be discreet."

The maxims of all nations abound in injunctions to beware of the power of the tongue. Kingdoms have fallen through the careless utterances of kings and ministers; while it is equally true that through the honeyed eloquence of many a gifted tongue, great honors have come to its possessor, and vast reforms have been effected.

One of the most beautiful of the many rare qualities attributed to the model woman in the thirty-first chapter of Proverbs, is her discretion. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness." No folly there—no scorn, no hatefulness. It is a charming picture.

A lady recently complained of the tendency to loquacity in the modern woman:

"I can count at least ten of my friends," she said, "who talk a perpetual stream, no matter where they are. The other day at an important luncheon, where many distinguished women were present, one of these guests, though by no means so famous or so interesting as were several others in the company, insisted upon dominating the entire conversation. We were told the opinions of her husband, the birthplaces of her children, and her own church, club, and other affiliations, with minute histories of each, most of which matter was utterly without interest to the other guests. Still, they could have enjoyed all this twaddle, if it had only been told in a witty or sparkling manner; but there was hardly a laugh and surely not a thought of value, in all her talk, while her egotism and vanity were painful. The beautiful table with its generous hospitalities, the dainty toilets of the guests, and the general distinction of the gathering, counted for nothing. The party was spoiled through one woman's inordinate love of talking."

She had probably never heard quaint George Herbert's arraignment of such an one: "It is as greedy to talk all as to eat all the feast."

Even when there is no slander, no wrong disclosures, no profanity, such wholesale and selfish monopoly of the conversation surely partakes of the nature of sin, and is especially to be avoided. Not only women but men are subject to it, though their sex has been considered as less blameworthy in this respect. The wise seer of Ecclesiastes uttered one of his best sayings when he bade us "Let your words be few."

In this matter, as in nearly everything else, there is a happy medium. Much evil has been wrought because of the failure to speak the right word at the right time. Let him who loves the Lord come forward and say so. Let him who espouses a noble cause give voice to his fealty, even in the face of ridicule and opposition. Let us not wait until our friends are dead to extol their virtues and tell them that we love them. There is a time to speak as well as a time to refrain from speaking.

The greatest sin that the tongue can commit is considered by some to be profanity; by others, to be lying. The first comes first in the decalogue. Perhaps the two are equally wicked in the sight of God.

Unkind criticism, hateful comments, may be placed next in the scale of importance.

Mrs. Stowe says: "Let us all resolve—first, to attain the grace of silence; second, to deem all fault-finding that does no good, a sin; third, to practise the grace and virtue of praise." This is good advice.

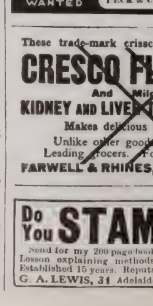
Put Yourself in His Place

THIS man inside the fire lines is watching his property burn. What does it mean to him? What would it mean to you if you were in his place? Would you be face to face with disaster or would you watch the smouldering remnants of your property with your mind occupied with plans for business rehabilitation, because somewhere in the ruins is the safe containing the indestructible financial soul of your business—your fire insurance policy?



If this happens to your property, you can plan with absolute certainty if your policy is in the Hartford, because for more than a hundred years it has been furnishing just this kind of business protection and has never failed to make good an honest loss.

It has paid 140 Millions for claims on property of its policy holders. This is larger indemnity than has ever been paid by any other American company.

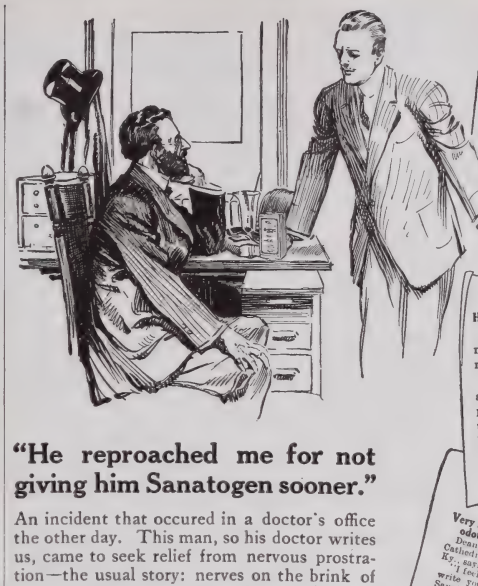
leaves being very effective when contrasted with the rich green of the parsley. Rhubarb, too, is an exceedingly picturesque plant, with its great, tropical-looking leaves. It is especially fine when, late in the season, it has matured and burst into great spikes of creamy bloom, and although this should not be allowed to happen as long as the stalks are wanted for use, it is by no means a bad idea to indulge oneself with the pleasure of its florescence when it has passed its season of usefulness.

The asparagus is also beautiful late in the season, when its feathery foliage is covered with scarlet berries. Not so much in the way of beauty can be claimed for currants and gooseberries and raspberries, but well-cared-for bushes and fruit of any kind are always attractive. If one wishes to grow a few bushes of blackberries and a bed of strawberries instead of melons and potatoes the ground allotted to these vegetables can be devoted to their use, and very good melons and cucumbers can be grown on the netting of the fence. The hills where they are planted should be made very rich with manure and the vines trained to the netting as soon as they begin to throw out tendrils. For cucumbers grown in this way the Japanese variety should be selected and for muskmelons choice should be made of Netted Gem or Rocky Ford. All the vegetables and fruit on the left-hand side of the garden, with the exception of the beets, melons and cucumbers, are hardy perennials and represent a permanent investment. Parsley, rhubarb, raspberries, and asparagus are each good for many years, increasing in size and productiveness from season to season. In planting corn it is always well to plant two or more varieties, selecting some good early sort for first bearing and using Stowell's Evergreen for main crop, as there is no other corn that approaches this in quality. In very dry localities or where there is no water supply for irrigating purposes, it will be better to plant the dry-weather cauliflower, as this is quite certain to head and afford a most delicious table vegetable from early in the summer until hard frost. Corn, cauliflower, tomatoes, string beans, and peas may all be canned for winter use. Parsnips and salsify may remain in the ground until the following spring and carrots and beets be stored in boxes of earth in the cellar. Red peppers may be stuffed and canned, and so the garden will be in evidence the year round.

MY PRAYER

LET me all turmoil shun,
Meet death as I begun,
Forget that shadows grow,
See only good and know
That evil, if there evil be,
Is that which finds its source in me.



Let me hear songs that live,
The notes that jar forgive,
Remember but the melody,
Forget the discord, let me see
That discord, if there discord be
Is something that was born of me.

Let me awake and know and find
The dividends of being kind;
Give me strength that by and by,
Whene'er I mark the sinner's eye,
I'll know the hardness of that stare
As my reflection written there.

Let creeping age evolve in me
More love, a deeper sympathy
With kindred souls that here below
Have quaffed with me the cup of woe;
May light that made Christ's eyes to shine
Dispel the clouds that darken mine.

And some day, Lord, some day, some where,
When I shall lay the load I bear
And stand in line, ranked soul on soul,
With those reprieved from life's parole,
May some voice answer, "Life were fair,
Because I knew this comrade there."

DR. LA VERNE A. BARBER.

"He reproached me for not giving him Sanatogen sooner. In every respect there has been a great change for the better and the patient's family are surprised to see the improvement."

A Prominent Providence Physician

"He reproached me for not giving him Sanatogen sooner."

An incident that occured in a doctor's office the other day. This man, so his doctor writes us, came to seek relief from nervous prostration—the usual story: nerves on the brink of starvation through overwork and business worry, poor appetite, bad digestion, and consequent mental depression. The doctor gave him some common-sense advice and ordered the use of Sanatogen.

Like thousands of other doctors, he knew that for a starved, debilitated, nervous system nothing could be more beneficial, for Sanatogen embodies the very essence of nerve substance, which the hungry cells absorb as eagerly as the parched earth absorbs water. And the patient rejuvenated by its life-giving effects, fortified by its reconstructive action, has but one regret: that of not having used it before. Could a more eloquent tribute be paid to the value of Sanatogen?

Does this episode contain any message to you? Are you in need of something to help your starved nerves—to give you fresh vigor, strength and fortitude? If so, write at once for "Our Nerves of Tomorrow," a valuable and readable essay by a physician who convincingly sets forth the needs of the nervous system during times of stress. Ask your doctor about Sanatogen—ask your druggist—do something toward obtaining the benefits of Sanatogen without further delay.

THE BAUER CHEMICAL CO.
Everett Building, Fourth Ave. NEW YORK

Hon. Geo. C. Perkins,
U. S. Senator, Former Gov. of California, writes:
"I have found Sanatogen to be a very pleasant nutrient and tonic, and extremely healthful in conditions of nervousness and poor digestion."

Very Rev. William Theodotus Capers,
Dean, Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, Ky., says:
"I feel constrained to write you and say that Sanatogen has done everything for my wife. I have found this preparation restores a normal appetite and gives vitality to the nervous system."

Hon. Wm. J. Stone,
U. S. Senator from Missouri, Ex-Governor of Missouri, states:
"Sanatogen has been used in my family with good results. I feel assured that it will relieve to a considerable degree nervous troubles caused by overwork. It is an excellent food tonic for building up the system."

Prof. Thos. B. Stillman,
The well-known research chemist of Stevens Institute writes:
"The chemical union of the constituents of Sanatogen is a true one, representative of the highest skill in the formation of a product containing phosphorus in the organic phosphate condition, and so combined that digestion and assimilation of Sanatogen is rendered complete with the greatest ease.
"Many experiments made by me, show that quick relief is obtained by its use where nervous prostration and general debility are present."

THE ROLLINS MAGAZINE
FOR THE BENEFIT OF INVESTORS

We take pleasure in announcing that on or about April 1, 1911, we shall issue and distribute to our clientele and others interested in conservative investment, the first number of The Rollins Magazine.

We dedicate this periodical to the interests of our clients; its mission is to furnish them with interesting, authoritative and unbiased information on matters pertaining to investment.

The growth of our country, the development of our Industries and Public Utilities, the expansion of our Railroads, the upbuilding of our Municipalities and the problems of our economic evolution are illustrative of the topics that will be treated in our pages. Our contributors will be men who know.

We aim to make the Rollins Magazine a broad and convincing medium that will command a national audience. It is our earnest hope that it will arouse a degree of interest and approval that will compel us to increase the size of our editions from 60,000 to twice or thrice that number.

The Value of Advice

HOW often have we heard it said contemptuously: "Advice is cheap!" This is no doubt true in so far as it represents the effort expended by the person giving the advice; but does the cheapness of a thing, that may be excellent, at all lessen its value? We think not. Advice is an opinion recommended because it is believed to be wise and right. Advice differs from an authorized command, in that we are free to accept it or to reject it. Advice is usually solicited, but often a desire to do good causes it to be volunteered. It may be given without thought of recompense, as when offered by a friend, or it may be paid for, as when we consult a lawyer or a doctor.

Take Counsel

Now, this is not an essay nor a sermon, but a plain statement of a fact that the oldest of us is apt to overlook, when we find our self-sufficiency halted, and our little pride shocked by advice that runs counter to our inclinations; for it is a truth that that advice is always deemed the best and wisest to which we were inclined before it was proffered.

An old country merchant, who in every way had "made a success in life, explained to us the secret of his material prosperity in this way: "I've been married nearly forty-eight years, and what with raising a big family, and caring for the home, yes, and for me, my wife she didn't have time to read many books, or to go out and learn about the outside world; but for all that she saw clear and thought straight. The only mistake I ever made in business was in the early days, when I was bull-headed and thought her advice didn't 'mount to much, because she was a woman. It wasn't till I got to talking things over with her and made her a sort of silent partner, with full right to advise, that I began to prosper, and so I've kept on getting the advice and I've gone on prospering."

This goes to show that the inspired intuitions of a good woman are often more valuable than the reasoning, from experience, of the man; but this in no way reflects on the great value of experience.

Beyond Her Intuition

The counsel of the wife, in the case just cited, might always be depended on when she was consulted about things of which she had some knowledge or experience; but if her opinion were asked about a matter of which she had no knowledge, like a sensible woman she would refuse to decide for or against. When the earnings from the country store became greater than the demands of a business that had reached the extreme limit of expansion and the possible investments of the neighborhood, she would remain perplexed and silent when her husband spoke of investing in bonds, or in some other form of security of which she had never before heard. At such a time her cautious impulse would turn to the safety of a stocking rather than to the uncertainty of a bond, which her imagination caused her to associate with the bondage of the Israelites in Egypt.

Where to Get Advice

There are men occupying commanding positions in the political and business worlds whose rise is due entirely to their fitness to give advice. Every great leader is a great adviser with the gift to make men follow his counsels. Every successful man is qualified to advise as to things about which he has the greatest practical knowledge. The leading bankers of the country, and this means all the associated branch banks away from the chief cities, are being continually asked for advice as to investments, and in order to respond with truth they must be familiar with the form of investment suggested by themselves or inquired about by their clients.

There was a time when leading bankers, who were usually directly interested in the enterprise, did not hesitate to draw in money by methods that honor could not justify, though the law might not hold them responsible. Happily this time is passing; is past, we think. The moon of unscrupulous speculation is declining, and the sun of honest business methods is steadily rising.

In considering investments the opinion of the banker is a very important part of the transaction and many large financial institutions maintain a department devoted almost entirely to this advisory capacity—an information bureau so perfectly organized in its departments and so replete with accurate detail as to excite wonder at the pains taken to present every phase of the thing inquired about.

A visitor asks about municipal and State bonds, and has at once placed before him the amount of each city's or State's indebtedness, the rates of interest, the market price of the bonds, their recent fluctuations and why they fluctuate, the populations, industries and resources of every city, with the promises for its growth or decline, every form of information, indeed, that might be of help to the small investor seeking advice.

Professional Advice

In another department the stocks and bonds for sale on the market are listed and their desirability or undesirability pointed out with an encyclopedia of facts to enforce the wisdom of the company's decision. In the departments devoted to mortgage investments may be found the same thoroughness of information and the same care in its impartial, methodical arrangement. These concerns are not necessarily stockholders in any one of the many enterprises for which they act as agents. The source of their own profits is legitimate and their continued success depends upon their integrity, and their ability to give sound advice.

Women and Conservation

MISS ALICE BENNETT, 419 East Sixty-fourth Street, New York City, fears that the moneyed corporations and trusts will monopolize the water power development of the country, just as they have grabbed many other things, and thus deprive the common, ordinary, working people of the benefits science will wrest from nature by making the water force turn the wheels of mills and manufacturing plants all over the land.

Every little river will be harnessed to a dynamo and power stations will spring up as if by magic. Who will control them—the trusts or the people? Miss Bennett is in favor of the Federal Government having control of all power stations, so that they may be leased on a stipulated contract, the people having power to determine such contract should the lessees fail to give satisfaction. She asks the women to form mothers' meetings and co-operate with the school teachers with a view to influencing legislation before Congress.

Saving
a portion of one's income or wage
Is Necessary to Success

The proper disposition of savings is as important as the act itself.

The saver should buy for cash only, in which case his success is a question of proper advice.

With proper advice he should not only secure income from investments but a gradual appreciation of principal—due first to a proper initial investment, and thereafter to the timely shifting of investments.

The question of what class of security to buy and when to buy is all important.

We have made a study of these questions and our experience is yours to take advantage of.

Stability and Earning Power

6% BONDS

Demonstrated Results of 23 Years of Successful Operation

THE American Real Estate Company in the further extension of its business of New York real estate ownership and operation offers its direct contract obligations, paying 6% to investors. For 23 years it has been earning and paying 6% to thousands of investors and accumulating a Surplus of nearly $2,000,000.

¶ Financial panics have come and gone, but every contract of this Company has been fulfilled, and every obligation met. Its securities have been sold at par and matured at par with never a single default or delay in payment of principal and interest—more than $6,500,000 having already been returned to investors.

¶ In the past ten years 10 high-grade railroad bonds showed a decline of 16 points, and British Consols 15 points. During that period New York real estate increased in assessed valuation from $3,033,615,602 to $7,941,241,357, and the securities of this Company, based upon it, did not depreciate a dollar. No other business can show a more sustained record of profit-earning power and stability.

¶ Based on the past ten years, New York City's population is increasing more than 15,500 a month—185,000 a year—which forecasts a city of 7,000,000 in 1920. Such growth means continued increase in real estate values, with a constantly increasing demand for dwelling and business space. This Company's business is providing that space, and in the continuance of its operations offers its 6% obligations in these two convenient forms:

6% Coupon Bonds

For those who wish to invest $100 or more, for Income Earning, paying interest semi-annually by coupons.

6% Accumulative Bonds

For those who wish to save $25 or more a year, for Income Saving, purchasable by instalments.

How Is Your Own Church?

Another Instalment of Letters on the All-absorbing Topic of the Spiritual Condition of our Churches

LETTERS from all parts of the country continue to come from church members and pastors, replying to the question recently propounded by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. How is your own church? These letters, another instalment of which is given below, show how general is the interest awakened by this discussion.

A Southern Church's Struggle

The church to which I belong, looked at from a material viewpoint, is in a fairly hopeful condition, but from a spiritual viewpoint it is not all we might desire. Yet the increase for five years past has been about ten per cent. annually in new converts. Our church is one of eight charges on the Iredell circuit, Western North Carolina Conference, M. E. Church, South. It is in the small village of Olin. You ask: "Is it making spiritual progress?" Not as much as we would like. Twenty-five per cent. are faithful. What is the remedy? A closer walk with God every day by all the membership; a family altar in every home; a place for private prayer, and reverent reading of the holy Scriptures every day, not merely as a duty, but as a privilege. The outlook is hopeful. Ringing utterances from pulpit and press indicate an earnest desire all along the line for a genuine revival. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is doing noble work in enlarging and making more tender the ties that bind all Christians together in this world.

Olin, N. C. J. A. STIKELEATHER.

A Little Iowa's Church's Progress

Our church, of which I have been a member for the last forty years, is in the eastern part of Iowa, in Dubuque County, in the village of Zwingle. It was organized in 1853.

Many of our surviving members have moved to different localities. Since the death of our last pastor we have had supplies. Now we have a permanent minister. We have increased in membership and are still growing. The Gospel is preached regularly. Our Sunday School has an average attendance of between forty and fifty, and is a great help to the church. Most of our people are willing and generous. We did not have the opportunity to have any revivals in our church. I hope the time is not far distant when our Protestant churches will all be in harmony with each other. READER.

Zwingle, Ia.

Live Church; Consecrated Pastor

Our auditorium is full every Sabbath morning, and in the evening they open the Sunday School hall to seat the people. The "White Temple" seats about two thousand when all the rooms are opened. We have a live church and a consecrated pastor.

Portland, Ore. MISS A. S. COOPER.

Revolutionized by a Revival

The First Presbyterian Church of Girard, O., was organized on August 10, 1909, with sixteen members, which was soon increased to thirty-three. The membership has increased to eighty-seven. The great revival held in Youngstown a year ago at which nearly 6,000 persons professed conversion, has revolutionized the religious sentiment in the Mahoning Valley. Decadence does not perch in eastern Ohio.

Girard, O. W. J.

The "Old-time Religion" Saves

Our church (M. E., South) is gaining in membership and has the sound Gospel preaching with the old-time faith. The spiritual condition is improving. More prayer has caused a change for the better. A number of the children have joined the church this year as a result of a good revival. The "old-time religion" is good enough for us. W. A. L.

Hopes a Revival May Help

I would like to write a few lines in regard to church matters as they now stand in the church I attend. I wish this church all success. When I first attended here, there was no settled pastor, and had not been for seventeen years and six months. Last July the church called Rev. William Quayle, of New York City, who settled here September 1, 1910. Since he came the church has picked up wonderfully. People who have not been in church for years have attended the services. I think this church will prosper materially and spiritually. We have been praying for this for some time. Our pastor preaches the good old religion—the Word of God right from the old Bible. Of course there is some opposition; the devil puts in his cloven foot sometimes and tries to stir things up; but God will take care of his own, if we only put our trust in him. Our church, the Second Baptist Church, was organized in March, 1765. Elder Simeon Brown was the first pastor. He served this church for fifty years without a salary. There were nearly 500 members then. It is still called the "Mother Church." Now, why cannot this church now do as good work for the cause of Christ as it did in the old days? We think it is making progress. A great revival has been started, and we hope it will spread all over the country.

North Stonington, Conn. MRS. ———.

A Church Reawakened by Revival

We have a population of between five and six thousand, a great number of whom are professing Christians: but the spiritual life seemed to be at a rather low ebb, and it was decided to try and revive the same. On October 2 the churches and Young Men's Christian Association, under the leadership of Evangelist John A. Davis, Singer F. A. Mills and Pianist G. W. Carr, opened union evangelistic meetings. These services did not close until Thanksgiving night, and the good that was accomplished can never be estimated. Sinners were saved, backsliders reclaimed, cold and indifferent Christians warmed up, ministers enthused, and the churches put on new life.

Our church, the First Baptist, has a most excellent pastor, Rev. W. G. Russell. He is thoroughly orthodox and a splendid speaker, and the church was progressing under his ministry; but a spirit of coldness and neglect of public worship had existed for some years back which was hard to overcome. He entered heart and soul into the evangelistic meetings, and our church has been graciously blessed. On January 1 we witnessed the largest communion service the church has ever known; last Sunday the largest Sunday School; our prayer meetings have increased from a dozen or two to upwards of one hundred; the Young People's Society, which had been abandoned, has started again; we have become a witnessing and testifying people, and we have received into the church since December 1, fifty-one members, and they are still coming. EDNA MYERS.

Scottdale, Pa.

An Active Country Church

Our church is the First United Brethren. The pastor preaches a pure Gospel, and is fighting every appearance of evil of which our town is guilty. As a result of his efforts there have been over 120 accessions to the church in the past year, and many conversions. Our Sabbath School is increasing, having 330 in attendance. Prayer meetings and experience meetings are well attended. We are now in the midst of evangelistic services, which promise grand results. E. A. CLIPPINGER.

Waynesboro, Pa.

Danger in Spiritual Starvation

We need ministers who are not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ and not afraid to give their life and service to the work. The church is the pillar and ground of the truth, and without that truth, the church will die; for we have a spiritual nature and must have spiritual meat. Now, too much time and expense are put in outward things, things that perish with the using, instead of doing our best to make men and women strong in the Lord. We are burdening the people with too many fine church buildings in one city or town, when we should all belong to the same household both in heaven and in earth. We allow those to rule who have not the spirit of Christ, and we use ways and means of raising money that are not becoming to Christians. The raising of money is not a test of the spiritual success of a church.

Carmen, Okla. WORKER FOR CHRIST.

Prayer the Church's Greatest Helper

Prayer has helped the churches of which I have been pastor more than anything else. The prayer meeting is the source of power. I have been in the Christian ministry for twenty years. My prayer meetings have never been what I desired them to be in attendance and interest; but I now feel that I have to some extent, at least, solved the prayer meeting problem. I am pastor of a church in Texas in a town of 5,000. My church has something of over 300 members. For six months the average attendance at prayer meeting had been nineteen. I bought a book of prayer meeting talks and used my first talk eleven weeks ago. That evening we had just fifteen at prayer meeting. At my last meeting two weeks ago we had ninety-five. During the last ten weeks we have had an average of seventy-five. Our prosperous prayer meeting has had a very beneficial influence on the church. Our Sunday School has doubled. The entire seating capacity of the church has been occupied at both services for five successive Sundays. PASTOR.

Voting Out Liquor Traffic

AN ARTICLE has been contributed to the Review of Reviews by Ferdinand C. Iglehart, D.D., on "Voting Out the Liquor Traffic," which gives a nation survey of the temperance situation as affected by the autumn elections. Hon. William Jennings Bryan is introduced into the campaign in Nebraska as a champion against the saloons. In one of his campaign speeches he said: ."The liquor business is on the defensive. Its representatives are for the most part lawless themselves and in league with lawlessness. They are in partnership with the gambling hell and the places of vice; they are the most corrupt and corrupting influences in politics, and I shall not by voice or vote aid them in establishing a reign of terror."

A description is given of the heated contest over the resubmission of the question of constitutional prohibition in Oklahoma in which the "drys" were successful by 42,000 majority. The fact was recorded that Governor Stubbs, as active an enemy of the liquor interests as any in the country, was re-elected in Kansas on a platform of State-wide prohibition, and a rigid enforcement of the law.

The writer does not overlook the defeat of the proposition of State-wide prohibition in Missouri, Florida, and Oregon, nor the reasons for it; and shows that the verdicts in these States had very little effect in reducing the "dry" territory. Governor Hoke Smith, whose administration was followed by Governor Brown's lax enforcement of the prohibitory law, was elected again as governor of Georgia. He is a friend of the State prohibitory law. Three-fourths of the territory of Illinois and one-half of the geographical area of Chicago is now "dry," and it is likely a county local option bill will be passed.

Mention is made of the "wet" and "dry" fight in the rural districts of New York, the only places where local option is allowed. There are over four hundred towns "dry," less than three hundred "wet" and two hundred and fifty part "wet" and part "dry." There was a net increase last year of eighty "dry" towns, or twice as many as in the past ten years. A bill for local option for cities has been introduced into the present legislature.

The liquor forces are making much of the report of the United States Internal Revenue Department, indicating an increase in the production and consumption of fermented and spirituous liquors, and claim that restrictive excise and prohibitory legislation are responsible for it. Nothing could be farther from the truth. The increase has been in "wet" territories solely. With a single exception or two, there is not a "dry" State or county in the Union where the authorized statistics do not show reduction in consumption of all kinds of liquor. The increase in the production of distilled liquors in New York alone in 1910 over that of 1909 is three times as much as the total amount used in all the "dry" territories in the United States together, during 1909 and 1910.

The increase of consumption of beer in New York State alone in 1910 over that of 1909 is an amount equal to two-thirds of all the beer consumed by all the prohibition States in 1910. Since the article was written the Alabama legislature has supplanted statutory prohibition with a certain form of local option; Indiana has modified the county local option law in the interest of the liquor dealers; Maine has ordered a re-submission of the question of constitutional prohibition; Texas is sending down the question of State-wide prohibition to a vote of the people; the rum power in Ohio has been defeated in the attempt to modify the Rose Local Option law, and fierce fights between the Church and the saloon are being carried on in most of the State legislatures. The article in giving credit to temperance workers of every kind makes mention of the Anti-Saloon League, which organization has representatives in 750 of the pulpits of the country every Sunday in the year. The article closes thus: "This war of the Church against the saloon is a desperate one. It will not be over in a day or a decade, or perhaps a generation; but the American saloon, with so little to commend and so much vice and crime to condemn, must go! The advance in individual integrity and civic virtue will leave no place for it in an enlightened Christian civilization."

A Diamond in the Rough

A MISSIONARY of the American Sunday School Union in the mountains of Kentucky sends this interesting incident: "There are possibilities in the lowest of the mountain children. Their environments need changing and a new thought is needed to permeate their lives. Let me illustrate: There is a large number of families in the mountains by the name of Banks. I have never seen a Banks that amounted to anything. There is a proverbial saying of these mountain people that if a certain man's name is Banks, there is 'nothing in him.' From one of those lowly families in Wolfe County came a boy by the name of Gabriel Banks. It was a wretched home that he left to attend Hazel Green Academy in an adjoining county. He wore ill-fitting clothes and was the laughing stock of the other students. No one took him seriously because he was a Banks. But he came there, determined to get an education. He knew the fight would be hard; but he did not think it would be so bitter. His teachers soon saw what was in him and stood loyally by him. Last week, I was asked to be a judge in a debate between two literary societies at Hazel Green. I went. The question was one that Clay, Webster and Calhoun had battled over many times. The last speaker made an impassioned speech. It was a marvel of eloquence and logic. His name was Gabriel Banks! Four years had wrought a wonderful change in this ragged, dirty, uncouth boy. Yet there are many more mountain boys and girls like him. They are the diamonds in the rough and only need educating to make them brilliants."

THE GUIDING HAND

BESIDE my letters' even row,
All crooked, scratched and blurred,
The clumsy pen had swerved aside
And left, although the child had tried,
A sadly written word.

And looking up he cried and said,
"Oh dear, it will not do;
My letters aren't at all like these;
I've tried my best; don't scold me, please!
I could not write like you!"

I took the baby hand in mine,
And soon he saw appear
Smooth writing, while he cried in glee,
"Whenever you are guiding me
I do it right like here."

"When you are guiding me!" you say;
Oh, child, how many see,
Beside that perfect life once led
Their own so poor and blurred, have said,
"I cannot be like Thee!"

Who, coming to His mercy seat
With humble childlike plea,
Can face their trouble once again
To whisper, "All is clear and plain
When Thou art guiding me"?

The Birth of a College

THE quiet city of New London has shaken off the dust of more than two and a half centuries, and has renewed her youth. The occasion is the birth of a new woman's college.

Twenty odd years ago a quiet-mannered schoolmaster, Calvin S. Buell, principal of a high school for girls, began to dream of a college for the women of Connecticut. He suggested to one of the wealthy men of New London the need of an institution which would bring closer to the women of the southern section of New England the privileges of high education. The development of his thought was cut short by the death of this man, whose enthusiastic interest and ample means specially qualified him to become the friend of such an undertaking.

For several years the idea remained nothing more than a dream. But conditions soon arose which made the need of an institution for the higher education of woman apparent to the whole State. Wesleyan College barred women from its privileges. Soon after the newspapers announced this fact, the College Woman's Club of Hartford took the matter in hand and began a search for a location where the community would properly welcome a college for women. They found the heart of New London already warm in its regard for such a project. They found, too, a superb site, comprising 280 acres of land, overlooking several miles of the picturesque shores of the river Thames. The city of New London promptly voted $50,000 toward the purchase of the site, and Mrs. Harriet A. Allyn, owner of fifty acres of the desired property, promptly offered it without price.

Later a citizens' committee was formed. A ten days' campaign was decided on. Eleven men were selected as captains of teams, each team to be made up of five besides the captain. To these was committed the task of raising $100,000 in ten days. Early and late these sixty-six men went from one end of the community to another. The money came rolling in. Each day at noon the workers came together and were served a simple lunch by the domestic science students of the New London Manual Training School. Each team reported the results of the twenty-four hours of work. These results were announced to the general public by means of a great illuminated clock placed on the front of one of the newspaper buildings, and a huge thermometer which commanded the attention of every one passing up and down the main business street. The fire alarm system was used to blow out in mighty blasts, at two o'clock each day, the number of thousands to which the grand total had mounted up. On the ninth day of the campaign $104,000 had been gathered in. On the tenth and closing day a grand celebration was announced. The most spacious building in the city was secured. The prohibition was taken off of firecrackers, and Fourth of July celebrations were made to look pale alongside of the lurid lights which illuminated the city. At the public meeting about 4,000 people gathered to hear the final report, showing almost $110,000 secured. Enthusiasm ran righ. Brilliant speeches were made, interrupted by impulsive cheering and the blowing of horns. The climax was reached when the president of the Committee of Incorporation announced the receipt of a check for $25,000 from Mr. Morton F. Plant, bringing the final total up to $135,000.

Among the Workers

—REV. F. B. MEYER, of London, is planning to give a week to Chicago under the auspices of the Moody Bible Institute, beginning June 4.

—TAYLOR UNIVERSITY, Upland, Ind., is in the midst of a notable revival. Professor Shaw is the preacher and many converts among the students are reported.

—EVANGELIST JAMES M. BURWICK recently conducted some very successful meetings in Shaw Avenue Methodist Church, St. Louis, bringing many souls to salvation.

—MISS ELIZABETH L. GEBHARD, 735 Warren Street, Hudson, N. Y., has just published a booklet from a pleasing little poem entitled The Old Parsonage Knocker. Price 25c.

—M. J. W., PORT ARTHUR, TEX., writes thanking the friends who offered her an invalid chair. Through the kindness of one friend, she has now been supplied.

—READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be pleased at the announcement that the long and able services of Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the well-known medical missionary of Labrador, have been recognized in the way of a knighthood conferred upon him by King George. Sir Wilfred has been for many years a valued contributor to our columns.

—A REVIVAL WAVE is sweeping the San Joaquin Valley, Calif., led by Evangelist Shannon. At Sanger 435 professed conversion and eight saloons closed. A fine Young Men's Christian Association building is now being erected. At Selma 467 made professions of saving faith. At Turlock 505 repented. At Visalia 450 came to the altar, and it is proposed to close up the twenty saloons in the place.

—WHEN THE WINTER storms were the heaviest, shortly before New Year's, the Waynesburg Pressed Steel Company of Waynesburg, Pa., J. W. Munnell, superintendent, sent to the Bowery Mission a gift of 120 snow shovels and 12 sidewalk cleaners. They proved very serviceable to the Mission, and were the means of keeping a number of men steadily employed during the snow-cleaning period. It was one of the most practical and timely gifts the Mission has had in several years and was greatly appreciated.

—A REMARKABLY successful revival has been in progress at Hobart, Ind., the leaders being Evangelists S. B. Shaw and Thomas Johns. The work resulted in a union meeting of Congregational, Swedish Methodist, German Methodist and Methodist churches. Interest spread to the surrounding towns, and people came from Wheeler, Ross, Gary, East Gary, Valparaiso, Crown Point, Tolleston, Evanston and other places. Nearly a dozen ministers, representing different denominations, took active part. Many professions of conversion are reported.

—MRS. M. P. BOYCE writes: "I have sent my CHRISTIAN HERALDS, after reading, to the Vermont State Prison, where there are nearly 300 prisoners. I have subscribed for a copy to be sent there every week. Will you not give a word of encouragement to men of that stamp in general"—which we are very glad to do. Certainly, no better use could be made of an extra subscription.

—REV. J. B. KENDALL recently conducted a series of revival services in Palmer, Kan., that were attended with great success. W. W. Owen, who works with Mr. Kendall, took charge of the music and made it a rousing feature of the meetings. The interest was deep, and large numbers attended the services. Many men of mature years were among those led to Christ. The meetings were held under the auspices of three of the evangelical churches combined.—J. V. H.

—ON JANUARY 5, Mount Hermon Boys' School suffered a severe loss in the destruction by fire of Crossley Hall, the largest dormitory. The insurance money will not be more than half what is necessary to replace the building. We are appealing, therefore, for a fund of $75,000 to enable us to begin construction at once. We believe there are many friends throughout the country who are in sympathy with Northfield and who will aid us in raising the amount necessary. Contributions may be sent to the Treasurer, Edwin M. Bulkley, 43 Exchange Place, New York City, or to the undersigned at East Northfield, Mass.—W. R. Moody.

—SUPERINTENDENT H. C. EVA of the Home for Homeless Boys, New York City, makes report that during the last twelve months 510 boys have been cared for. They came from twenty-five different States. They came from hospitals, courts, bread lines, the parks, prisons, etc. Last year our readers sent a considerable amount of clothing for the homeless boys, which was greatly appreciated. There is great need of clothing at the present time. All gifts should be sent to 150 West One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Street, New York.

McCall's Magazine

is not devoted to the ultra and extreme in Fashions. The great stable, solid, practical, overwhelming majority of American women do not want the ultra. This is why McCall's is so satisfactory. It is first, last and all the time practical; its fashions are so simple and so accurately designed that when they call for 4½ yards of material, 4½ yards are just enough, with nothing over or nothing short.

When McCall's features a fashion, whether of dress, millinery, coiffure, table decoration or what not, it must be able to stand the test of pleasing and continuing to please the great sensible American public. That it does so is evidenced by the million and upward families who buy it year after year.

McCall's is not cheap, except in price. It does not appeal to cheap people. It would be worth almost any sum per year, but it is sold at 50c, which includes any McCall Pattern free. By the way, one of the best features of McCall's Magazine is the celebrated

McCall Patterns

Fifty or sixty new designs, the complete range of the month's styles, are shown in every issue. By the use of these patterns any garment can be easily made and it will fit and look like the picture. Mellin's Food is the Ideal Modifier

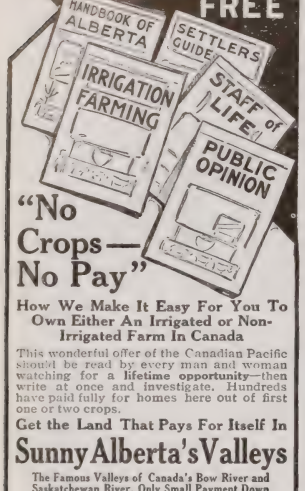
When you prepare the food for your baby be sure that the basis of it is pure, fresh milk.



Fresh milk alone is too strong for baby's little stomach, but fresh milk modified with Mellin's Food is readily digested by the youngest infant, and it has all the life-giving vitality that baby needs.

The Mellin's Food method of modifying milk is the most practical, and at the same time the most scientific, method that has ever been devised.

Thousands and thousands of babies have thrived on Mellin's Food. So will your baby. Get a bottle for him today.

We have a very helpful book, "The Care and Feeding of Infants." We shall be glad to send you a copy, together with a Trial Size bottle of Mellin's Food, if you will write us.

Painting the States White*

AMONG the most convincing of the arguments presented by the Prohibitionists for the extension of their doctrine, is the prosperity of the prohibition States. Bank deposits invariably increase with the closing of the saloons. Real estate men report many more homes bought. Merchants rejoice over the enormous reduction in the number of unpaid bills. If records could be kept also of the inflow of the tide of happiness to the hearts of women and children, there would be seen a rise to which that of the tides of the famous Bay of Fundy would be small.

"But," says the critic, "there is still drinking and drunkenness in the prohibition States; sometimes saloons brazenly kept open, and unmolested by the law."

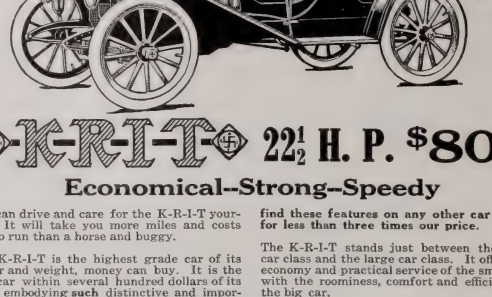
So long as prohibition States touch those in which free rum or licensed saloons are permitted; and so long as men have the craze for drink; and so long as the opinion is fostered and bolstered by liquor dealers and drinking men that true manliness implies a taste for wine and whisky; so long will a considerable contingent in every prohibition State secretly evade the law. But, since the liquor-dealer is the prime manufacturer of criminals the world over, he belongs in their class. He is, to all intents and purposes, a destroyer of society, and he should bear upon him the stamp of the law-breaker. He should be forced off from the streets where he flaunts his legality, back, back into the alleys and cellars where the unjailed criminals lurk. Little by little, as fast as it can be done, let the minions of the law hunt him down.

Many young men go to saloons for lunch, for milk, for mineral waters or for ice cream, saying as an excuse that they don't go for whisky, they go for "soft drinks," or for good food. This may be so, but nevertheless if you do it, you are adding to the saloon-keeper's prosperity and to the respectability of his place by your presence there. Do nothing to increase his income.

Some years ago, on one of the best streets of one of our cities, lived a saloon-keeper, named Muller. He was a good-natured man, never drunken, kind to his family, and a good neighbor. His three pretty and well-behaved children played freely with the others in the vicinity.

One day two little girls from across the way came over to spend the afternoon with the little Mullers. The servants were out and the mother, an excellent woman, who deplored her husband's calling, was ill with a headache and was lying on her couch upstairs.

The children played in the yard for a while. Then Adolph, the eldest Muller child, suggested that they should go into the house and play store, "like papa." He was only eight, but he knew that he should not go to the wine-room, and he would never have dared to do it if his mother had been near.



He set out a number of bottles, made "cents" out of paper, demanded a certain number of these for each "drink" and proceeded to sell freely to the others. Though the children used dolls' tumblers, they were soon overcome by the mixture of liquors. The little saloon-keeper himself became noisy with his first draught, and his maniacal screams summoned his mother to the scene. One of the little visitors had refused to touch the offered poison after the first taste, which luckily she did not like. The other, six years old, was carried home unconscious by her horrified mother. The two younger Muller children were made ill. One of them lingered for days upon the brink of death. But the incident was the salvation of the father. He left the awful traffic which had so nearly ruined his family, and entered a more respectable calling.

A Special Offer to Christian Herald Readers!

"World's Great Sermons"—10 Books

HERE is a most remarkable set of books. These Ten Volumes contain more than One Hundred Sermons representing the greatest eloquence of the world's preacher-geniuses for over fifteen centuries. The sermons are educational. Many of the mighty figures represented were men whose words have made history, whose names are inseparably linked with the greatest intellectual and religious movements of their times. They offer practical solutions to the problems of right living. They are a rich repository of illustrations and anecdote, convincing argument and persuasive appeal.

The compiler and editor is Grenville Kleiser, former instructor in Yale Divinity School. The Introduction is by Professor Brastow, Professor Emeritus in Yale University, who says: "The collection contained in these ten volumes is more varied and comprehensive, reaching as it does from the first to the twentieth century, than any collection known to the writer. Professor Kleiser has brought to his task a personal knowledge of this class of literature that is the product of much observation and study during many years, and an enthusiasm for his work." To any person interested in the best religious sermons of an important class of the great men of all countries and ages, and of all denominations, these books will prove a never-ending pleasure and benefit and inspiration.

We believe there should be at least 200,000 people in the Christian Herald Family who will desire to own this set, and we have accordingly made arrangements whereby we can supply the books at an unusual price and in a way that places them well within the reach of all. By reading these sermons you can acquire, at first hand, an understanding of religious affairs from the first to the twentieth century. This interesting library brings to you the eloquent sermons on many and various subjects of the learned ministers of past and present times so that you can enjoy them when you wish and as often as you like.

Some (Not All) of the Names of the Famous Preachers Whose Masterpieces Are Included:

John Wyclif was the most popular and fearless preacher of his time. His masterpiece, "God's Real Body Not in the Eucharist," is given.

Savonarola's famous oration, "The Ascension of Christ," is here reproduced.

Bourdaloue. "Mechanics left their shops, merchants their business, and lawyers their court-houses to hear him."

Latimer, who, with Ridley, was burned at the stake in 1555, and who, during his life, was a most strenuous advocate of religious reform. His sermon, "On Christian Love," is included in this collection.

John Calvin's greatest traits were self-reliance and authority. It was said of him that "every word weighed a pound, and made men think."

Tillotson, considered the model preacher because of his style, which was clear and forceful. "The Reasonableness of a Resurrection" is his Masterpiece.

Charles John Vaughan. "God Calling to Man" is marked with deep sincerity.

Martin Luther. "The Method and Fruits of Justification" stamps him as one of the world's greatest pulpit orators.

Saurin, the famous French Protestant clergyman, who has been compared with Bossuet in pulpit power.

Jonathan Edwards, whose fame will live for his clear logic.

Wesley, the founder of Methodism. An orator powerful, systematic, and with a clear and resonant voice.

Among Other Great Names Included in this Remarkable Collection are:

Taylor, Jeremy
Baxter, Richard

Robert Hall drew great crowds of all classes, and many minds were fascinated by his eloquence.

Christmas Evans, the Welsh Baptist divine, whose eloquence has uplifted thousands of his fellow-men.

William Ellery Channing. "The Character of Christ" is a model of his best.

Thomas Arnold. "Alive in God" is a model oration distinguished for simplicity and sincere moral and religious earnestness.

Henry Van Dyke. "The Meaning of Manhood" shows how to find the best in life, and a sure way of felicity, wealth and happiness.

Henry Ward Beecher. His sermon, "Immortality," was one of the sanest and most inspiring utterances upon the destiny of the human soul.

Charles Wagner, the author of "The Simple Life," gives a clear and convincing discourse on the attainment of a great personality.

T. DeWitt Talmage. His sermon, "A Bloody Monster," is one of the greatest addresses ever delivered on temperance. It thrills and fascinates the reader.

Charles H. Spurgeon. "Songs in the Night." The theme is calculated to bring repose and comfort to the world-weary heart.

Henry Drummond. "The Greatest Thing in the World" is an inspiring address.

Phillips Brooks. "The Pride of Life." This address is notable for its simplicity, sympathy, and spiritual suggestiveness.

Questions and Answers

Reader, Tennessee. Can a person become so sinful in this world as to get beyond God's willingness and power to save? If you think not, will you and your many readers pray for me? I feel as one completely in the power of evil and cut off from all communication with God.

There is none who can go beyond the reach of God's mercy. Jesus saves "to the uttermost" (Heb. 7: 25). Further, you may rest assured that the very fact that you are concerned about your condition is evidence that the Spirit is still striving with you. God will hear and answer the prayer of the earnest, penitent heart. Christ's offering of himself was once for all who accept him; and his intercession, which is continuous, assures us that we cannot be separated from his love if we take him into our hearts and lives.

G. B. C., Gomez, Texas. Please explain Matt. 12: 43, 44, 45.

It was the illustration descriptive of a spiritually decadent generation. Their hearts had been partly turned to the Lord by John's ministry, and they had the opportunity to receive Christ and live; but they neglected it, and so gave themselves over anew to sin and became worse than at first. They sinned deliberately, having already had the light and having rejected it. The number seven here is symbolical of completeness, as showing the thoroughness of the change.

A. B. K., Brooklyn, N. Y. In your magazine of January 11, Mrs. J. B. J., South Delabole, Pa., asks: "Are there any descendants of Rechab living to-day, and keeping the vow made to Jonadab?" We will venture to say in reply: Yes, probably there are. When a boy, I read that Dr. Wolfe—a converted Jew, a great scholar and traveler—when traveling in the East, came in contact with a tribe different from the Bedouin Arabs, who in answer to questions by Dr. Wolfe, replied: "We are Rechabites, descended from Jonadab, son of Rechab [Jer. 35]. We drink no wine, and live in tents, and not in houses." Dr. Wolfe visited them in their tents, and found that in them Jer. 35 is being fulfilled literally.

We might add to the above that Signor Pierotti in 1862 was reported to have found a tribe near the Dead Sea calling themselves by the name of Rechabites. They were probably descended from Talmudical Jews, and their claim to be Rechabites in reality was regarded as extremely doubtful. We believe there is a modern temperance organization bearing the name, but only as a symbol and making no claim of descent.

U. E. M., Moon's Corner, Mass. 1. Who was the author of "Cleanliness is next to godliness"? 2. Can you tell why Paul, after his conversation, went to Arabia and stayed there three years?

1. It is found in the Beraitha, a translation of the Mishna (code of Jewish laws) by Rafael de Sola. 2. Nothing definite is known as to his sojourn in Arabia, where he went after leaving Damascus. It has been suggested that he visited Mount Sinai. The probability is that he simply sought seclusion for a time to prepare himself by prayer, meditation and study of the Scriptures for the work before him.

R. N., Bridgeport, Conn. When were the first attempts made to Christianize China, and how many Chinese are Christians to-day?

Attempts to Christianize China were made by the Nestorians as early as the sixth century, but little or no progress was made until the advent of the Jesuits in the seventeenth century, who were the first in the field. Probably less than 2,000,000.

W. W., Philadelphia. How can we reconcile recognition of friends in heaven, when a father dies at thirty-seven years and the son lives to seventy years or more?

We can have no adequate conception of the character of the spiritual body of which Paul tells us (see 1. Cor. 15: 44-53). If we assume that the mind or conscious intelligence remains young, and further, that individual consciousness or identity is continued in the future life, as Scripture clearly implies, we may here find a clue to recognition. David believed this (see II. Sam. 12: 23). It is useless, however, to speculate on the manner of such recognition. In Jesus' parable of Dives and Lazarus (see Luke 16: 23) recognition is clearly implied. (See also Rev. 6: 9, 10; I. Thess. 4: 15-18; Heb. 13: 17; Matt. 8: 11; Eph. 3: 15.) All Scripture on the subject gives assurance of the preservation of identity, but in what form and how distinguished is not disclosed. Certainly,

Ten Beautiful Roses
GIVEN TO CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS!

Wouldn't you like to have Ten Gorgeous Rose Plants blooming in your house or in your garden?

You may have them without actual cost if you will read this description carefully and follow its advice.

Think of it! Ten superb roses—red, white, pink, yellow—a color for every member of the household.

Hardy, rapid-growing roses. Ever-blooming roses for each week in the season. Roses whose fragrance is as the breath of the early summer.

Guaranteed to reach you in good growing condition, with special instructions on how to plant and care for them.

HERE THEY ARE:

Etoile De France. This glorious red rose blooms continuously through the entire season. The buds are exquisite and develop into immense, velvety crimson double flowers.

White Killarney. A hardy rose of robust growth and full branching habit, with buds long and pointed, developing into pure, snow-white flowers of enormous size.

Yellow Kaiserin. A yellow rose distinguished for the regal beauty of the buds and flowers. A robust, rapid grower, developing quickly into a well formed bush.

President Taft. A bright, sparkling pink flower produced in great profusion, filling sunny nooks and corners with exquisite beauty and delicious fragrance.

Dorothy Perkins. Large clusters of clear shell pink flowers deepening into a darker shade near the center. A most valuable acquisition to the list of hardy climbing varieties.

Queen of Fragrance. Pure white flowers of globular form shading to an exquisite shell pink toward the center, and maintaining a sweet deliciousness during the entire blooming season.

Marigold. Deep full flowers of clear saffron yellow, borne on good stiff stems. A continuous bloomer that heads the list for size, fragrance and beauty of flower.

Maiden's Blush. Large flowers of salmon and rose pink hues, toned with an exquisite flesh color that resembles the flesh on a maiden's cheek. Vigorous and hardy.

Kaiserin Augusta Victoria. A rich creamy white flower that deserves its royal name. Large, deliciously fragrant, and retaining freshness and beauty for a long period.

Rhea Reed. This large red rose grows in great masses of double flowers developed from long, pointed buds. A marvel of mystic beauty and coloring.

How to Secure These Roses Without Cost

Isn't there among your friends or relatives or acquaintances, some one who would be benefited by reading the Christian Herald? You can probably think of several in a few minutes, and it would indeed be easy for you to get them to subscribe for a short trial period, say from now until January 1st, 1912.

Therefore, if you will send us $1.00 we will mail the Christian Herald to any address in the United States and Canada until January, 1912, and for your trouble we will send, absolutely without any financial cost, to you or to any address you may designate, Ten Blooming Roses, like those described above.

This is the Planting Season
SEND NOW!

This is the time of year to plant Roses—this month and in May are always best to insure early results. Therefore, why not send $1.00 now, quickly? We will send the roses to you right off, and you can secure the subscription later on, collect your one dollar from the new subscriber then, and thus the advance payment will have been refunded to you, a new member will have been added to the Christian Herald family, and you will have the ten roses growing in your yard, all without any financial expense to you. You surely can not afford to miss this great chance, and as the Christian Herald wants all readers to enjoy these sweet and fragrant roses, it is to be hoped that you will take advantage of this opportunity to secure 10 Roses in time for the real Rose season.

Questions and Answers

if we shall know the saints in heaven, there is no reason to doubt that we shall know our dear ones who are there, no matter at what age they died. Mother and father will know child, brother know sister, friend know friend.

A. V., Bogota, N. J. Why does Paul write to the Corinthian Church (I. Cor. 5: 8) that they were not to keep the feast with the old leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth? Why do all the Protestant churches use leavened bread for the symbol of his body, when leaven in the Bible is almost universally a figure of corruption or evil?

1. The "old leaven" of which Paul wrote was the remnant of heathenish and natural corruption. As the Jews used great care in searching their houses and purging out every particle of leaven at Passover time, so the true Christian must search out and purify his heart from the leaven of sin. 2. In the Lutheran and some churches of Protestant denominations unleavened bread is used. It certainly would be more accordant with Scripture to use it than leavened bread.

F. Y., Hobart, N. Y. Where is the highest and largest building in the world?

Your question involves two answers, as the highest building is not the largest. The tallest building ever erected is the Metropolitan Life Building in Madison Square, New York City, which is 700 feet and one inch high, and has fifty stories. The largest structure put up by the hands of man is the great pyramid of Gizeh in Egypt. Its original dimensions at the base were 764 feet square and its perpendicular height 448 feet. It was commenced 2170 B. C., or about the birth of Abraham; 330,000 men were engaged upon it; over 5,000,000 tons of hewn rock were used in its construction. The cost of this great work in our money at the present time would be almost $200,000,000.

S. F. E., Ventura, Calif., and W. R. C., Tampa, Fla. Who was the first Pope of the Roman Catholic Church?

As far as is known, Bishop Siricius, who was the chief primate from 384 to 389 A.D., was the first to use the word Pope as a title. After the fifth century it came into more general use and after the seventh century gradually disappeared from ecclesiastical language for every other ecclesiastical dignity except that of the Bishop of Rome.

Miscellaneous

G. M. R., Lamar, N. C. The preaching of Scripture is clear that not until the coming of Christ will his kingdom be established throughout the whole world. But we pray "Thy kingdom come," and it is our duty as it should be our joy to work for the extension of his kingdom now. This does not conflict with any of the passages you quote.

J. A. G., Cleveland, O., and Clark Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., take exception to certain comments in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on the recent drop in high prices, which they construe as a reflection on the business honesty of the retailers generally. Nothing was further from the purpose of the article. The statements of prices quoted were current in the newspaper press generally. One of these writers states that damaged eggs do not find their way into retail stores. This is not quite correct, as abundant observation convinces us. However, we gladly acquit the retailers as a class of causing the high prices. They were doubtless the victims of circumstances, just as much as the consumers were.

R. E. L., Washington, D. C. A service of song, under proper arrangement, is something which many churches now give in lieu of the regular sermon and it is an agreeable change. We cannot consider a "praise service" occasionally as out of place in any church. It is important, however, to draw the line between a mere concert and a selection of such music as properly befits such an occasion. A series of elegant solos or chorals or performances that may go with a flourish on week days are not necessarily adapted to a Sunday song service. The phrase "sacred concert" has been so much abused that it has come to mean anything but sacred. The song service should be reverent and suitable to the day and the place, otherwise it is an offense. Besides, it should afford the congregation an opportunity to unite with the choir to a reasonable extent. Nor should all of the regular service be omitted, but only that part of it for which the song service is the substitute.

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Granary in an African Village

"The Orient" as It Will Be Presented at the Coming Missionary Exposition

Arab Passenger Carrier

FOR A GREAT MISSIONARY EXPOSITION

A WORLD'S FAIR of most unique character and distinctively religious purpose is to open in Boston on April 22 and continue to May 20. It will be known as "The World in Boston," and will be the first great missionary exposition held in America. As a new phase of the significant missionary movement which is meeting such a splendid response throughout the United States, the project is attracting unusual attention. The Exposition will be a definite and organized attempt to present the work of missions, home as well as foreign, in such a way that all visitors will have their interest aroused. This is to be done by making a powerful appeal to the eye. Through the organ of sight, much more receptive to impression than the ear, it is expected to visualize the mission fields, stimulate imagination, arouse sympathy, and by bringing to the public the things which are out of sight, and usually also out of mind, impress them with the importance and the magnitude of the great enterprise of Christian missions.

While the Exposition will be for those who attend church regularly or occasionally, and who cannot see the mission fields for themselves, it is especially intended for the tens of thousands of indifferent people, the non-churchgoers, the men and women who are well-meaning, but indifferent to missionary work, because they are ignorant of it. "The World in Boston" will provide something for such people to see: things of color and beauty, in great variety, full of life and action and altogether new to them. The exhibits, it is expected, will attract and hold the interest of thousands of visitors long enough for a lasting impression to be made upon their minds.

Hitherto England has led in missionary expositions. Many have been held throughout Great Britain and with such good results that the forthcoming one in Boston has been planned along similar lines; especially has it been patterned after the most successful and largest, "The Orient in London," which was held in the British metropolis in 1908. The services of the Rev. A. M. Gardner, who organized that Exposition, have been obtained as General Secretary of "The World in Boston." The Mechanics Building, a great structure especially built for such undertakings and enterprises, and in which automobile and similar shows are held annually, has been selected for the Exposition.

A guarantee fund of $60,000 was raised before any steps were taken to build up the splendid organization which now exists. It is not the expectation of the trustees that there will be a profit. They do, however, expect to clear all expenses and repay to the guarantors the money which they advanced. In case there should be a profit, it will be turned over to the Young People's Missionary Movement.

A Scene in Eskimo Land

A Missionary Teacher in Africa

A Typical Chinese Street

The main floor of the Exposition Hall will be occupied by scenes and courts representing every land where mission work is carried on; the purpose being to show the native life untouched by Christianity; the conditions under which missionaries work in each non-Christian land; and the effect and influence of Christianity upon non-Christian people, with some idea of the progress which Christian missions are making throughout the world. A brief outline of what a visitor may see will give some idea of the various scenes to be represented. Directly at the main entrance will be a Japanese street with characteristic shops on each side, and beyond a typical Japanese scene, with a garden and tea-house, a temple with torii before it, and other structures of true Japanese architecture. Upon the walls surrounding the scene will be painted glimpses of Japanese scenery, so true to originals that any one looking upon them might well fancy himself in the Flowery Kingdom. Beyond the Japanese section will be a Chinese village. India and Africa will be shown in the same way, and considerable space will be given to representations of life in various Mohammedan lands.

Six large spaces will be devoted to home missions. One section will represent mission work among American Indians. Here will be an Indian tepee, and to show the progress which Christianity is making among the original peoples of America, there will be a reproduction of the Christian Indian chapel at Tucson, Ariz.

Adjoining this scene visitors will find a large section devoted to educational and industrial work among the negroes of the Southern States. Starting with the representation of a slave-ship, the wonderful progress of the Negro race will be shown.

Tableaux and moving pictures will have a part in this most unique world's fair. The great musical feature will be the "Pageant of Darkness and Light"—a musical drama or oratorio of historic events in the history of missions. It is made up of five episodes of the North, East, South, and West, with a final triumphal episode. It includes the discovery of Livingstone by Stanley in Central Africa; the sacrifice of widows in India upon the funeral pyre; the defiance by Kapiolani, the Christian queen of Hawaii, of Pele, the heathen goddess of the Lake of Fire, etc. Two hundred people will participate in each episode and 5,000 choristers and participants are being enrolled for the pageant.

A SERMON BY

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.*

PASSING BY

TEXT—Luke 18:37
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by"

SOMEBODY has said that St. Luke's is the Gospel of humanity—that it is here that you find Jesus as a great Physician, here you see him as a helper. Here you behold him going here, there and everywhere on errands of mercy. Here he is speaking in parables. Here you behold him working miracles to raise the sick and the dead. Therefore it is called the Gospel of humanity. I suppose you know the setting of the text. Our Master is on his way to Jericho. Multitudes of beggars throng the way in these days. I had to fight my way into Jericho. I had actually to battle with the people to get into Gethsemane. They thronged us on every side. This was especially true in the days of Jesus. A blind beggar sat by the wayside. He heard that the Master was coming, and long before you could have seen him with your eyes, he heard him as the blind only can hear. Springing to his feet when he knew that Jesus was approaching, he cried out, saying, "Tell me, who is coming?" And some one, to quiet his cries, speaks in the words of the text: "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

The Fact of Christ

And he is still passing by. He is the central figure in history. Take him away, and you have lost the keystone of the arch; lose sight of him, and the foundation-stone is gone; take him away, and peace departs; lose the vision of him, and there is no pardon. He is still passing by. I suppose there is scarcely an intelligent person in the country who would not say that he accepts him, at least as the historic Christ. We know that he existed. It is as easy to prove that Jesus Christ came into this world and lived and suffered and died, as to prove that George Washington lived and died, or to prove that any man of renown connected with history lived and died. But the question is not so much his existence. The question is as to whether or no we will accept his claim that he was not only a man, but the Son of God as well. If he existed we know what he claimed for himself, and by all that he said, by all that he did, by all that he was, we believe him to be equal with God the Father in power and authority.

I was once speaking on this subject in a Western city, and a gentleman came to me at the close, and said, "Yes, but he may have been deceived." "Oh," I said, "you mean to say that he was a fanatic." "No," said he, "hardly that, but he may have been deceived when he made his claim." I had a little Bible in my hand; holding it up I said to him, "I do not know whether you own a Bible, but if you will take mine and read through the New Testament, and can find one single place in the New Testament where anything that Jesus said, any system of morals he taught, any doctrine he proclaimed, was anything but the sanest message that the world has ever heard—if you can prove it otherwise, then I shall be perfectly willing to resign my position and take yours." "No, sir," he said, "I will not take your Bible, for I have one; but I will read it."

But Where Is He?

He came back to me about a week later, and told me that he had spent a good part of the week going over all the sayings of Jesus. He said, "I laid aside my agnosticism. I put aside for a moment my questioning. I simply read with an open mind." Reaching out his hand to take mine, he said, "I have to come to tell you that I believe Jesus was all that he claimed to be." And you will come to believe it if you can turn away for the time being from the arguments of men, turn away from your prejudices, turn away from your sin and consider him. He is the Son of God. "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

But where is he? I know where he is. He is at the right hand of God. This seems like a contradiction of the text, does it not? Speaking very rapidly, one evening, in my own church, I found, after I had gone a sentence or two along, that I had made a great mistake. I said that Jesus is standing at the right hand of God; but he is not. The priests of earth stand, and they stand because theirs is an unfinished work; but he, our blessed Redeemer, after he had fulfilled all the conditions, after he had offered himself as a sacrifice for you and for me, made his way up into the presence of the Father and sat down. His is a finished work. All you need to do if you would turn away from sin, all that you need to do if you will repent of wrongdoing, is to lay hold upon him and his finished work.

If the text seems a contradiction, may I read another Scripture to you? It is the 14th chapter of St. John, 16th, 17th and 18th verses. My text says: "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." But I have just stated that he is seated at the right hand of God. Now, how do you reconcile the two statements? Listen—16th verse: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; (17th) even the Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." Then the 18th verse: "I will not leave you comfortless. I will come to you." So he is at the right hand of God, seated; but he is here, in the person of the Holy Spirit of God, moving in the singing, stirring in the speaking, quickening your memory, holding up before you your own sense of need, and then speaking to you as only God can speak, "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

How Is He Passing By?

He is passing by in the impression that has been made upon you in some evangelistic meeting. He is making his presence known in the singing. You could not persuade me that as we pass up and down the streets, and hear a snatch of a song yonder, and a bit of a whistle of a tune there, that it is simply because the music may be catchy and fascinating. I know why men have been singing, "He will not let my soul be lost." I know why they have been saying over and over, "He will hold me fast." This is the reason: "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." He is making his presence known in the pleadings of your mother. A little while ago you would have laughed at the tears, the pleadings, of your wife or your friend. To-day your mother's tears move you as no power of preaching can stir you. It is Jesus of Nazareth passing by.

Going through the northern part of the United States, we stopped at a certain city just to receive two of our special workers. Two thousand people, I suppose, came to say farewell to the parting evangelists, and to offer a word of greeting to us. Just as we were about to move out, the engineer stepped up on the rear platform. I was introduced to him. A friend said he was not a Christian. I besought him to yield to Christ. He said, "What shall I do, sir?" And I said, "Announce to these two thousand people here that you have become a Christian." "Well, sir," he said, "I could not speak myself, but you speak it." So I told them the engineer of our train had become a Christian. Later we were thundering away in the darkness up toward the North, and the engineer came back in the train, and he said, "I have had two Presidents of the United States as passengers in my time. President Theodore Roosevelt and President Grant I took through this country, but this is the first time in all my career that I have ever had the Saviour with me. I have got him, I have got him."

They told me that many of his train crew came to Christ. Why was it, do you think? I utterly disclaim any influence I might have had. I deprecate the power of any other man who may have spoken to him. I know why he came. They say that when he went to kiss his wife good-by the day he came down to take our train out, she threw her arms around his neck, and pulling his head down close to hers, she said, "Oh, my husband, I wish you were a Christian. The meetings have closed, and you are not saved." And then she said, with a sob, "It would be an awful thing for us to journey together here, and not yonder." When I saw the engineer, he said to me, "Do you know, it was my wife's sob. It was her tears." "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

From Darkness to Light

I bring you, in a word, the picture of the blind man who sat in his blindness, as some of you sit in your blindness to-night. He could not see. When I plead with you in the name of Jesus, when I call out to you to repent, I declare on the authority of the Bible that forgiveness is yours, pardon is yours, peace is yours all for the claiming. He could only feel. And he put feeling in the right place. Some of you have been saying, over and over, that you would become Christians if you were possessed of a certain kind of feeling, which you never could have until you do become Christians. All that the blind man could do was just to feel his need.

He could not see, he could not understand. But he heard that Jesus was near, and he stepped out into what seemed to be the blackness of darkness, and behold, it was light. Whittier says, "The steps of faith fall on the seeming void and find the rock beneath." And that is the way men come to God—out of the darkness—and then it is light. All men come that way.

In the Name of Jesus

Now I close my message by saying just a word or two on this question. What if you should not call upon him? If you do not, you cannot pray. I read in the Bible that there is only one name, and that is the name of Jesus. I read in God's Book that all petitions must be offered in his name. I read in my Bible that it is through his merit, and because of him, that I may cry to God. In the days of our Civil War a soldier was hurrying over the battlefield, and he saw a soldier who was dying, and stooped down to help him. The dying man said to him, "I wish I could do something for you. The only thing I could do would be to dictate a note to my father. You write it, and I will sign it." All the soldier had was an old, soiled envelope, so he took it out and the boy dictated this note: "Dear father: I am dying at the close of the battle. My friend, So-and-So, is helping me. If ever he should come to you, you help him." And then the boy took the pen in his fast-stiffening fingers, and wrote this, "For Charlie's sake." The war ended. The father of that boy was a great judge in one of our American cities. One day the soldier with the soiled envelope came into his office. The clerks would not let him in to see the judge. They said, "The judge is busy. You cannot see him." He waited on the outside.

Pretty soon the door opened, and the judge was hurrying past him, when the soldier stepped out with this soiled envelope. The judge thought it was the plea of a beggar, and waved him to one side. But the soldier stepped forward again and held the note up. And the father saw his boy's name, "For Charlie's sake." He turned and looked again. Then he threw his arms around the soldier, and said, "You come back into my office." He burst into tears, and said, "Everything I have is yours. You may live in my home. You may have the advantage of my position. You may have the aid of my money that comes with my position." The name did it. And I know the name:

> Sweetest name on mortal tongue,
> Sweetest note in seraph song,
> Sweetest carol ever sung,
> Jesus, blessed Jesus!

It has filled heaven with music and earth with peace and joy. And if you say, "I will not take him," then I cannot see how you can pray. If you do not call upon him your life will be a failure. You are a young lawyer, but you will be a failure without Jesus. You are a master musician, but you will be a failure without Jesus. You are a man of education, or a woman of culture, but you will fail without Jesus. He is passing by. One of three things you must do with him, and I ask you, which of these will you do? You may be indifferent to him, but it would seem to me that a man must have a heart of stone if he could be indifferent to Jesus. All that makes life worth living you got from him. You may reject him, but you will be hopeless if you reject him. You may accept him. God help you to do it. You may accept him, and if you take him, pardon is yours; and if you will claim him, peace is yours; and if you will lay hold upon him forgiveness is yours. Every sin blotted out. Every transgression put away. You may accept him.

> What means this eager, anxious throng,
> Which moves with busy haste along?
> In accents hushed, the throng reply,
> Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.
> And if you still this call refuse,
> And all his wondrous love abuse,
> Soon will he lightly from you turn,
> Your bitter cry for pardon spurn.
> Too late! Too late! will be the cry,
> Jesus of Nazareth has passed by!

"To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

China's Famine

HOW the wolf of famine threatens—
Threatens face to face.
Nearer, ever nearer presses—
Coming on apace.
Till they see his eye-balls gleaming
And his fangs they feel;
While before their senseless idols
They in blindness kneel.

Little babes with bony fingers—
Once their mother's pride—
Pleading for their wanted succor—
Must they be denied?
Oh! the agony of mothers
At that hunger-cry;
Nothing they can do to help them—
Only see them die!

Little children sold for money
Ere they know their name—
Sold to lives of bitter sorrow,
Lives of sin and shame;
Shall we see God's little children
Sold for lust and gold?
See their lives so early blighted—
Filled with grief untold?

Is there naught for us, O Christians?
Naught that we can do?
If we cannot save a million,
Shall we save a few?
Oh the splendor of a jewel
That our hands can bring,
When it sparkles with the glory
Of our Lord and King.

A Converted Priest's Struggle

IN THE spring of 1906 Signor D. A. was serving in his vocation of priest when the eruption of Vesuvius seriously damaged the family property in the province of Salerno. Contact with evangelical people produced a change in his religious views; his intercourse with Rev. Sciarelli brought upon him the condemnation of his bishop. While waiting for funds to bring him to America, he boldly conducted a journal aimed at purifying moral conditions among the higher clergy, for which he was excommunicated. Then came the earthquake at Messina, and he volunteered in the work of rescue, and found four helpless little ones whom no one wanted, and took them to his own home. Not one dollar did he receive of all the vast sums sent to Italy at that time for the care of the survivors; but his share of the family income was not sufficient for this added burden, and he opened a shop for the sale of oil, etc., that he might support the children. For more than two years he has been father, mother, nurse and teacher to these children. Now his means are exhausted. It is his ardent wish to come to the United States and take up the work of teacher, preacher, and temperance lecturer. Money is needed to settle his affairs in Italy, to pay passage for five, and to place the children in school here. It is a chance to save from ruin an individual and put five people in the way of becoming useful members of society. Any reader who is interested in this case may write to Eva M. Lake, Secretary Woman's Christian Temperance Union, 18 Columbia Avenue, Arlington, N. J.

From Him That Hath Not

By EUGENE THWING

DR. BOOKER T. WASHINGTON encouraged the negro business men to greater enterprise by quoting at their recent league convention the familiar maxim, "To him that hath shall be given." He omitted the other half—that seemingly harsh and cruel assertion, "and from him that hath not shall be taken even that which he hath."

One of the newspapers, commenting sadly on conditions which seem to prove the truth of the latter assertion, said:

> Poor little peoples all around the world, how fast the few things you have are being taken away from you! The Koreans lose the last shred of their ancient liberty. The Egyptians feel the tightening grip of the lion's paw, and the half-free Finns are being borne down to complete servitude. India had little left but a measure of free speech, and that is being restricted. In our own land, the negro's precious gift of equal liberty, constitutionally guaranteed, eludes his grasp with the enactment of some new grandfather clause or Jim Crow law every year; and even his right to work at a trade is being steadily taken away from him by the extension of white trade unions in the South.
> "Even that which he hath!" It is a hard fate for a poor man to lose that. Is there no way out of the ancient condemnation—out of that judgment which says that the rich man shall be ever richer, and the poor ever poorer? Perhaps there is not. Yet this is to be said—the conscience of the world, in this age, refuses to embrace any such doctrine of despair. It has reached a stage in human development where it is nearly ready, to say the least, to cease taking from the man who has little even that which he hath. The social mind has awakened. If there is any escape from the curse, some day mankind will try to find it.

FEW Bible texts are more often misunderstood than this one. It is not a curse nor a doctrine of despair; it is merely a statement of fact, calculated, if rightly understood, to come as a challenge and a spur to high endeavor. There is nothing harsh nor cruel about God's dealings with men. He is not a ruthless despoiler. Weakness and misfortune call out his tenderness. "The bruised reed he will not break, and the smoking flax he will not quench." But God has no patience with idleness and neglect of opportunity, whether of individuals or of nations. The command, "Take the talent from him and give it to him that hath ten talents," was not cruelty to an unfortunate, but punishment of a "wicked and slothful" servant.

THE talent which is not used is taken away; the strength which is not exercised melts into weakness; the opportunity which is not grasped slips beyond reach. "From him that hath not [improved the talent given him] shall be taken even that which he hath."

There is a vital meaning for every one of us in this Oriental aphorism. We have precious talents which sometimes we fail to recognize and use. At best we hold them lightly. In the strenuous life of to-day things assume wrong proportions and wrong relations. We magnify trifles; we exert ourselves tremendously over non-essentials. Like the prophet of Ahab, we are very "busy here and there" with tasks that don't count for much, and golden opportunities for the enrichment and exaltation of life slip by and are gone; talents for service and blessing to mankind are undeveloped and are taken from us; precious moments which might be crowded with treasure to last for all eternity pass out, empty of good, to accumulate a record of blame for the last day.

THE ringing challenge comes to us, "To him that hath shall be given," as a result, only, of using to the utmost what he hath, "and he shall have more abundance." Take an inventory; look up the neglected talents—what there is left of them—and bring them into the market-place, that the Lord when he comes may have his own with usury, and that we, until he comes, may have the joy of more abundant possession, with the greater power it gives us for blessing those about us.

"YOU have our firm regard and friendship in your dark moments," wrote one friend to another at a time of severe trial, when it seemed that the only possible consolation was warm brotherly sympathy. And the friend wrote back his heartfelt gratitude for the sympathy, but added this somewhat unusual statement: "There are no dark moments, my dear friend. At the worst they are only dim. It was dim this morning before the rain clouds and fog were burned up by the shining sun overhead. It was always bright above them, and now it's bright clear down to the ground. If the Lord 'makes his face shine upon you and gives you peace' how can there be dark days? I used to say over and over again from morning to night that verse from the forty-second Psalm, 'Why art thou cast down, O my soul; and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance.' That was some time ago, when I thought the days were dark, and I was trying to crowd down my doubt and complaining and grow a stock of faith, hoping for future brightness. Now I've almost forgotten that verse, because I don't say it over to myself any more. I've moved on a few verses in the same Psalm beyond the one that reads 'all thy waves and billows are gone over me,' and I think most of the verse that has come to be so definitely real in my case: 'Yet the Lord will command his loving kindness in the daytime, and in the night his song shall be with me.' He has commanded his loving kindness in the daytime; and you, dear fellow, have been one of his messengers to convey it to me by your sympathy and love. His song is with me in the night, and the night is not dark. 'If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee, but the night shineth as the day.' The time is past when I can say only 'I shall yet praise him.' I do praise him now, in the night."

He Careth

WHAT can it mean? Is it aught to Him
That the nights are long and the days are dim?
Can He be touched by the griefs I bear,
Which sadden the heart and whiten the hair?
Around His throne are eternal calms,
And strong, glad music of happy psalms,
And bliss, unruffled by any strife;
How can He care for my little life?

And yet I want Him to care for me.
While I live in this world where the sorrows be;
When the lights die down in the path I take;
When strength is feeble and friends forsake;
When love and music, that once did bless,
Have left me to silence and loneliness,
And my life-song changes to sobbing prayers—
Then my heart cries out for a God who cares.

Oh, wonderful story of deathless love!
Each child is dear to that heart above;
He fights for me when I cannot fight;
He comforts me in the gloom of night;
He lifts the burden, for He is strong;
He stills the sigh and awakens the song;
The sorrow that bowed me down He bears,
And loves and pardons because He cares.

Let all who are sad take heart again,
We are not alone in our hours of pain;
Our Father stoops from His throne above
To soothe and quiet us with His love.
He leaves us not when the storm is high,
And we have safety, for He is nigh.
Can it be trouble which He doth share?
Oh, rest in peace, for the Lord doth care.

Traveling in a Far Country

WRITING from the Tehri Border Village Mission at Landour, Himalayas, Rev. William Greet tells of the adventures, successes and reverses incidental to the work in his distant field.

"Tehri is a native-ruled State, comprising about 5,000 square miles of mountains, on whose steep and rugged sides are villages, estimated at 3,000. Landour is the principal market town for the greater part of the State, and from it, as our headquarters, we can reach by foot-tracks, often most precipitous, some one hundred and fifty of these villages.

"We were very glad to find that the advance portions of the Tehri Garhwal Gospel proved a success not only with those who speak the central patois, but with the dandy-men of Mussoorie, who come from so many different parts of the State. In spite of the many local differences, the language is readily recognized as their own. This is a hard field, but we are happy to have been enabled to give its people a translation of the Gospel, even if we are not the ones to do the reaping here. The new book, the first of any kind in their language, is the main object of interest in our present tours.

"The winter's touring, so far, has been marked by more friendliness on the part of the people toward us than ever before. Everywhere they have brought us handfuls of parched grain or some kind of food as a sort of welcome. They sat in the sun at our tent door, and at night we frequently had groups of men in our tent around the brazier of wood embers, discussing everything with us.

"Of little adventures incidental to mountain touring we have had our usual share. It would interest friends if we could snap off some of the little scenes and curious positions that we find ourselves in. At the entrance to one village was a wooden bridge, a roughly flattened tree about one foot wide and some twenty feet long, of course without fencing of any kind, and spanning a stream rushing between the rocks some fifteen feet below. The two men who were carrying Mrs. Greet in her sling-dandy just walked on over it as if it were nothing worse than any other foot-wide track, and baby followed in his box on the back of his coolie."

An Inspiring Life

I received the calendar and photogravure, and yesterday the book, Life Work of Louis Klopsch. They are all splendid. The book alone is worth more than the two dollars. I prize it more than I can tell, as I have been deeply interested in the great work Dr. Klopsch has been doing for years. I loved him dearly, and the photogravure will be an inspiration to me to do greater things. J. W. W.

New York's Factory Fire Horror

Over 140 Shirt-waist Workers, Mostly Women and Girls, Perish in Conflagration

ONE of the most terrible conflagrations New York City has ever witnessed occurred on the evening of Saturday, March 25, and involved a loss of upwards of 140 human lives. There are in New York City some 12,000 factories, in which over 700,000 workers, chiefly women, are employed; yet notwithstanding the building reforms of recent years, it is claimed that not more than one building in twelve is fireproof or adequately supplied with means of saving life in a conflagration. It was in a building of this class—the large ten-story structure, Nos. 23-29 Washington Place, on the corner of Greene street, that the latest disaster occurred. The upper floors of the building were occupied as workrooms and offices by the Triangle Shirtwaist Company. From some cause still unknown, fire broke out just about the time of closing work for the day. It may have been smouldering for hours undetected. The hundreds of shirtwaist makers had just been paid, and were preparing to go home, when smoke began to make itself felt on the eighth and ninth floors. Panic instantly followed. There was a rush for the two elevators, a hurried gathering of wraps and hats, a shrill shrieking of alarmed women and girls. The men tried their best to stem the frantic rush for the elevators and stairways, and shouted words of warning to the girls who made a dash for the windows. Dense clouds of smoke poured out of the windows of the three upper stories.

The Mad Rush to Escape

An alarm had been sent out and the firemen were soon on the scene, but the tragedy was already under full headway. Frenzied girls began to leap from the windows only to meet certain death on the sidewalk below. Over fifty met their fate in this terrible manner, horrifying the crowd of spectators who assembled to watch the fire. So great was the height that neither fire-nets nor ladders could save the victims. Some of the poor creatures fell with such force as to break through the basement vault lights of glass and steel on the sidewalk. Most of the women were on the ninth floor. The Shirtwaist Company had on its payroll over eight hundred, including cutters, fitters and machine operatives of various kinds. All around the workrooms were piles of light material used in making shirtwaists, quantities of wrapping paper and card signs, all of which added ready fuel to the flames. Some of the survivors say that the light cotton fabrics, which hung from rods and lines, flashed up like celluloid.

Meanwhile the elevators were working rapidly, carrying about twenty down to safety on each trip. There was a fierce struggle every time an elevator started. Some of those who could not get on board owing to the crush, seized the cable, attempting to slide down to safety, but few could retain their hold and they fell headlong down the shaft, to meet death at the bottom.

Had it not been for the panic, many more might have escaped by the roof. As it was, a considerable number found safety by that means.

Leaping to Certain Death

On the eighth floor of the building, where the fire seems to have started, flaming sheets of light cotton fabric were whirled upward through the stairways and fell among the operators on the ninth floor, where four hundred girls were at work at sewing machines. So suddenly were they enwrapped by the flames that few had opportunity to even think of escape. Scores of bodies were found by the firemen on this floor lying near the windows, while many others met their death by frantically hurling themselves to the street below. The tenth floor, which was the last to catch fire, was filled with crates, boxes, bales of cloth and card-board stock. Here the flames raged like a furnace.

There were many narrow escapes. One girl, Anna Dougherty, who had been among the first to find safety by way of the stairs, was rendered temporarily insane by fright. With clothing torn and hair flying, she ran toward Broadway, hysterically shrieking, "Don't let them hurt me! Don't let them hurt me!" Shoppers near Astor Place were startled, as they knew nothing of the tragedy that was being enacted a few blocks off. She was taken to a drug store, and after quieting down told the story of the panic of the girls, who did not know which way to turn. Some ran to the rear where there was a single fire-escape, but it soon collapsed under their weight; others rushed to the elevators and stairs and still others, frenzied with terror, huddled at the windows. This girl fell to the floor and would undoubtedly have perished had not an office-boy half dragged her to the roof where, when she saw the open sky and felt the cool air, she fell on her knees and offered a fervent prayer of thanksgiving.

Doubtless many of the poor girls who met their death by jumping from the windows were rendered insane by fear before they took the fatal leap. Spectators in the street could see them huddled in white-faced groups while the flames seemed to envelop them. Some who leaped did so with hair and clothing ablaze. They had simply been hemmed in and all avenues of escape cut off before they sprang out of the inferno into the air vainly hoping to be caught by someone below. Several men on the street attempted to save lives by catching the leaping girls in a horse blanket. They formed a ring and held the blanket while others shouted directions to the girls. One frantic creature was seen at a ninth-story window ready to leap. She lifted her eyes toward heaven as if in mute prayer for help, and then, with a loud scream, she jumped. Her slender body shot swiftly downward and struck the blanket with such force that it went through it as though it had been a sheet of linen, and the young life was crushed out on the stone sidewalk. Hardly had she struck when a companion leaped and shared the same horrible fate. The two lay together, a mass of broken bones on the pavement. At this time girls were leaping from the other stories. Cries of warning from the street were of no avail.

The New York Shirtwaist Factory in Which Over 140 Perished by Fire

When at last the fire began to die down and the firemen commenced to take out the bodies, a great crowd estimated at over 100,000, filled the streets in front of the burned building. Many of them were relatives of the victims. As the firemen and ambulance surgeons proceeded with their rescue work, many pitiful scenes took place when victims were identified by mothers, fathers or brothers. Two girls were found alive and breathing on one of the floors, under a pile of dead; both died later in the hospital. One man was found at the bottom of the elevator shaft, alive and half-submerged in water. Joseph Zito and Joseph Gaspary, the two elevator men, proved themselves real heroes. Through their splendid courage they saved scores of girls who would certainly have perished but for their help. After the last trips they staggered out of the elevators with clothing ablaze and faces and hands literally roasted by fire. Their conduct receives on all sides the highest praise.

Taking Out the Dead

All night and all day Sunday the firemen and police continued to take out bodies from the building. The last two to be taken out were those of two young girls who were found in the sub-cellar and who were among those who leaped from the windows. Their bodies had gone clean through the glass and iron sidewalks to the cellar below. Twenty-four of the rescued were taken to the city hospitals suffering from serious injuries and some of them are expected to die. The bodies of the unidentified dead were placed in the same rough wooden coffins that were used for the victims of the Slocum steamer disaster, several years ago. About sixty bodies remained unidentified, many being so badly burned as to be beyond recognition.

The District Attorney has already begun an investigation into the causes leading to the disaster and it promises to be thorough. It is unquestionable that the building was inadequately supplied with facilities for escaping fire. Many of those who perished were the sole support of relatives, and Mayor Gaynor has issued a call for relief to aid the bereaved families. A large majority of the employees were foreigners, including Poles, Russians, Bohemians, Germans and Italians, and a considerable number were Jewish.

Sad Scenes at the Morgue

At the improvised morgue on the Charities Pier on East Twenty-sixth Street, the bodies of the unidentified victims were visited by thousands on Sunday, including many friends who wished to identify their missing ones. The doctors, however, believed that except in a few cases identification would be almost impossible, the flame having not only destroyed the clothing but burned the victims out of all semblance to humanity.

Fifty subpœnas have been issued by the fire marshal for the coming investigation. The firemen found fifty bodies piled up against the door on the ninth floor. Whether the doors were locked or not at the time of the fire will be developed by the official inquiry. It is supposed that the first rush in the mad effort to escape was made toward these stairways, and that, finding escape in that direction impossible, the frantic victims surged to the windows leading to the fire escape in such numbers that that flimsy structure soon gave way, as already stated.

A majority of the victims were young girls. Of those indentified up to Monday, 16 were men and nearly 70 were women, 50 of them of ages ranging from fourteen to twenty.

STRIVING FOR PEACE IN MEXICO

Lieutenant Foulois and Aviator Parmalee Flying Over the Encampment at San Antonio, Texas

THE political aspects of the Mexican revolution and the great mobilization of United States troops in Texas have recently belittled the results of the actual fighting that has been done. At Washington it has been admitted in the Presidential circle that the present army manœuvres along the Mexican border are taking place at the request of President Diaz of Mexico. The Mexican Government feels itself entirely competent to deal with the situation, if the neutrality of the neighboring American territory is strictly preserved. President Diaz asked for the enforcement of these neutrality laws, evidently without any expectation of the vast demonstration which has resulted. In Mexico the results of this massing of the troops seem to have been a greater unsettling of conditions. Anti-American feeling is strong in many parts of Mexico, and the press of all Latin America has joined in the cry, "Anything rather than American occupation." Reports which have escaped the censors claim that President Diaz has broken entirely with the association which is composed of the great bankers of Mexico City. They keenly resent his inviting outside interference.

This fear of international hostilities is entirely on the Mexican side of the border. Though the officers in the various divisions of the United States Army near the frontier have continually expressed their belief that the public was being kept in the dark as to the final aim of the mobilization, it has been announced at Washington that only some open violation of international peace conditions by the Mexicans can start any real trouble. All Washington is laughing at the idea of a Mexican-Japanese alliance. The existence of any treaty other than a commerce agreement has been emphatically denied by both countries.

President Taft told the Japanese Ambassador, whom he had requested to call, that he was much pleased by the promptness with which Japan denied the existence of any treaty with Mexico. In reply to questions on the subject, Mr. Taft said, "There certainly cannot be the slightest basis for talk like this. I know of my personal knowledge that never within my recollection were the relations between the United States and Japan more friendly than at the present time, and war talk more absurd."

The operations of the revolutionists have been carried on with more semblance of organized warfare. They have succeeded in placing the city of Chihuahua in a complete state of siege. Food has become scarce and prices have soared to almost unbelievable figures. The fortunes of war seem to award victory to each side in about even proportions. The insurrectionist forces of General Sanchez's command have succeeded in cutting all communcation with the city of Ojinaga. General Madero has gathered his troops near Juarez and the five hundred federalists there fear he is planning an attack. Dispatches from other points tell of disaffection in the insurgent ranks and the retreat of the main body that has been operating just south of the Arizona border.

For a few days the hope of all who wish for peace centred on Señor José Limantour, Mexico's Financial Minister. Señor Limantour left New York for Mexico City in great haste, and it was believed that he carried proposals from the representatives of the revolutionists. The party in Mexico which has only recently broken with the Diaz régime, as well as the political malcontents in the field, looked to Señor Limantour as a possible peace agent. He has inaugurated previous reforms in Mexico, and has no doubt returned there for the purpose of attempting reforms that will satisfy the revolutionists. His arrival in Mexico City, however, was attended by general disappointment, as he then stated that his plans in no way included any negotiations with the Madero faction while it was still under arms. The third day after his arrival, admitting that Mexico is facing a crisis even greater than he had believed, Minister of Finance Limantour said that the administration had no definite plans for the solution of the problems confronting the government, and had no alternative but to continue its military programme. Notwithstanding the government's aggressive attitude, reforms which were intended to remedy the alleged grievances were under consideration. The most important of these reforms was that relative to the revision of the electoral laws.

The operations in the American camps only a few hundred miles north of the border have been of the regular training-camp order. General target practice has been carried out and the various branches of the troops have been put at hard training, that they may be "in every way prepared for the field."

The training of recruits is being pushed forward with all speed. The regular troops are being inured to long marches under war conditions. The various brigades are being ordered on practice marches and general training expeditions. On all these "hikes," as the soldiers call them, the baggage is reduced to the smallest possible war equipment. The soldier's pack under these conditions contains twenty pounds of ammunition, and a shelter tent in addition to the regular items. The first section to go on one of these expeditions was the first brigade of the division, composed of the eleventh, fifteenth and eighteenth infantry regiments, under command of Brigadier-General Frederick A. Smith, to march to Leon Springs. The distance is twenty-five miles northwest of San Antonio and the brigade will probably remain away from the manœuvre camp for one week.

Because of the scarcity of water in the vicinity of San Antonio there will be no extended manœuvre drills of the entire division, and the belief is growing among the army officers that if the moves on the diplomatic chess board result in re-establishing peace in Mexico the troops concentrated there will be immediately ordered to return to the various military posts throughout the United States.

The most interesting development in the manœuvre camp is the brilliant success that has attended the tests of an army aeroplane scouting under conditions approximating those of actual warfare. In the first trial Lieutenant B. D. Foulois, of the Signal Corps, and Philip O. Parmalee, the aviator, flew from the division encampment to Leon Springs, delivered a message to a theoretical division and returned. The time taken was one hour and forty-five minutes. The distance flown was twenty-six miles going and thirty miles coming back; the elevation from a thousand to eighteen hundred feet the entire time.

The flight from the field began at fifteen minutes after three o'clock and the return was at five o'clock. The aeroplane landed just behind its hangar as quietly and calmly as a bird, and the two men were by no means disheveled, as they would have been from a thirty-mile cross country trip in an automobile.

The Progress of Arbitration

THOUGH great reforms may move slowly, they move none the less surely. In recent years arbitration has made progress, even amid stress and opposition. It is therefore significant at a time when war talk is rife, and when the great nations are busy adding to their fleets and their armaments, that the movement for the promotion of peace should have received its strongest impulse and its most convincing presentation from an unexpected quarter. In a speech in the British Parliament a few days ago, Sir Edward Grey, Secretary for Foreign Affairs, sounded a note that lifted the peace discussion far above the level of ordinary parliamentary debate. He advanced the principle so often proclaimed by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that no dispute can possibly arise between civilized nations which is incapable of adjustment by judicial arbitration. He did not plead for a treaty that would bind certain powers against certain other powers, as two countries might agree to general arbitration on all questions arising between them without entering into any offensive or defensive alliance. His able argument found an eloquent echo in the leading churches throughout Great Britain and has awakened the hope that his example may be followed by statesmen elsewhere. France is ready for a step in the same direction, and other nations will follow.

Thus by foregleams increasing in number and emphasis we may note the tide of public sentiment setting in peaceward. The enlightened races are beginning to realize that if our boasted Christianity and civilization be worth a snap of the fingers, they should lead us in the direction of goodwill and peace among men. Of course, the path may be a long one and it will not be without its obstacles, for there are still many who hold with Bismarck that "pointed bullets are better than pointed speeches"; but the intelligence of two great continents is rapidly coming to the conclusion that war is the greatest of all crimes, that force is no remedy for national evils, and that the so-called science of war is sowing to reap the "devil's harvest."

We rejoice that the Church and its allied organizations are taking a united stand in favor of general arbitration. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, representing over 15,000,000 members, has put on record the declaration that "war is evil and that Christian nations should determine by obligatory arbitration the international differences which cannot be settled by diplomacy. For Christian States in the twentieth century to refuse to arbitrate and to insist on war will be to bring reproach on the Christian name." To this is added their united approval of proposals "looking to a general arbitration treaty between the United States, Great Britain and other nations." Sunday, April 2, was observed as "Arbitration Sunday" by all the American Churches and simultaneously by the British Churches. When the next Peace Conference meets at The Hague, we hope to see the results of the influence of the Christian Church felt in its sessions. From now on its place should be in the very front of the great movement which is spreading throughout the civilized world, to put an end to war by the establishment of an international Peace Court with power to enforce its decisions.

Shakespeare's Laurels

FOR nearly three centuries, Shakespeare has sat enthroned as one of the great princes of the world's literature. Time and again, the efforts of cranks and detractors to give his laurels to another have been exploded and exposed to ridicule. Repeatedly has the cry of "impostor" been echoed around the world by those who claim that Bacon and not Shakespeare wrote the works which bear the latter's name. Since Ignatius Donnelly's Great Cryptogram, in which, twenty years ago, he endeavored to prove Bacon's authorship, many others have entered the field of controversy. The latest is an Englishman, Dr. Orville Owen, who is digging in the bed of the river Wye at Chepstow, in Monmouthshire, under extraordinary difficulties, in the belief and hope that he will find proofs that not only did Bacon write the works of Shakespeare and many other famous books, but that he was the son of Queen Elizabeth. The doctor contends that the proofs were hidden by Bacon himself, who gave in cipher, in an edition of Sir Philip Sidney's Acadia, an account of his act. Doubtless the result will prove that Dr. Owen's enthusiasm and energy are misdirected and wasted. Shakespeare has worn his mantle of fame so long, and it fits him so well, that it would look altogether out of place if draped around another. His laurels are not in danger, nor are they likely to be jeopardized by anything that may be found under the river with the interrogative name.

The Bible in Illinois Schools

SOME time ago the Supreme Court of Illinois rendered a decision excluding the Bible from the public schools of that State. That this was a distinct step backward in a moral sense has now become convincingly evident, and the Chicago Presbytery, reflecting the views not only of that denomination, but of thoughtful citizens generally, has addressed a petition to the Supreme Court praying for a reconsideration of its decision. In the petition it is pointed out that present conditions in Chicago are such as to demand the strengthening of moral education at every point. They cite the fact that seven other States have declared that the Bible is not a sectarian book, and that the Illinois court alone enjoys the doubtful distinction of pronouncing it sectarian as a whole. The petition also shows that, in four instances at least, the rulings of the Court are opposed to previous renderings by the same tribunal; and finally, that its decision is in direct conflict with that of the United States Supreme Court, and if carried to its logical conclusion would abolish religious exercises in connection with all bodies enjoying any measure of State support. It concludes with the general statement that it is a contravention of all precedents. This is a fair and accurate presentation of the case. It has been a matter of surprise to many that no steps have been taken to have the decision reviewed; but the action of the Chicago Presbytery is in that direction. To strip our schools of that moral training of which the Bible is the universally recognized expositor, is to deprive our children of the basis which is essential to all development of character and to send them out into the battle of life burdened with a heavy handicap.

Dr. Jowett's Stirring Message

AMERICANS will soon judge for themselves as to the quality of the utterances of the Rev. J. H. Jowett, the great English preacher who now occupies the pulpit of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York. This church for three years in succession has urged its claims upon him and has at last persuaded him to undertake the pastorate. His personality and magnetism are already familiar to many Americans who have had the privilege of listening to him at Northfield. In his farewell sermon in Birmingham, he told his people something about the message he would bring to America. The words are so striking and beautiful that they are worth repeating:

> I came to Carrs Lane with very much fear and trembling, and I brought a Gospel that I have proved. How vividly I remember the Sunday morning when my ministry began, and I came down to conduct the first service. Every nerve in my body was stretched and strained. My soul was the huntingplace of countless timidities and countless fears, but I had no doubt about my Gospel. I very humbly and I very gladly believe that with the passage of these sixteen years the Gospel I preached has gained in height and depth and length and breadth, and that I have been privileged by the help of your fellowship, of your affection, of your constant forbearance and your many prayers, to enter more intimately into the love of God that passeth knowledge. That love lays hold upon me today with a stronger grip than ever, and with that Gospel I finish my work at Carrs Lane, and with that same Gospel I shall begin my work in New York. Now, that is all I want to say about myself.

These words came from the modesty, the self-effacement of a spiritual mind. But there was a clarion-blast at the close of that farewell sermon, which deserves to be heard throughout the world. This was his eloquent conclusion:

> We are not ambitious, if we are Christians, for something outside us; we are ambitious to realize something within us. We are never going to golden streets in heaven unless there are first of all golden streets in our souls. The golden streets of paradise are first of all to be found in the radiant highways of the spirit, and the pearly gates of paradise are first of all to be found in pure, lustrous motives that open out into rooms and fields of unselfish service. No one is going to have anything worth calling a harp in glory who has not already harped music in his own soul. But these things are symbolisms not of a heaven outside, but of a heaven within. And the only crown I covet is a crown of glory, which is a crown of life.
> The supreme ambition of the apostle Paul was for a certain quality of soul, a certain nature, quality, beauty, glory of life. I want to ask you, what ambition you would place alongside this? What is there to be named in comparison with it? I suppose that when we reach our fiftieth birthday, there are many things that once concerned us that begin to look very little. When we reach even the prime of our life, there are certain things that begin to drop as unworthy of a man's ambition and crown. Mere ease sours into disquietude. Money has fewer and fewer markets as we get older. Fame turns tawdry, like street decorations after the rain. In every other kind of ambition "the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." But the apostolic ambition lives on, and endures, and is satisfying—the ambition which has partnership in the purposes of Christ, which has fellowship with the heart of Christ, which seeks to become clothed in the glory of Christ.

Items of Interest

—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD announced that the tercentenary celebration of the Authorized or King James' Version of the English Bible would be observed in London on March 21-26. There were many notable gatherings, both church and social. A fine display of Bibles was on exhibition in the British Museum. There was a reception at Buckingham Palace to a deputation from British and Foreign Bible Societies. The Archbishop of Canterbury represented the various Protestant denominations of the kingdom. King George was presented with a specially bound copy of the Bible; he expressed his thanks and appreciation in a few apt sentences, in which he emphasized the glorious privilege the people secured in obtaining the right and power to search themselves for the truths and consolation of faith.

—ANTIQUARIANS EXCAVATING in Abyssinia have recently uncovered the remains of a city which it is believed flourished more than 2,000 years before the Christian era. The ruins of a vast Temple of the Sun have been brought to light, and it is believed that this was the temple to which Herodotus referred as standing in a green meadow near the ancient city of Meroe. Probably the ruins just laid bare are a part of that mighty and renowned city of the early time. There are no cities or even towns in Abyssinia-Ethiopia to-day, but long before the time of Solomon this country boasted magnificent piles of masonry, the splendors of which have never since been surpassed, forming great centres of population to which flocked men and women from every quarter of the then known world.

—ENGLAND AND FRANCE have recently brought pressure to bear on the government of Liberia to compel the passage of several reform measures by its Congress. Due to many serious faults in the judicial system of the land it has been impossible for the government to borrow from the great European bankers. Foreign capital invested there has not been considered safe. A visit from Roland P. Falkner, Liberia's foreign financial representative, to Monrovia convinced President Barclay and his Cabinet that the judicial reforms must be enacted, and the boundary disputes settled. According to the recent decisions the French boundary has been permanently established and the rich district of Kanre Lahun becomes a part of the British Empire in exchange for $20,000 and a strip of territory of about equal size that is located a bit farther to the southeast. At the next session of Congress the entire judicial system will be reformed.

The Panama Canal Locks

COLONEL GEORGE W. GOETHALS, chief engineer of the Panama Canal, made an address on the stupendous work which he has undertaken, which has been printed in the National Geographic Magazine. He has this to say of the locks which form so important a part in this gigantic undertaking: "The canal which is now building consists of a sea-level entrance channel from the sea through Limon Bay to Gatun, about seven miles long, 500 feet bottom width and 41 feet deep at mean tide. At Gatun the 85-foot lake level is obtained by a dam across the valley. The lake is confined on the Pacific side by a dam between the hills at Pedro Miguel, 32 miles away. The lake thus formed will have an area of 164 square miles and a channel depth of not less than 45 feet at normal stage. At Gatun ships will pass from the sea to the lake level, and vice versa, by three locks in flight. On the Pacific side there will be one lift of 30 feet at Pedro Miguel to a small lake held at 55 feet above sea level by dams at Miraflores, where two lifts overcome the difference of level to the sea. The channel between the locks on the Pacific side will be 500 feet wide at the bottom and 45 feet deep, and below the Miraflores locks the sea-level section, about eight miles in length, will be 500 feet wide at the bottom and 45 feet deep at mean tide. The Pedro Miguel locks connect the summit or 86-foot level with the 55-foot level. The excavation for the locks, amounting to 770,000 cubic yards, is completed, and of the 837,400 cubic yards of concrete required for their construction, 57 per cent. is completed. The west dam connects the head of the locks with the hills to the northwest and performs the same function at the south end of the lake that the Gatun dam does at the north. It is to be of earth, about 1,400 feet long, 40 feet wide at the top, which will be at reference 107 above mean tide, and have side slopes of 8:1. It will be subjected to a maximum head of 40 feet, though the average head is from 25 to 30 feet. In its construction two rock piles are formed; between these two masses of material (from which an existing stratum of gravel was removed) selected material will be placed properly puddled and rolled. This central portion will have a thickness of 140 feet at the bottom. Concrete core walls will connect the dam with the hill and lock. The dam, which contains about 1,000,000 cubic yards, is 26 per cent. completed. The natural surface of the ground from the east wall to an adjacent hill is above the upper level, but it is to some extent impervious to water. To cut off any possible flow, the lock wall is returned toward the hill, with which it will be connected by a concrete core wall." This gigantic undertaking is worthy of the genius, ability and resources of our great country, and will be one of the greatest monuments of modern times. It will increase the commerce, good fellowship and religious love of the nations of the earth. The perfect sanitation, the cutting of this river through dry land, the preservation of fountains of fresh water, and the local and universal blessings promised, materialize the vision of the prophet, in which rivers were cut through dry land and fountains of refreshment formed.

I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys; I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water. (Isa. 41:18.)

Charged $313 for Prayers

There is a report of a singular suit in the Superior Court of Springfield, Mass., claiming some $300 or more for religious services rendered. The bill of particulars claims $13 for the prayer offered when the man was on his deathbed and $6 a week for fifty weeks for repeating daily in the synagogue the Kaddish or prayers for the repose of the man's soul. The Jewish rabbi or Christian minister has a right to reasonable compensation for his service, but this cold-blooded plan of $13 a prayer for the dying man and $6 a week for prayers for his spirit has such a metallic sound that it shocks the soul. Fortunately such rude greed upon the part of rabbi, priest or minister is exceptional, and yet avarice is so cunning that religious teachers of high standing and widespread influence have not always been proof against it. The claim of the purchase of God's favor for money is a blasphemy shocking beyond all expression. What a rebuke is administered to this thought where Peter says:

Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. (Acts 8:20.)

Twenty Year Term

The Bible and Newspaper recorded the murder of her only son by Mrs. Melber, who forced a deadly acid down his throat, a cold night in January, near Albany, N. Y. We hoped that the plea of insanity which her lawyer made would be sustained, and that an insane asylum instead of a prison would receive her. The jury, however, found her guilty, and a minimum sentence of twenty years of hard labor in Auburn prison and a maximum of incarceration for life was the sentence imposed upon her by Judge Howard. The jury was no doubt just in holding her to an accountability, but she was badly handicapped in the race of life. She was born into her own home the child of a poor, miserable, wretched, worthless drunkard. She married a young man who with her had to go to the poorhouse, where he faded away with consumption. She has consumption, it is said, and will last only a little while. Society ought to have given better help to this unfortunate weakling and degenerate. Weakened with tuberculosis, she could make a living for herself, but it seems that she could not make it for herself and earn board for the child. She was turned away from benevolent institutions, which would gladly have cared for the child if he could have paid his own way, but they had no room nor pennies for this pauper, for this child of physical and moral weakness. The mother committed one of the blackest of crimes and suffers the punishment; but society is not without blame in refusing help to such a creature as she. When even a mother's love fails, God's love still remains.

Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion upon the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. (Isa. 49:15.)

Bird Chorus at Funeral

Mr. Edward N. Hubbard of Middletown, Conn., died recently, and there was a peculiar feature of the funeral service at the homestead. Suddenly there burst sweet music from the throats of many song birds. The chorus filled every room and the effect upon the mourners was magical. The melody came from an immense cage containing one hundred birds of rare plumage and song. Mr. Hubbard was a great lover of birds, and they knew and loved him strangely in return, and for this reason they were allowed to sing the requiem. Mr. Hubbard was a good man and his going was not the end but the beginning of life, and the chorus of the birds was no doubt answered by the angel choirs as he passed out of the winter into the springtime of everlasting life, beauty and song. The Scriptural description of spring is typical of the realm into which he went.

For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come. (Solomon's Song 2:11, 12.)

Trolley Car Safety Appliances

In compliance with orders from the Public Service Commission, the surface car companies of New York City in the past two years have expended $250,000 equipping their cars with wheel-guards and fenders. Altogether 6,350 cars have been equipped with wheel-guards in the Greater City, while 350 cars have been supplied with projecting fenders. The effect of the general use of these safety devices is shown in the falling off of the number of persons killed. Before the safety appliances were used an average of almost one person each day was killed. Since the use of such protections the reports show the death of only one person every two days from street car accidents, so that the reduction in the mortality is fifty per cent. One every other day is many times too many, but it is a great improvement on the death of one a day, the fearful massacre so much of which could have been prevented. The speed and craze of our time is unfriendly to life, and the heart of benevolence has demanded that we have better legal provisions for the protection of human life. The wheels of the automobile and the trolley car with their shocking harvest of death bring sensibly to mind the statement of the Divine Word:

Truly, as the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death. (I. Sam. 20:3.)

Millionaire Made His Mark

John Leahy, a millionaire of Long Island, who died recently, signed all his legal documents by making a mark, as he was unable to read or write. He came from Ireland, and by his industry he secured the ownership of a little truck farm which at the time of consolidation became a part of Greater New York City. He sold his farm for $300,000 and went out farther on the island to Lakeville, where he became a neighbor of William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and continued to prosper with his trades and investments until he had accumulated over a million dollars. Mr. Vanderbilt tried very hard to buy him out, but he had plenty of money and did not see any reason why he should not remain in the colony of the rich. He had naturally a strong intellect, had keen Irish mother-wit, had splendid judgment and rugged honesty, and was a perpetual motion of industry. These things in a certain sense compensated for his lack of education. It is a pity, however, that the man did not take the few hours or the few days necessary to learn to read and write, and thus largely increase his personal happiness and personal worth. In early days, when school advantages were poor or wanting, men had to educate themselves, and some of them did it singularly well; but in these days there is no excuse for any, young or old, who will not learn to read and write. Education is important, but the good character of the Irish gardener was still more important. The illiterate millionaire was a long way from the beginnings of written language, which has preserved to us the Bible and the doings of the centuries that are past. In the description of the clothing of the high priest mention is made of a most important writing.

And they made the plate of the holy crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing, like to the engraving of a signet, Holiness to the Lord. (Ex. 39:30.)

GRENFELL OF LABRADOR

I WISH you could have met him just as I did; for in addition to all the letters that follow his name, Wilfred Thomason Grenfell, M.D., LL.D., C.M.G., M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., has the greatest claim of any I have ever met to the title M-A-N. "The Uncrowned King of Labrador" is a brave sobriquet, yet it seems the most fitting of all for this remarkable man. Doctor, magistrate, author, skipper, educator, philanthropist, missionary and adventurer, he stands unique in the ranks of living heroes. When asked to tell of the beginnings of his work Dr. Grenfell referred to a little article which, in response to persistent requests, he published some time ago under the title "A Bit of Autobiography."

"In 1883, while studying medicine in London," said Dr. Grenfell, "I was attracted by a huge crowd going into a large tent. Singing was going on inside and I was led to enter by a spirit of curiosity. I listened to Dwight L. Moody, and came to the conclusion that my religious life had been a humbug. I vowed in future that I would either give it up or make it real. It was obviously a thing not to be played with.

"My medical course being finished I began to cast about for some way in which I could satisfy the aspirations of a young medical man and combine with them a desire for adventure and definite Christian work. Sir Frederick Treves, the famous surgeon, also a daring sailor and master mariner, suggested my seeing whether or not a doctor could live at sea among the deep-sea fishermen on one of the vessels of the society, for which he was a member of the council.

"Encouraged by the results of my work in the North Sea, in 1892 I was loaned the largest sailing vessel belonging to the society, and sailed for the Labrador Coast to see whether among English-speaking fishermen of the Northwest Atlantic similar results might be achieved. In three months I had 900 patients to whom I could prescribe religion as well as pills and plasters without fear of denominational interference.

"I witnessed a condition of poverty to which I had been quite a stranger on the other side of the Atlantic. Unable to do on the ship to those men as we would have them do unto us under similar circumstances, we called on the way home at St. Johns, Newfoundland, and laid the matter before the merchants, asking for help to build a hospital on the land, and promising to bring out a doctor and nurse to live there if they built it."

Year after year since that beginning in 1892 progress has been the watchword, and adventure the lot, of this intrepid doctor and his volunteer associates. When he was addressing a great audience in New York not long ago the doctor used the following story as an illustration: "I spent the night there and next morning hitched up the dogs and started across the bay. It was late in the spring, April 21, and the ice was a bit broken up—but one gets used to that. Presently I noticed that the field was swaying a good deal, and I had only time to learn that I was driving over mere slush composed of ice fragments before I was into it—sledge, dogs and all. I soon cut the traces, loosening the dogs and allowing the komatik to sink. It looked like the end. The dogs were climbing about me trying to get upon my shoulders. One at last climbed out upon an ice pan and gave me some help, for I fastened his trace to my wrist and pulled myself after him. When I had gotten onto the pan the rest of the dogs followed in my wake and I pulled them up after me. I had lost most of my clothing and, as the instinct of self-preservation is strong, I stabbed several of the dogs and clothed myself in their skins. Night came on and the ice was drifting out to sea, so I turned in amongst the remaining dogs and went to sleep. When the next morning dawned I found that the wind had changed and I was back near shore. I could see where the hospital and the village lay behind the hills. With the traces and the bones of my dogs I made a flag pole and sacrificed my last garment for a flag. It was seen from the shore and soon a boat was coming for me through the rifts and being pulled over the floe. Those great big husky men grabbed me by both hands. The tears were streaming down their faces and they hadn't a word to say for themselves."

Along all the lines of his work Dr. Grenfell has had most remarkable success. In 1896 a small co-operative store was started at Red Bay in the Straits of Belle Isle, to help the settlers to escape the "truck system" of trade and the consequent loss of independence and thrift. This has since spread to a series of eight with very beneficial results to the very poorest. In connection with the cooperative store at Flowers Cove, an industry of making seal skin boots has sprung up, and 1,500 pairs of boots were exported last summer. Around these small industries it is possible to aggregate women and children in the winter for the purpose of better education. Cloth-weaving has been introduced and has spread along the coast. Several hundred dollars' worth of rugs, homespuns, and other products have been sold. Some excellent woven rabbit skin rugs have proved a new use for these natural products. During the last year considerable progress has been made in the weaving of homespun—four prizes were secured in open exhibition in St. Johns, Newfoundland.

Several years ago Dr. Grenfell imported a number of reindeer from Lapland and has succeeded in acclimatizing them. They now number nearly nine hundred and afford milk, meat and valuable hides. No possible industry that could benefit the people has been neglected. Careful experiment has proven that agriculture is not impossible, and considerable success has attended the introduction of hardy plants. A saw-mill has been erected and a plant for polishing labradorite (Labrador bluestone) has been installed.

Though engrossed in this great work of building an economic unit in Labrador, Dr. Grenfell has never neglected the great call which first took him to the nether North. The messages of mercy and of love—both human and divine—have made him the hero of these hardy Northerners. Perhaps this is how it has all come about:

Dr. Grenfell in Arctic Outfit

"Once when Dr. Grenfell was wintering at St. Anthony, on what is called the French Shore, there came in great haste from Conch, a point sixty miles distant, a sled with an urgent summons to the bedside of a man who lay dying of hemorrhage," says Norman Duncan, who has spent a season with the doctor. "And while the doctor was preparing for this journey a second sled arrived with a message from another place to the effect that the doctor should call at once to treat a boy who had broken his thigh.

"The doctor thought best to visit first the lad with the broken leg, and at 10 o'clock that night he was at his bedside. It had been a black, dark night, with the roads precipitous, the dogs uncontrollable and the physician in great haste. The doctor thought many a time that there would be more than one broken limb by the time of his arrival. But there was no misadventure, and he found the lad in great pain, wondering why he must suffer so. Every minute there would be a jerk, a flash of pain, and a cry to his father, who was holding him all the time.

"The doctor was glad to get the chloroform mask over the boy's face—he is a sympathetic man; glad, always, to ease pain. The broken bone was set after some difficulty and the doctor had a cup of tea, after which he retired to a bed on the floor for a nap until daylight, as it was impossible to continue farther in the black night. After his dogs were harnessed and he was ready to depart, the little patient had awakened and was merrily calling to the doctor. 'He was as merry as a cricket,' says the doctor, 'when I bade him good-by.' . . .

"When the doctor reached the coast, for the trip to Conch was over the level ice of the sea, there was a man waiting to intercept him, as the news of his probable coming had spread. The man had a fresh team of dogs and wished him to visit a sick friend on an island. It was not much out of his way, and the doctor consented. But he had no sooner reached that point of the mainland, whence he was bound across a fine stretch of ice to the island, than he was again intercepted. This time it was a young man whose mother lay ill with no other family within fifty miles. Would the doctor help her? Yes, the doctor would—and did. . . . Then off again toward Conch—now with fresh dogs provided by the friends of the man who lay there dying."

The doctor's present mission in the United States is to raise enough money to complete a new Seaman's Institute in St. Johns, Newfoundland. He said not long ago: "It has been my privilege to raise a sum of money toward putting up a proper place for the sturdy northern fishermen to go. We have only got just enough to begin it. Some of us have known what it was to take a voyage on a fishing schooner, and know these fishermen. They are fine men, they are as worth while to-day as in Galilee; but opportunities to wash are not very many. A fisherman comes in and often enough he can't be asked to go to church. You would not ask him into your pew; he has had no chance to make himself respectable. Maybe he has only one suit. We have already contracted for a laundry on the ground floor of our new building in which that man can go and wash himself and his clothing, and come out again and not feel that the only place in which he will not be out of place is the saloon. The other part of the ground floor is to be used for a swimming tank. Labrador water is frigid—it is seldom above forty-three. You cannot expect men to go in and learn to swim. And yet only last year we had a boat, with three women's husbands, three bread-winners, capsize—right inshore—and two out of the three were drowned in their own depth, because they could not swim. The third man, after floundering about a bit, waded ashore!

"The service of the great Church of God has interpreted itself in two ways: one large factor tells those men of faith in Jesus Christ; the other tells them of scoundrels and villains and what bad places the saloons are; meanwhile there is no other place to which to go! And as one of the men said to me once: 'It is all very well for you to say, "Be good when you are in St. Johns," but it's pretty lonely business in the middle of a street on a cold November night!'

"The need of somewhere for these men to go, beside the sixty-seven saloons with which St. Johns is cursed, is imperative. Brave men, strong men, men with responsibilities of wives and children, men who have dared the sea and have passed through fogs and storms and by floating ice—come back where they have to come every year to sell their hard-won earnings and get the necessities of life, in the city to which every one of them has to go, and run the risk of having every bit of it robbed from them by the temptations which they are unable to avoid! The building is now being built as fast as we can secure the funds. The present contract calls for completion to the second story, and we hope to let one for the rest in the near future."

The new building is modeled after the Rowton Houses in London, which were designed under the supervision of the great surgeon, Sir Frederick Treves. The nearest thing in an organization to what Dr. Grenfell and his colleagues are planning, is the Young Men's Christian Association; in fact, the man who will take charge as manager is a Y. M. C. A. trained man. The building, all the designing and planning for which has been done free of charge by a big New York firm, will contain reading and social rooms, bedrooms and bathrooms and an auditorium. The top floor, for which there is to be a separate entrance, is designed for girls. Here, under the direction of a matron, some domestic science work or something of that nature will be carried out. Many girls come into port on the schooners with members of their families, who have no way of properly looking after them when they come ashore. The result is that they bring up in unsafe places, frequently with pitiable and worse than fatal results. The chief of police of St. Johns has told Dr. Grenfell that he has often given the protection of the police station to young girls to prevent them from going to the only places that were open to them in the city.

The people of St. Johns have given $30,000 toward this project. The city grants free rates and taxes;

All Now Eagerly Helping China

Household Furniture Being Sold to Relieve the Distress

A Type Frequently Met

WHEN this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches the hands of its readers, the good ship Buford, bearing its precious load of food for China, will in all probability have arrived at Chin-kiang. There the flour will be distributed under the supervision of our Interdenominational Missionary Relief Committee and of the official Shanghai Committee. Mr. J. W. Walker, chairman of the Chin-kiang Committee, and his associates (Rev. W. C. Longden being absent on furlough) will operate in the very centre of the famine area in Anhui.

Sacks of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S gift of flour will be loaded on launches and small boats and sent by canal for distribution to all points where help is most urgently needed, while vehicles of all descriptions, including doubtless a multitude of wheelbarrows, will bear off the welcome sacks to places inland. At all the local centres of distribution, the relief work will be under the charge of missionaries and trustworthy natives. While needy Christian native families will not be overlooked, relief will also be given to heathen homes, where the flour will be a most convincing evidence of the friendly interest and good will of the American donors.

When the full story of the great China famine of 1911 shall have been written, it will be seen that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have most generously done their share towards alleviating the distress of the stricken people. After going to press with last week's issue, we received the following cablegram:

"CHIN-KIANG.—Conditions unrelieved. Chin-kiang needs one hundred thousand gold to continue organized relief work until May 30. WALKER."

In view of this urgent message, we increased the sum last cabled through our State Department from $20,000 to $25,000.

By the latter part of May it is expected that the wheat harvest will be ready for cutting. Not till then will the close of the famine be in sight. Meanwhile, the efforts of the relief workers will be redoubled to reach all the accessible points of suffering. Every pound of flour will be a providential gift, and many a prayer will ascend for a blessing upon the givers.

Consul Wilder's Appeal

United States Consul Wilder, at Shanghai, in an appeal cabled to this country on March 21, made it plain that abundant help would be needed to tide over the interregnum before the food ship's arrival. While considerable relief had already been distributed, large numbers were still dying of starvation. Barks and weeds provided the only sustenance for thousands. With the food ship's cargo safely in port and distribution under way, it is hoped that the situation may undergo a material change for the better.

Many of the Chinese in this country have sent their contributions to their suffering fellow-countrymen through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund. The Chinese men of the Baptist Chinese Sunday School of Washington, D. C., and the Chinese Young Men's Christian Association of that city, have been deeply distressed about the famine. On a recent Sunday the Calvary Chinese School and Young Men's Christian Association took up a collection of $37, and on a week-day evening, the Chinese Sunday School of the First Baptist Church of Washington gave an entertainment from which they realized $63. These sums they sent through Mr. Baker of Washington to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and they were included in our cable remittance of $25,000, which was forwarded through the State Department to Chin-kiang on March 20.

Some of the letters accompanying the contributions have been extremely touching. Mr. G. A. Senter of Lyman, Me., forwarded a dollar for the relief fund, the gift of a "poor widow with three children to support, but who has a heart large enough to care for others who are needy."

Remarkable Missionary Zeal

Many churches and Sunday Schools are energetic in this life-saving work. A notable instance of extraordinary missionary zeal is furnished in the experience of the Sabbath School Bode, published at Paterson, N. J. This neat little paper contains the International Sunday School Lessons edited in the language of Holland, by Rev. K. Kinper, of Roseland, Ill. The mission topics are in charge of Rev. J. W. Brink, of Tohatchi, N. M., and Rev. Lee Huizing, of Englewood, N. J., while the miscellaneous matter and short stories are taken care of by Mr. H. Bosloper, of Passaic, N. J., and the publisher, Mr. James Tanis.

Theological School of the Christian Reformed Church

When the first China famine article appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mr. Tanis revived the idea of some years ago, to request all the Sunday School superintendents in his church organization to solicit from each scholar a penny for the famine fund. More of course would be welcomed. A similar modest request was made by him at the time of the famines in Finland, Russia, and Japan with gratifying results. Up to date his present plan has proved most successful and has met with marked co-operation. Those "penny collections" have grown so that the remittances received by Mr. Tanis and forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD amounted to over $2,662.33 on March 20. The novel idea of asking for only a penny proves exceedingly popular, and no one would think of refusing, while many nickels, dimes and larger coins flow in with the pennies. This worthy little paper circulates among the Holland Sunday Schools of the Christian Reformed Church in America.

The members of this organization, which extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are Holland people who emigrated to this country, and Holland-Americans born here. From these, English-speaking congregations are gradually formed. In most of the Sunday Schools, the language of Holland is still used; but in their "Christian Day Schools," where Bible history forms one of the subjects of study, the pupils are fully prepared for the high schools. All the ministers are required to conduct weekly catechism classes, the children beginning at the age of five and continuing until a desire is expressed to join the church by confessing faith, which is usual towards the age of twenty. This method produces very strong and intelligent members. Another mainstay of the organization in this age of evolution and higher criticism is the fact that father, mother and children are expected to attend the church services as regularly as possible. While the Sunday School is given due respect, it is not permitted to detract from the regular service of the Word.

An Active Church Organization

The mission work of this organization is quite extensive. At Hoboken a mission station is conducted near the transatlantic steamship landings, and is extended to Ellis Island. At Paterson, N. J., and Chicago, Ill., Jewish missions are established, and at Denver, Col., there is a sanitarium, "Bethesda," for tuberculous patients. For the Zuñi Indians in New Mexico, mission stations and a hospital are maintained with much success. At Grand Rapids the college and theological seminary is located, where the church trains its own ministers, missionaries and Christian school teachers. This organization has 29,000 communicants; its total membership, including all baptized children, is 76,000. This number has been nearly doubled since 1900. Next to the Lord's necessary blessing, this people depend for the stability and growth of their organization on the teaching of the simple truths of God's Word in their homes, schools and churches.

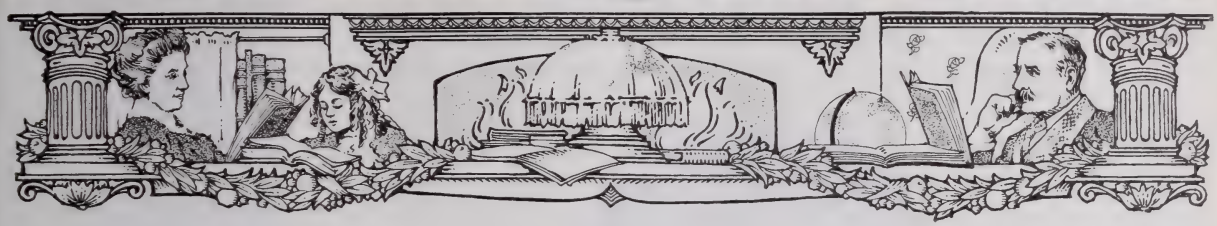
A Woman's Plea for the Famine-Stricken

YOU have heard of the suffering and need among the famine-stricken people of this country, but as I am right here in the midst of the suffering, I feel that I must write and put some of the facts before you and appeal to you in the name of humanity that you help these poor starving people.

I am sure if I could but picture to you the hunger and despair I have seen on hundreds of faces, as they have come here and begged that we give them work to do and save their lives, then you would not need that I appeal for help for them, but you would open up your purses and give liberally.

My brother has opened up a little public work, and planned at first to use only a hundred men; but the poor, starving people pleaded so he has taken on two hundred, and still they come and get down on their knees and tell of the large number at home dependent and beg to be allowed to work. We give only one hundred "cash" per day (about 20 cents), and that will buy only a little over two pounds of the very cheapest food there is, and yet in many cases this is all a family of four and five have to live on. We have perhaps turned away as many as two thousand who begged to be allowed to work. Many of these have come here from a distance and have sold or given away their children, and are in rags as to clothing, with no places to sleep at night except as they stop out in some corner. One morning last week, when the thermometer was ten degrees below freezing, I heard the groans of such a one from my room upstairs and on looking out we found a boy fifteen years old crouched down in a corner. He said all his family had already perished and that he had nothing for six days to appease his hunger. Within four days I heard of the death of many grown people right on the streets near us. They dropped dead on the street from cold and hunger and lay there late in the day, finally being removed by an officer. One poor mother who had only one son, a child of a year and and a half, had given him away, and pleaded for work that she and her husband might live.



It is dreadful now, but the seriousness of it will increase till wheat harvest, when only we may hope for cheaper prices, and that only depends on the amount of wheat harvested; so I beg that you pray that there may be an abundant harvest and also that you send of your means to help tide over these hard days till that time.

Send what you can NOW; it may save many lives; and then later send more, if possible, but do not delay; that may mean the death of many. It is estimated that a gold dollar will sustain the life of one from now until wheat harvest.

"Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Po-Chow, China. (Signed) ATTIE T. BOSTICK.

IN THE HOME QUEEN'S REALM

The Use of Good English

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

CORRECT speaking and writing are within the reach of every one who pays attention to refined usage, reads good books and habitually attends church. Far more than many people think, a good vocabulary is gained, with freedom and elegance in its use, through the simple medium of regularly attending church and listening attentively to the service, inclusive of the sermons, prayers and hymns. This, of course, is not the highest reason for going to church. It is secondary to the duty of reverently worshiping God, but in a lesser degree and very surely it is a method of education. In Scotland during its entire history people of all ranks and conditions have attended church, and the result has been evident in the general intelligence and excellent choice of language limited to no class, but the happy birthright of all. There is a striking example of this rooted and grounded habit of church-going in the story by Stevenson of David Balfour. The boy David had passed through many thrilling adventures and singular experiences before the day when he came, weary and spent, to the Highland village where a great trial was going on. It was the Sabbath, and the preacher was in the middle of his sermon. David sank quietly into a pew near the door and surveyed the congregation. It included all the great men, as well as the small ones who were gathered at the trial of James Stuart, accused of having murdered a member of the Campbell clan. From the Duke of Argyle to the poorest of the neighboring peasantry, every one was listening, as if life depended upon it, to the sermon of the minister.

This is a digression. Let me add that children do not invariably acquire correct habits of speech when they go to school. Teachers sometimes make mistakes in colloquialism, particularly if they have grown up in families where culture was lacking. Still, habits of speech are formed in the home, and it is unfair to blame teachers for some of the errors constantly committed in both speech and writing by careless pupils. "Ain't" is ruled out of elegant usage to-day, although we not infrequently discover it in English novels which represent the manners of good society. "Aren't" is preferable. Double negatives are unpardonable and always without excuse. "Hadn't ought" gives one a feeling of distress when one knows that "ought not" is the correct form. "You was" instead of "you were" is a confusion of the singular verb with the plural nominative. "Seen" used instead of "saw" likewise gives one a creepy feeling down the spine. Perhaps the most usual mistake is that in which people fall who say "I" when they should say "me." "Mother invited Mary and I to go with her to the concert." The speaker would not say: "Mother invited I." One hears this error glibly falling from the lips of accomplished graduates who should certainly know better than thus to disfigure their speech.

Our Mothers' Meeting

TO EVERY mother who reads THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the pithy words of our correspondent are strongly recommended. She has managed to enclose in a nutshell advice which many mothers greatly need to heed and consider. Especially mothers of boys will find her letter useful and pertinent:

"In reference to bringing up boys, be just.

"Remember that the life work of a mother equals an angel's and surpasses a queen's in its importance. Give it your deepest interest and most painstaking care.

"Make your children happy at home; guard their companionship; be worthy of their confidence.

"Measure their conduct by their motives; and be not too swift in passing judgment. Boys are whipped for accidentally tearing and breaking. Successful tricks and concealments are not blamed.

"Do not talk about them in their presence.

"Do not stand hostile to your children, always assuming that they are in the wrong, and ready to take the part of any one against them.

"Be not uncharitable to their faults, which generally appear to outsiders an inheritance from their parents, as often from the mother as from the father. The wilful child, if imbued with good principles, will make a strong character. The mischievous child, if rightly directed, will be unusually clever and useful in his after life.

"Aim at future results. Authority is for an hour; influence is for eternity.

"Implant regard for virtue and keep children from bad habits. Give them firm belief in revealed truth. The son of a mother who had done this, said to her in a time of great distress, 'I would kill myself if I did not believe in a hereafter.' He lives to enjoy many blessings.

"Teach them honesty and truthfulness and be a good example in these qualities yourself. Never appropriate their little belongings without their permission.

"Prepare yourself to impart moral and religious instruction. If you are not interested in goodness and godliness, your perfunctory efforts will not have much effect. Pleasantly, but with reverence, read a little to them in the Bible every evening.

"Follow the guidance of the Lord. Depend upon his strength, and not your own.

"EXPERIENCE."

The Secret of a Happy Life

ANOTHER correspondent has some suggestive hints which are commended to young people. "When contemplating marriage, two who are sure they love each other should take the matter to the Lord in prayer. A young man once went to John Wesley asking his advice about a young woman he wished to marry. John Wesley did not approve of the union. 'But,' said the young man, 'Is she not a Christian?' The reply was 'Yes, I believe she is, but the Lord Jesus can live with a person who would be impossible for you.'

"If having prayed in faith, they find no obstacle, they may take for granted that they are walking in the will of the Lord. After marriage it will be necessary to keep two bears in the house, bear and forbear. Next in importance is the setting up of a family altar. The home may then expect to receive the blessing of the Master. Young married people should be frugal, laying aside every week something for a rainy day. ISABEL S."

Women and Church Work

A NEW JERSEY village furnished the other day a novel illustration of the many-sidedness of women and of their bravery in tackling a job rather out of their line. A certain Episcopal Church was sadly in need of paint, but the money in the treasury was insufficient to meet the expense of the work. Nothing daunted, the ladies took hold of the matter in earnest. They said to the men, "If you will buy the paint we will undertake to put it on." The men, half-incredulous, but aware that when women urge a matter there is little use in opposition, did as they were told and purchased the paint. Then, under the gallant leadership of the rector's wife, the women of the church showed that they could handle a brush as well as any painter who had learned the trade, and they did not stop until the sides and the back of the church were finished to their satisfaction. They decided that they did not wish to climb ladders and attract crowds to watch their performance on the street, and so an artisan was hired to paint the front of the church. All honor to women so ready to labor for the church they love.

The part women take in church work is by no means a sinecure. If a church needs new cushions and carpets, a new organ or a new heating apparatus, it is not uncommon for the women to raise the necessary ready money by suppers, fairs, concerts and other devices which take a great deal of time and thought and exact a large amount of self-denial. When the women of a church get together for any object one may rest assured that they will succeed or perish in the attempt.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Corner

—EMMELINE J. is disturbed because she has not seen Women in Council every week. Several contributions to this department are in hand. Those who wish to meet their friends in this informal way must send their letters to Mrs. Sangster, being careful to make them brief. Mothers who have anything to tell about their experience are asked to write. We wish to hear more about the good children. We cannot let the naughty ones monopolize the space. What about the little ones who are forever asking questions?

Our Boys and Girls

I THINK WHEN I READ THAT SWEET STORY OF OLD

I think when I read that sweet story of old,
When Jesus was here among men,
How He called little children as lambs to his fold.
I should like to have been with them then.

I wish that His hands had been placed on my head,
That His arm had been thrown around me,
And that I might have seen His kind look when He said,
"Let the little ones come unto me."

HOW THE LITTLE KITE LEARNED TO FLY

"I never can do it," the little kite said,
As he looked at the others high over his head;
"I know I should fall if I tried to fly."
"Try," said the big kite; "only try,
Or I fear you never will learn at all."
But the little kite said, "I'm afraid I'll fall."

"Hosanna in the Highest!"

The big kite nodded: "Ah, well, good-by;
I'm off"; and he rose toward the tranquil sky.
Then the little kite's paper stirred at the sight,
And trembling he shook himself free for flight.
First whirling and frightened, then braver grown,
Up, up he rose through the air alone,
Till the big kite looking down could see
The little one rising steadily.

Then how the little kite thrilled with pride,
As he sailed with the big kite side by side!
While far below he could see the ground,
And the boys like small spots moving round.
They rested high in the quiet air,
And only the birds and clouds were there.
"Oh, how happy I am!" the little kite cried:
"And all because I was brave, and tried."

April Fete Days and Spring Festivals

MY DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

April is such a glorious month, brimming full of Red Letter Days, and so many wonderful things happen in April. The sun is much higher in the heavens and the days have grown longer. The woods are fairy worlds of bird songs and wild flowers, and all the little forest folk are busy and alert, getting ready for the myriads of April babies that are sure to be there. Put some picnic in a basket and get out into the woods, the hills, the fields and the meadows; they are wonder-lands in the early spring mists and sunshine.

When I was a little girl I fancied that all the summer fairies came to life in April along with the lovely red fringes on the maple trees that invariably brought the first swarm of summer bees. The alder tassels and willow catkins, and all the tiny frog pipers that come into the April woods, remind almost every one of the fairies, I think. Hans Christian Andersen was born in April, and Shakespeare; then there are St. George's and St. Mark's days. In the countries where the saint days are popularly celebrated these are among the most beautiful of all the springtime festivals. In many States in this country, Arbor Day is set for April, and many of the schools make a fête of planting out the young trees.

Easter coming this year in April makes it especially lovely, I think. All of you little folk who are going to the Kindergarten will be learning to sing

The little flowers come from the ground,
At Easter time, at Easter time!
They raise their heads and look around
At happy Easter time!

And every little flower doth say,
Good people, bless this holy day;
For Christ is risen, the angels say,
This holy, holy Easter day!

Then there is Palm Sunday, with its gloriously sad, sweet story of Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem. There are times when I believe that this story is the most beautiful of all the Bible stories. How fresh and wonderful it stays, and how mightily Christ must have loved Jerusalem. Once he had set his face toward it, there was no turning him back nor detaining him.

The Kingdom of Love

I LOVE to think of those messengers that he sent ahead to herald the coming of the kingdom of love. "Into whatsoever house ye shall enter, first say, peace dwell within this house." What a message that was, to be sending broadcast into Jerusalem among his enemies and his friends!

It was on his way to Jerusalem that he sat down to rest a little while among the children who followed after him, and he took them on his knee and blessed them. Jairus' little daughter was brought back to life, and most of the great parables were simply and humbly spoken along the way to Jerusalem. The lame and the ill were made strong and well, lepers were cleansed and the eyes of the blind were opened.

It was on the way to Jerusalem that Christ visited in the home of Mary and Martha and Lazarus, and coming down from the Mount of Olives, near the gates of the city, he persuaded even his enemies that he was indeed the Son of God.

Little Pomp or Pageantry

IS IT any wonder that his final entry into the city was triumphant? It was humble enough too, with very little pomp or pageantry. Christ mounted on the back of a little colt, with the multitude spreading their cloaks in his pathway, and many little children cutting branches from the trees, strewing them before him and crying, "Hosanna to God in the highest!" That was all, but can you think of anything more mysterious, more wonderfully lovely?

Easter Morning

To be sure, there was that dreadful week of suffering that followed. But then there was the Easter Morning, when the angel came down from heaven and rolled back the stone. "He is not here; he is risen!" the angel cried, and the kingdom of love that the messengers heralded had come to stay among the people of the earth for ever and ever.

Next week we will tell you something more about Miniature Airshipping in an article by Mr. Frederick Collins, author of the Boy's Book of Model Aeroplanes.

THE COOKY MOON

THE cooky moon hangs in the evening sky,
All sugary, round and sweet;
I suppose it was hung way up so high
So no one would get it to eat.
But still there's a way to get a bite
For good little girls and boys,
If only they go to sleep at night
Without any fuss or noise.

So close one peeper and shut one eye
So that we'll reach it soon.
All the babies from By-lo-by,
All the babies of Drowsy-eye,
From Nap-on-a-lap and Sleepy-sigh,
On pillows of clouds piled high, so high,
They all come sailing across the sky
To nibble the cooky moon.

And when it is gone, why the Moon man takes
And makes us another one;
And it's always bright on the days he bakes,
For he cooks it in the sun.
And then, when it's sugary, shiny bright
The good little children come,
And they eat the cooky moon bite by bite,
And every star is a crumb.

The Stranger Who Stayed

By ALBERT LYNDON BLAIR

EVENING had dropped a mantle of darkness over the village of Milford when there strode into town a man who wore no overcoat, although retreating but treacherous winter had that day thrown a covering of snow athwart the landscape, and a sharp cold nipped exposed hands and noses. No gloves covered his fingers; no muffler encircled his neck. His sack coat clung close to a compact form; and a slouched hat hovered above a square, ruddy face.

He paused a few moments, glanced about him, as if in quest of somebody or something with a glad hand of welcome; but apparently seeing nothing more inviting, he mounted the three steps of the rickety porch, pushed open the door and entered Milford's principal place of business.

The stranger's entrance, of course, created a sensation. The loungers and the contents of the store seemed to come to parade rest, in order to gaze at the unknown and speculate who he was, whence he came and what he wanted. The object of general interest swung up to the counter, ordered a supply of crackers and cheese, and proceeded to appease hunger.

In the meantime, the stand-abouts and sit-abouts gradually resumed conversation, but kept their gaze fixed upon the comer and made alert note of his dress, features, and movements.

Finally, Jim Hussey, whose chief reputation rested upon his ability to learn everybody's business but his own, ventured to address the unknown about the weather, who in reply partly relieved the inquisitive pressure of the atmosphere by saying:

"Gentlemen, my name is Muggins. This has served my use for several years; and, barring losing it, I shall probably wear it for some time to come. I never trouble myself to recollect whether I have any other name; so, please remember I am Muggins—M-u-g-g-i-n-s. Why I've dropped into Milford at this particular time, is somewhat of a mystery, even to myself. How long I shall stay will partly depend upon the next whim cavorting across my mind. I greet you one and all, and hope that our further acquaintance will not foot up on the losing side of the ledger."

The next day Muggins took up his abode on the hill road, about half a mile from the village. No one had lived there for fifteen years. The place was known as "the abandoned farm," and the house as "The Manse." There was in the community a vague notion who the owner was, but whither he had gone and whether he was living or dead Milford had no definite information. "I'll take care of the house for him and pay the rent due when he comes back," was Muggins' only public comment.

He procured needful furniture, to supplement some that he found in the various rooms. Several days later oak boxes, much travel worn, arrived, and the expressman surmised that they contained books.

Muggins visited Dick Nelson's store and selected a small assortment of carpenter's tools; and, long before summer came, Milford saw some surprising repairs and changes on the hill. A new door replaced the broken-paneled one so long familiar to the passerby. Whole panes of glass succeeded the shattered. New shingles appeared in patches on the roof where rain and snow for years had invaded the upper rooms.

Tim Larkins, who soon found an excuse for visiting the hill, electrified the storeful of sitters by describing the improvements Muggins had wrought. "Seems to me," said Tim, as he warmed up with his story, "that Muggins must have worked at the carpenter's trade where they do things different than anybody ever seen in central New York. What beats me is the injinuity that feller shows in ev'ry direckshun. There's nothing he can't do."

The town, one morning, rubbed its eyes, and concluded that nocturnal fairies had spread a coat of white paint all over the visible part of The Manse, and that the blinds and roof had likewise turned green in the same mysterious fashion.

"I swan!" piped up Rob Lane, as the usual audience sat around the old box-stove. "Reckon the owner of the place won't know it when he returns."

"The owner!" shouted Harv Risley. "There's more behind that hill affair than enny of us have dreamed of. I say, Muggins has got the job of fixin' up the place agin the owner's gittin' back."

Just then Muggins stalked in, nodded all around, and dropped a few dollars on the counter in payment for wall paper and other house adornments. He talked for ten or fifteen minutes in an apparent attempt to illuminate the benighted but inquisitive souls around him. Yet, after he had gone, the gossips took up what he said, item by item, and came to the disgruntled conclusion that he had dealt a great deal more in rhetoric than in revelation.

In the meantime painting and papering went on in The Manse, and passers-by soon saw surprising transformations in the front and side yards. Flower beds of unique designs and walks—straight and winding—appeared where before weeds and coarse grass had waved supreme. Four arbors soon rose on eligible sites, while the reeling board fence in front vanished except in the memory of the neighbors.

Milfordites almost suspended business, in order to stroll up the hill road and gaze, and to speculate what all these innovations meant. Somehow, when they returned home, the village never before seemed so poor, commonplace, and unsightly. People talked over Muggins's improvements, and quickly decided that Milford had slouched about long enough. Even the good women who met twice a month in the church parlors to devise means for helping workers among the heathen, spent most of the next four sessions more as village improvement societies than as auxiliaries of foreign missions. The two stores, caught off their vigilance, were unable at first to supply the unexpected demand for flower seeds. Such a number of orders for shovels, wheelbarrows, and fine-tooth rakes also poured in that the merchants hired extra teams to go to the nearest railway station for the implements. The town even surprised itself by getting together and voting money for creating a reservoir on the mountain side. The old pump on the Common was moved out of the way to make room for a noble fountain, and soon water glided into residences to the inexpressible delight of everybody. Painters came from neighboring towns in response to the new demand for their skill; and Milford, in short order, scarcely knew itself when it looked in the glass.

Just before winter set in the gossipers were aroused to a great pitch of excitement by the report that a slim man, with shady complexion and wavy hair, was also living at The Manse. Later it was affirmed that tenant number two was a Hindoo, a Malay, or a Creole. Precise information on this point was exceedingly hazy; and the mist showed little tendency to clear up when rumor said the What-is-it was a deaf-mute and acted as servant to Muggins.

The night stage from the railway station a few weeks thereafter

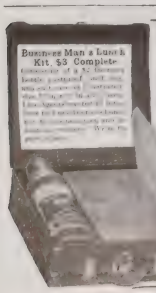
The Howard Watch

Sometimes you see a prosperous looking passenger inquire the time, and you wonder why he does not take out his own watch to compare with the conductor's.

It is not that he has no watch—but because he is ashamed of the time he is carrying. He has no confidence that it is anywhere near correct and he tries to save his dignity by not making a comparison.

What do you think of the type of man who will carry a cheap and uncertain timepiece because it doesn't have to be seen?

It is quite different with the HOWARD owner. He is ready to match time with all comers.



The HOWARD is the closest rating watch in the world—and worth all it costs to any man of accurate habit and orderly mind.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it. The price of each watch—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Boss or Crescent gold-filled case at $40 to the 23-jewel in a 14-k solid gold case at $150—is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know.

Drop us a postal card, Dept. W, and we will send you "The Story of Edward Howard and the First American Watch"—an inspiring chapter of history that every man and boy should read.

brought a passenger upon whom the gaze of Milford was instantly fixed. He signed only "Alfred Crane" in bold letters, on the register of the Knowles House; and immediately after supper began to "mix" with the citizens of the town.

"Well, gentlemen," directing his remarks to several prominent members of the Knockers' Club, "what kind of a town you got here? Think of nestling among the hills, twelve miles from a steam road, all these years, when the people of every other place in the universe mount the cars and go snorting out into the great world! I was shut up for two hours in that old stage of yours and bounced about like a pea in a pod. Don't see how you stand it. It'll take me two full days to recover from my trip."

"Wall, stranger," spoke up Squire Burchard, one of the retired plutocrats of Milford, "we've got along right well (at any rate some of us have), if we don't breathe locomotive smoke and git over the ground quite so fast as some of our neighbors. Milford duzn't ask no odds of enny on um."

"Yes," answered Crane, "but it's high time for Milford to crawl up out of its stage-coach age, and try a little electricity.

"All we want is to be let alone," drawled out another villager, who had sat in the same chair, tipped at the same angle, in precisely the same spot and on the same link of his backbone for five mortal hours every night in the week for the last three years and a half.

"What you Milfordites want is to be stirred up with the long pole of progress; and I'm just the man to give that pole a whirl or two. In a year and six months you sitters here will ride in trolley cars to the steam station, and your old stage-coach will go up in a bonfire set to celebrate the opening of the new line."

With that prediction hurled into the ears of the startled gathering, Crane jammed his hat a degree farther down upon his head, and strode across the square to Nelson's, where in five minutes he had the Store Club boiling and bubbling with the heat of the promoter's rapid transit ideas. When Milford went to bed that night, the town had divided into two disputatious camps, sharply defined. In one were the conservatives; in the other, the radicals.

Crane was in his element. He fiercely harangued groups of Milfordites, and, buttonholing individuals, poured out facts, figures, estimates, arguments, answers, and appeals as if invisible factories were at work supplying him with just the word and the phrase at the psychological moment.

The town was billed with posters and snow-flaked with dodgers, announcing that next Tuesday evening a public meeting would be held in the Town Hall in the interests of the proposed trolley line between Milford and Castanet Junction.

Tuesday evening arrived, and the town turned out to a man; ay, to a woman and a child. On a front seat sat Muggins, as unconcerned, seemingly, as if he belonged to another planet and had no interest in this. The curious noticed that by his side was the "mute," probably there for companionship.

Eight o'clock came; and, with the hall a sardine box of humanity, the proceedings opened. One of Crane's lieutenants moved that Mr. Brickfelt preside, and another seconded the motion. This was carried with a tremendous pulmonary explosion. With a great show of candor and impartiality, the chairman (previously coached) placed before the meeting the purpose of the call. Then he blandly announced that if any present were opposed to the trolley project

THE TWO PATHS

TWO paths there are through which all mortals go:
This leads to bliss, and that to endless woe.
The way that leads to misery is broad,
A smooth, a pleasing, and a flowery road.
With company 'tis crowded everywhere—
The rich, the gay, the witty, and the fair.
Ah! fondly blinded, whither will they run?
Why in such headlong haste to be undone?
See how they press death's ample gate to win;
How heedless of the flames that glare within.
But there's another unfrequented way
That leads to life, and love, and endless day.
Its strait and thorny path, as on you go,
Will every moment more delightful grow.
To tread this narrow road, no labor spare,
For heaven, and holy souls, and God himself are there.

What Christianity Means

WHATEVER our birthright and descent, whatever our name and profession, whatever our knowledge of Christian doctrine and our performance of Christian worship may be—when the great host is gathered in the city of God, with tattered flags and banners glorious in their bloodstained folds, with armor dented and swords worn in the conflict, with wounds which tell of courage and patient endurance and deathless loyalty—when the celestial knighthood is assembled at the Round Table of the King, our name will be unspoken, our crown will hang above an empty chair, and our place will be given to another, unless we accept it now, with sincere hearts, the only Gospel which can deliver us from the inertia of doubt and the selfishness of sin. We must enter into life by giving ourselves to the personal Christ who unveils the love of the Father in a human life, and calls us with divine authority to submit our liberty to God's sovereignty in blessed and immortal service to our fellow-men for Christ's sake.

they would first be gladly heard. Whereupon uprose Storekeeper Nelson from the group of conservatives on the platform, and disclosed his sentiments on the subject. He consumed twenty-five minutes, and concluded:

"Gentlemen and ladies: I plant myself on this 'ere prinsipul: When we du as we have dun we allers know jest where we aire. Then we don't hafter lie awake nights to worry about to-morrer. That's the way I made my munny. That's the way Milford made its munny. We never had no pannick. If we git a trolley line, ev'rybody will neglect bizness and go to ridin' to Castanet Junction. They'll stop arnin' munny, and what leetle they have they'll spend out of taow-n. I'm agin the nu road for scientific, e-co-nomic and moral reasons. We growed up here nat'rally. We want ter remain nat'ral. That's what the Creatur wants us to be."

When Mr. Nelson retired from the field of oratory Squire Burchard thought he would illuminate the occasion: "I've lived in Milford all my life," said he, "and I'll die right here and sleep in our be-u-ti-ful cem'try. I've known this place, boy and man, sixty years, and its entire feeters are indeluably imprinted on my mem'ry. I don't want no trolley thund'rin' into town and breakin' up the sanctity of our quiet. All the improvement I'd suggest is a new coat of paint on the stage and a new set of harnesses for the hosses; and so far as I ken see the outfit'd last as long as we old fellers live. Harmon's stage brings into town all the strange peepul we want'er see, and sometimes more.

"A trolley line would be an excuse for all the sweepin's of the naborin' towns to come here Sundays and holidays, trample on our flower beds and steal our cherries, and discombobolate Milford's happiness gineral'y. Yes, sir, Mr. Chairman; friend Nelson pinched the tweezers of common sense at the right spot when he said, 'Well enough's best left alone.' That's where you'll find me na-ow and forever."

A slight rustle of approval followed Burchard's harangue, but the audience's curiosity to hear Promoter Crane was too intense to permit much delay. He had been circulating through the hall and had not once set foot on the platform. He took up his position on the floor within six feet of the front row of hearers. His speech was, in most respects, a surprise. In his canvassing about town, he had given free rein to his enormous powers of wit and sarcasm. So it was generally expected that he would make an unsparing use of these weapons on this occasion. But his address was one of conciliation. He complimented everybody and everything; the speeches to which they had listened, the men who made them, and even found something honeyed to say about conservatism, which goes slow and cannot be baited or pushed into rash enterprises.

"I am a conservative myself," Crane proclaimed. "That's my strong point."

Without any more preliminaries, he struck into the solid division of his speech. He exhibited an improvised map of the proposed trolley route, told how most of the farmers along the line would donate the required strip, gave a tabulated statement what the roadbed, rails, and rolling stock would cost; and with a nimble brush painted the new life the road would bring into the community.

With a flaming face and vibrating sentences, the orator exclaimed: "'Let well enough alone,' somebody has said. Yes; that is precisely what wise men remarked to Columbus when he proposed to lift the veil that hid this glorious Western world of peerless opportunities from the gaze of Europe. If he had adopted their

How to Grow Up in God*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

Joash the King-Child

THE dead bodies of the princes slain by the hand of their grandmother Athaliah that she might become queen were truly a gruesome sight to look upon. A woman, Jehosheba, gazed in sorrow upon that sight, for the young princes were her nephews, she being the sister of King Ahaziah. Jehosheba was joined by another woman, holding tightly in her bosom a little baby prince whom she had kept hidden from the murderous grandmother. Jehosheba hurried off the nurse and child and placed them in one of the priests' rooms in the golden temple of King Solomon. She had a right to take the child there, because her husband was Jehoiada, the high priest. It was the safest place she could have found, because the people came very little there to worship God, only just a few who were faithful and true. Nearby was a grand temple, which Queen Athaliah had built for the idol god Baal, and the people thronged this temple of Baal, rather than the temple of the true God!

Samuel had been a little priest-child in the house of God when it was only of curtains—the tabernacle—but Joash was a king-child. Both grew day by day as little servants of the Lord. When Samuel was twelve years old, God called him to be a prophet; when Joash was seven years old, he was brought out and crowned king. His crowning day was wonderful! His uncle, the priest Jehoiada, had the matter in charge, and he placed soldiers to guard the gates, and to guard the temple in every part, and to stand close around the high place between the pillars, where he should place the little king. And then Jehoiada with his own hands placed the gold crown on the boy king's head, and in the boy's hand he placed a roll which had the law of God written on it. By this act was implied: "Though you are king, you must obey God, who is the King of kings." And when the soldiers saw the king was crowned, they clapped their hands, and with loud voices called out, "God save the king!" and they blew trumpets. Queen Athaliah heard the noise, and came into the temple to see what it was all about. She was surprised and angry. She would have tried to kill the boy-king, but instead, she was pushed out of the temple by the soldiers and killed by the Carites, the executioners. Then the brave priest Jehoiada called on the people to worship the true God, and they promised they would, and they went into the temple of Baal, and broke his image, and tore down the temple itself. It was thus a crowning day also for the King of kings!

Training the Child

The religious nurture of little Joash is very suggestive to parents and teachers of the present day. Undoubtedly the place where he was taken to live made deep impressions of godliness upon him. Dr. Horace Bushnell in his book on Christian Nurture says: "I think it can be shown by sufficient evidence that more is done to affect or fix the moral and religious character of children before the age of language than after; that the age of impressions, when parents are commonly waiting in idle security or trifling away their time in mischievous indiscretions, or giving up their children to the chance of such keeping as nurses and attendants may exercise, is in fact their golden opportunity; when more is likely to be done for their advantage or damage, than in all the instruction and discipline of their minority afterward." Dr. Bushnell also says: "The nurture of the soul and character is to begin just when the nurture of the body begins. It is first to be infantile nurture—as such, Christian; then to be a child's nurture; then to be a youth's nurture—advancing by imperceptible gradations, if possible, according to the gradations and stages of the growth or progress toward maturity." These sayings sound very much like the deductions of up-to-date "child study." In the long ago this is the way little Joash was trained by his faithful foster parents, his uncle Jehoiada and his aunt Jehosheba.

Our children cannot live in God's house as did the child Joash, but we can make holy places of our homes by filling them with the sweetness that is from God. We should also often take our children to the Sunday School, carrying them in arms as members of the cradle roll, until they are able to go there on their own little feet. One family we have known, in which there were ten boys and one girl, regularly filled two pews in the church, the father sitting at the end of one pew and the mother at the end of the other pew. It is quite probable that all of the children did not understand all that was said by the minister, but impressions were made by the opening of the great Bible, by the spirit-filled singing, by the reverent attitudes of the worshipers and by the general atmosphere of love and kindness. But a child brought up in infidelity could hardly be anything else than a skeptic. It is said that Voltaire, at the age of five, committed to memory a skeptical poem, and the impressions made upon his mind were never obliterated. By contrast note the statement once made by President John Quincy Adams: "There are two prayers I love to say; one is the Lord's Prayer, because the Lord taught it; and the other is what seems to be a child's prayer: 'Now I lay me down to sleep'; and I love to say it because it suits me. I have been repeating it every night for many years, and I expect to say it my last night on earth if I am conscious."

Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take.
All this I ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

We may not know just what training was given to the child Joash, probably

* The International Sunday School Lesson for April 16, 1911. Joash the Boy King. II. Kings 11:1-20. GOLDEN TEXT: "Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart." Ps. 119:2.

THE "CHEER UP" WAY

Of Keeping The Home Looking Like New

Busy housewives the world over are making and keeping their homes bright and new by dusting with the greatest of all "Cheer Up" articles—LIQUID VENEER—a free sample of which will be sent to any woman who will write for it to the Buffalo Specialty Company, 147 Liquid Veneer Building, Buffalo N. Y.

Liquid Veener does its work when used on an ordinary cheesecloth duster in the daily dusting. In the one dusting operation it removes all the dust, dirt, finger marks and discolorations, and at the same time restores the beautiful factory finish of everything on which it is used.

For removing that blue, smoky appearance from pianos Liquid Veneer is absolutely unequalled. When dusted in the ordinary way but with a little Liquid Veneer on the duster, the beautiful "tone" of the outside of any piano is immediately restored. Also Liquid Veneer acts as food to the finest finish, keeping the piano looking like new long after others have become cracked and checked with age.

Some one has aptly said that Liquid Veneer is good for everything and everything is better for Liquid Veneer. And this is really so. Liquid Veneer restores the natural beauty of everything dustable: chairs, tables, bedsteads, bureaus, all metal work, chandeliers, and enameled, gilt and lacquered surfaces.

The woman who takes a pride in her hardwood floors will find that Liquid Veneer will bring out the grain and finish of the wood in a way that is really surprising.

Any woman desirous of having her home look like new all the time should write to the address given above for a free sample of Liquid Veneer.

Sunday School Lesson

it was that given to every Jewish child: a teaching of the law of God. But undoubtedly what the child saw and heard about the temple connected with the worship of God made the deepest impressions upon him.

The copy of the law placed in his hand as a part of the ceremony of coronation was most significant; it was as if God had repeated to him what he had said to Joshua in the long ago: "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein, for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success" (Josh. 1: 8).

We read in the prophecy of Isaiah: "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord and great shall be the peace of thy children" (Isa. 54: 13). The boy king Joash rested on the teachings of Jehoiada and came into his kingdom a happy child, and "he did right in the eyes of the Lord all the days of Jehoiada the priest."

"Do You Love God"

One morning a lawyer on his way to his office, stopped on the street to get a "shine." The little bootblack who plied his trade there was no stranger to him, although he knew him only by his street name. This morning the boy was unusually silent. The lawyer missed his bright remarks, and began to rally him a little, when suddenly the boy looked up in his face and said: "Mr. Bartlett, do you love God?" The lawyer was an upright, self-respecting man, but neither a church member nor much given to religious thought, and he took the question at first as an attempt at a joke on the part of the boy; but he soon found that it was meant in all seriousness. No one had ever asked him the question before in quite the same way, and it quite staggered him. "Why do you ask me that, Charlie?" he said, after a rather awkward pause. "What difference does it make to you?" "Well, I'll tell you, sir. My mother an' me's got to get out; for the place we live in'll be torn down pretty soon, an' a fellow like me can't pay much rent. Mother does all she can, but you see there is three of us, an' me grandmother's lame. I dunno what to do. Yesterday I heard two men talkin', and one of 'em said God would help anybody that loved him if they'd tell him they were in a hole. I thought about it 'most all night, an' this mornin' I made up my mind I'd lay for somebody that knew him well enough to ask him." The lawyer was embarrassed. All he could say to the threadbare little bootblack was that he had better ask some one else. He had better keep inquiring, he told him, for in a city of so many churches he would surely find the sort of person he wanted. He thrust a half dollar into the boy's hand and hurried away. But all that day he found his thoughts reverting to the bootblack and his strange question. "A fine position for an educated man in a Christian country!" he said to himself. "Struck dumb by an ignorant street Arab! I could not answer his question! Why not?" The lawyer was an honest man, and his self-examination ended by his becoming an attendant at church, and subsequently a member.

THE BEAUTIFUL WHITE GOODS

Before you plan your summer clothes write us for free samples of LINWEAVE, the finest, sheerest, most satisfactory white wash goods ever made.

We want you to see for yourself its exquisite quality and beauty—we want you to compare it with real dress linen and note the close resemblance.

For LINWEAVE looks almost exactly like linen—has all linen's crisp, lustrous beauty. Yet Linweave costs about one-third linen's price.

But while real linen musses and creases so badly that it is no real pleasure to wear it, LINWEAVE doesn't wrinkle. It will keep its neat freshness until the garment is soiled.

LINWEAVE has been the rage for the past two seasons with fashionable women everywhere. They love it for its delightful, sheer, fine quality, its charming patterns, the splendid way it launders.

LINWEAVE is now the most popular of all white goods for women's and children's summer dresses and suits and for all fine underwear. (36)

Fancy and Plain Linweave

LINWEAVE comes in nearly 200 fancy patterns, among them the new French Marquisette and Filet effects; others running from the sheer, dimity-like check, stripes and plaids that make up into charming lingerie, dresses and waists, to the heavier qualities in striking, conventional designs, which you want for tailored waists and shirt waist suits and the children's clothes.

50 plain weights range from the finest, sheerest quality, to the heavy weaves suitable for coats, suits and skirts.

LINWEAVE also comes in black, in various weights and weaves.

Safe Bond Buying Is Based Upon Investigation

Public service corporation bonds are bought and sold upon facts which can be ascertained only through careful investigation by experts. The investigation costs just as much whether made for the sake of purchasing one bond or an entire issue. Therefore, the firm of N. W. Halsey & Co. investigates thoroughly the security upon which a bond issue rests and takes an entire issue or a large part of the issue, which it sells to its customers backed up by the results of its own investigation. This investigation is so careful and so thorough that it will satisfy the most cautious investor if it satisfies N. W. Halsey & Co. The same service is extended to all clients irrespective of the amount of their funds—whether they buy a single bond or many.

The scope and character of this service and the kind of bonds which we offer are described in our booklet, "The most satisfactory bonds," which is sent free on request.

Resurrection*

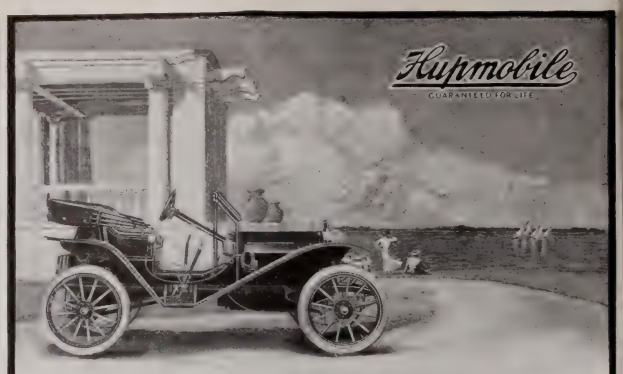
WITH the hope and the reasonable expectation of immortality, a new nobility was imparted to our brief and blotted human span. We are no longer members of the family of "beasts that perish." We can look upon the crude and unfinished fabric of human life as only the introduction to our real life—a life unbounded in its length and possibilities. In our dreams, and with the words in mind of our Saviour, and especially of his best beloved disciples, we may glimpse the glories which await us. To the sober and literal mind, which accepts nothing not seen, touched or handled, these dreams seem wild and fantastic. The famous scientist Haeckel, the great Herbert Spencer, and others of their ilk both in Europe and America, may reject the Scripture testimony and call upon the advocates of immortality for proof from finite sources; but all their clamor avails nothing to the earnest believer in Christ's resurrection. By proofs deeper and stronger than mere flesh or stones or prismatic rays could ever afford, we know that our Redeemer liveth, and that he has gone to prepare a place for us, where, after death, we shall be satisfied.

"Life," says Elizabeth Phelps Ward, "is scarcely more than an experiment if death is the end of personality." And again she has said: "If you love greatly, if you love utterly, if you love nobly, what power in the universe can decide that your love shall cease to be? I can conceive of none. It is a slow lesson for us to understand that God is love. Perhaps it took the Scriptures to give us the splendid epigram."

"In parting from my body," said the venerable John Bigelow, in the book, In After Days, "I shall merely have parted with a transient implement as destitute of life as a spade or plow. . . . Life, if terminating at the grave, can only be regarded as but a fragment, as only a page of the great volume of human life, as only the atrium of one of God's noblest temples. What possible reason can be assigned for even suspecting that this trend of development should not go on indefinitely?"

What, indeed?

In one of those beautiful moments of inspiration which visited the erratic brain of that great genius, Lord Byron, he wrote:



Yet if, as holiest men have deemed there be
A land of souls beyond that sable shore,
To shame the doctrine of the Sadducee
And sophist, madly vain of dubious lore,
How sweet it were in concert to adore
With those who made our mortal labors light,
To hear each voice we feared to hear no more,
Behold each mighty shade revealed to sight—
The Bactrian, Samian sage, and all who taught the right!

He voices one of the great passions of every devoted Christian. We all long to behold again not only our own beloved ones, but the great souls of all ages who have by life or voice ever "taught the right." One godly man in speaking of the future life said feelingly, "Among the first whom I shall seek in that enchanted land, after my very own, is the beloved disciple. I long to behold his face; to grasp his hand."

Another, a profound student of English history, who believed that the greatness of that wonderful land was largely due to the majestic and stainless Alfred, often said, "I almost long for death in order that I may see and talk with him."

Truly, he who would deprive the Christian world of its hope of immortality, deserves the divine anathema, "O ye fools and blind." "If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY SYSTEM

The cook's right bower for making things good is

Snider's Tomato Catsup

IT is not only an unsurpassed relish for meats, fish, game, vegetables, etc., but is a most convenient seasoning for dishes requiring a tasty puree, and saves labor.

Try this recipe, (using Snider's)

Tomato Rarebit

2 tablespoons butter; 2 tablespoons flour; 1 cup thin cream; ½ cup Snider's Tomato Catsup; 2 cups cheese measured after grating (or running through chopper); 2 eggs slightly beaten; salt.

Melt butter in sauce pan, add flour. Pour in, gradually, the cream, and as soon as mixture thickens add the Catsup. Then add cheese, eggs and salt to taste. Serve, as soon as cheese has melted, on soda crackers, or crisp toast.

The Right Paint For This Spring

You can't afford to let your house stand exposed till oil drops in price. The way things look now, the buildings would be paint-hungry before that time comes.

Get the cost of 100 pounds "Dutch Boy Painter" White Lead, 4 gallons pure linseed oil, 1 gallon turpentine, 1 pint turpentine drier—this makes 5 gallons of pure white lead paint. Divide by 5 for the price per gallon and compare this with the price of any other paint you'd think of using.

You'll find that the best is the cheapest; also that, after all, the increase in the cost of "Dutch Boy Painter" White Lead made-to-order paint is trifling.

General Notes

—A COUNT of the attendance in a number of the leading churches of all denominations in New York, on a recent Sunday, Protestant and Catholic included, showed that 531,100 members were absent on that day. Of these, 453,800 were Catholics and 77,300 Protestants.

—PREMIER STOLYPIN of the Russian Cabinet resigned his portfolio on March 20, because the Council of the Empire rejected his Zemstvo bill for self-government in the nine Western provinces. Minister of Finance Kokovtzoff has taken the place of Stolypin. The new premier is said to be an able, level-headed statesman. On all foreign questions, and particularly in regard to the Jews, he has maintained an enlightened and moderate attitude. He opposed the excesses of Nationalism, and co-operated with the Duma in effecting extensive reforms in the finances of the country, and in many other ways has saved millions of dollars to the Empire.

—THE PRESBYTERIAN BODY has received a million dollars from the estate of the late John S. Kennedy, the New York multi-millionaire and philanthropist, which, with a previous donation of $500,000, makes the amount received to date $1,500,000. More is expected. Of the $500,000, three-fifths was used to liquidate the debts of local Presbyterian churches, and the remainder has been saved to erect a labor temple at Fourteenth street and Second Avenue, New York. The million dollars will be used as a permanent endowment for the spread of Presbyterianism in New York, while the income, which will amount to $50,000 annually, will be devoted to building new churches and aiding struggling ones that are deemed worthy of support.

—BOOKER T. WASHINGTON, the acknowledged head of the colored race, was somewhat unfortunate on his last visit to New York. In seeking the city address of one of his Tuskegee officials in a West Side street, he was attacked by a white man who presumably took the negro educator for a burglar or some one with a more sinister motive. The bruises Dr. Washington received confined him to his hotel for a few days. Many letters of sympathy came to him from all parts of the country, among them one from President Taft in which was expressed the high estimation in which the latter holds the man who has done so much for the elevation of his people, through whose labors they have become an integrally important element in our civilization and progress.

REDEEM THE TIME

ONE hour in meditation
On the Book of Books Divine,
One hour in contemplation
Of its messages sublime,
Helps the work of transformation,
Aids the Master in His plan
To effect the restoration
Of His chief creation—man.

One hour in earnest pleading
At the Father's mercy-seat,
One hour in simply waiting
At the Saviour's blessed feet,
Or in seeking for the lost one
On the hard, bleak hills of sin,
That will help in re-creation
Of the Master's life within.

Do not while away the moments,
Unimproved let time pass by,
Acting as if hours and minutes
Later on would backward fly;
Time once passed there's no recalling,
And life's hours at best are few,
Help the Master then in bringing
His lost image back to you.

Everyman's Car

The Brush Runabout $450

THE contractor needs a reliable means of getting from place to place to oversee his work.

The Brush appeals to him because it is quick, dependable and particularly suited to getting through crowded city streets with the least loss of time. It earns its cost easily.

DOESN'T the Brush fit your needs as well as it does the contractor's—if you must go quickly from place to place?

To any one who loses valuable time in a business day by the slowness of ordinary means of city traffic—the Brush will pay for itself in no time.

It means more business calls and more business done—welcome relief from the frets of city crowds—better health, better temper, better results, more money.

Whether contractor, architect, or artisan—whether salesman, solicitor or collector—whether merchant or manufacturer—it will save you time and earn its keep as an aide in your business.

BUT the Brush isn't only a business man's car. It is useful to others—the physician, the farmer—in business or as a family car.

Here its dependability, its simplicity, its durability, its adaptability, commend it. To many, they are more important than its low first cost and economy in operation.

Dependability has been repeatedly proven in public contests—in letters from owners. 9-year-old Louis Abernathy proved its simplicity when he drove it from New York all the way to Oklahoma. Its business record proves its durability. Its use by young and old in the families of owners proves its adaptability for both business and pleasure.

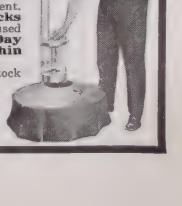
Why Take a Chance With Your Eggs or Chicks?



Don't blame your poor hatches to the parent stock, or the eggs, because lack of moisture, irregular heat, and cheap incubators are responsible for the deaths of millions of chicks in the shell every year.

The International Self-Humidifying Incubator is absolutely automatic in every function, unvariable temperature, positive moisture from the moment of starting the hatch until necessary to properly dry the newly hatched unit of future profit, so thoroughly safeguarding its entrance into poultrydom as to guarantee its livability.

Your brooder losses are not always the fault of the chicks. Ultimate success depends on the proper mothering of chicks.

The International Sanitary Hover is the only one positively supplying the highest temperature at the outer edge. Therefore, no loss by crowding to the center, and every chick has a chance under this hover. Entire metal construction. Portable and adjustable to all conditions. Eliminates expensive brooder house equipment.

Our best efforts are centered in the production of Day-Old-Chicks and Hatching Eggs from matured stock. No pullet eggs are used except for table purposes. All orders for Incubators, Hovers, Day Old Chicks or Hatching Eggs will positively be filled within 24 hours after receipt.

Grenfell of Labrador

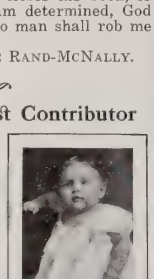
the Colonial Government has granted for endowment, $10,000—which was secured from the sale of an antiquated Seaman's Home which had failed—and free duty on all materials. Three steamship lines are carrying the material for the building free of charge, and the Institute has already received gifts of fittings and furnishings; yet there is a great deal needed.

The site for the building cost $13,000, and the building contract is $19,000. The plumbing, even at a cost-figure, will amount to $13,000, and the final furnishing cannot be done for less than $25,000. Many individuals aided by endowing and naming a room. One Newfoundland firm paid $5,000 for this privilege. The Edward Everett Hale "Lend-a-Hand" Clubs have taken a room. It costs $35 to furnish a bedroom and $100 will allow the giver to name a room permanently.

The permanence of the entire scheme is assured by the co-operation of the British, American and Canadian Committees that have taken the matter in hand. Dr. Grenfell's scheme is to charge each fisherman $1 for membership. The equivalent of this $1 will be given him in the form of tickets, which may be used by himself or passed on to any of his friends. All who come, whether members or not, will be equally welcome. In the end it is the doctor's ambition to be able to give a bed and breakfast, with all the opportunities for washing and bathing necessary, for fifteen cents. The average yearly earnings of these fishermen are only about $250 or $300, so that most of the upkeep of the Institute must be provided for before it is put into operation.



The help of all who will lend a hand to save and hold these great, rugged men of our own race and tongue, is needed. Dr. Grenfell says that $30,000 is still to come, and he has absolute faith that he will be able to raise it.

This is how he closes his book, A Man's Faith: "I am determined, God helping me, that no man shall rob me of my faith."

SOME TIME, SOMEWHERE

SOME day we'll see Him face to face,
In all His grand and matchless grace;
Some day, we know not when nor how,
He'll set a crown upon our brow:
Whatever kind that crown may be,
'Twill be the one that's best for me.

We feel within our very soul,
That we at last shall reach the goal
We've longed for here, yet still must wait
Till He reveals the heavenly gate;
We'll enter, for He will be there—
We know, some time, somehow, somewhere.

OWNERS KNOW THE REASONS WHY IHC CREAM HARVESTERS PAY BEST

LET I H C owners tell you about I H C Cream Harvesters. They know I H C superiority by actual experience. The local dealer will give you the names of some owners near you. Learn from them why I H C Cream Harvesters skim closest, are most durable, easiest to clean, and easiest running.

Let them tell you about the many profit-advantages of

I H C Cream Harvesters

Look over the I H C separators they are using every day. Then consider these facts:—

The wearing out of parts and many other cream separator troubles are largely due to dust and milk getting into the gears. I H C Cream Harvesters are the only separators with dust and milk proof gears which are easily accessible. A glance at an I H C will show you this great feature. I H C Cream Harvesters are protected against wear at all points by phosphor bronze bushings—not cast iron or brass bushings. I H C Cream Harvesters are constructed with larger spindles, shafts, and bearings than any other separator. The I H C bowl is free from slots or minute crevices, which make it remarkably easy to clean. There are many other advantages which any I H C owner or the local dealer will point out and prove to you. I H C Cream Harvesters are made in two styles—Dairymaid—a chain drive machine, and Bluebell—a gear drive separator—each in four sizes. In justice to yourself, see an I H C owner or the local dealer before you decide on any separator. If you prefer, write for catalogues and all information.

COLD STORAGE FOODS

The New York Legislature Passes Bill Limiting to Six Months the Time in Which Foods May Be Held in Cold Storage.

Following a spirited debate the New York General Assembly on March 8th passed a bill limiting to six months the time during which food may be held in cold storage warehouses.

Of course this is a step forward in the protection of the public from impure or poison—infected foods. As a matter of fact, however, very few people will care to eat foods that have been in storage six months—if they know it.

The cold storage proposition involves two questions; first, public health; and second, the high prices of foods. It was shown by the report of the Heyburn cold storage investigation committee in the United States Senate, that six months is the danger period for cold storage of meats. So much for the public health. It was also shown that it was through cold storage that certain great combines were able to corner the supply of eggs, poultry, meat and other food supplies, thereby raising the price of these commodities to the consumers.

It is for these reasons that the public welcomes any evidence on the part of state Legislatures to limit the length of time in which foods can be held in storage. As a matter of fact, however, the public can be independent of the cold storage magnates and need not endanger health by eating cold storage foods if they will undertake to give a little study and thought to the food question.

Take shredded wheat biscuit, for instance. Here's a product made out of whole wheat which contains more real, digestible, body-building nutriment than meat or eggs and costs much less. It contains all the body-building, strength-giving elements in the whole wheat grain made digestible by steam cooking, shredding and baking. Two million of these biscuits come fresh-baked, crisp and brown from the beautiful sanitary factory at Niagara Falls every day in the year. Shredded wheat biscuit will keep indefinitely in any climate. Cold storage corporations cannot touch it. Two of these shredded wheat biscuits, heated in the oven to restore their crispness, and eaten with milk or cream, or with fresh or preserved fruit, will supply all the strength needed for a half day's work or play. They not only supply all the nutriment needed to build the perfect human body, but their continued use keeps the stomach sweet and clean and the bowels healthy and active. Two of the biscuits make a complete, nourishing, wholesome meal at a cost of a very few cents.

The Greatest Missionary Force*

THE makers of this lesson are right. It is prayer which is the greatest missionary force.

In prayer you, coming weak and discouraged to the throne, behold the vision of Almighty Power. You and your feeble flock are not fighting alone. Back of you stands the Director of the battle and he has never known defeat. If no other help were granted you from prayer than this vision of the Infinite, the prayer would still be worth while.

To one who visits the swarming cities of the Orient, the idea that the world can ever be converted to Christianity seems almost incredible. Abraham Lincoln has described vividly his feeling of helplessness during the crises of the Civil War, and his falling back upon the mercy of God. Even so must feel the missionary among these hordes of ignorant and often bestial heathen; and, like the great war President, he falls upon his knees and lays the burden upon One who is greater than he.

"Trouble and perplexity," said the godly Melanchthon, "drive us to prayer, and prayer driveth away trouble and perplexity." And that brave soldier of Christ, Thomas à Kempis, wrote, "Come, then, my Christian brethren, let us advance boldly. Courage! for Christ is with us. He does not only lead us on, but will enable us to follow. Beloved, the King and Captain of our salvation marches at the head, ready to fight our battles."

All faithful Christians know that our prayers are often not answered as we, at the time, would have them. If they were, our beloved ones would never die; we, as the beloved of others, would never die; and neither would pain or loss or accident befall us. We know that only through pain and loss can strength and purity and sympathy usually be developed. Therefore, we make known our wants to God, and end with the Saviour's petition, "Not my will, but thine be done." And yet our Great Benefactor does often most graciously grant to us the desires of our hearts, in answer to the prayer of faith. Dr. Speicher tells us of an extraordinary case of this kind in China. While preaching in Haifong, he observed a young man who showed great interest. Later this young man, whose name was A Khoi, begged for personal instruction in Christianity. This was gladly given him, and he became a thorough convert to the true faith. By means of his efforts thirty young men were led into the fold of Christ. He bought a house and gave it to the missionaries for a chapel. His old pagan friends were sure that some awful calamity would overtake him and his companions in what these old friends esteemed to be rank iniquity. Therefore when the bubonic plague broke out in their city, they attributed it to the wicked Christians. When A Khoi himself came down with it, they were confirmed in this belief, and predicted his speedy death. Hundreds perished, but A Khoi, though very ill, lingered on. In his delirium he prayed constantly that, for the work's sake, he might be spared; and in this prayer his scores and hundreds of Christian friends joined earnestly.

No one else who had been so sick as he, recovered. The effect upon the community was almost magical. The Chinese saw before them the wonderful effect of the Christians' prayers, and all of those who were in any way related to A Khoi became Christians. They brought to Dr. Speicher all their idols. They were coated with gold leaf, and had been worshiped in the family for generations. Only those who know the Chinese can realize the depth of such a sacrifice.

"Pray for him whom thou lovest," said one of the ancient saints. "Thou wilt never have any comfort of his friendship for whom thou dost not pray."

COFFEE HEART

Very Plain in Some People

A great many people go on suffering from annoying ailments for a long time before they can get their own consent to give up the indulgence from which their trouble arises.

A gentleman in Brooklyn describes his experience, as follows:

"I became satisfied some months ago that I owed the palpitation of the heart from which I suffered almost daily to the use of coffee, (I had been a coffee drinker for 30 years) but I found it very hard to give up the beverage.

"One day I ran across a very sensible and straightforward presentation of the claims of Postum, and was so impressed thereby that I concluded to give it a trial.

"My experience with it was unsatisfactory till I learned how it ought to be prepared — by thorough boiling for not less than 15 or 20 minutes. After I learned that lesson there was no trouble.

"Postum proved to be a most palatable and satisfactory hot beverage, and I have used it ever since.

"The effect on my health has been most salutary. The heart palpitation from which I used to suffer so much, particularly after breakfast, has disappeared and I never have a return of it except when I dine or lunch away from home and drink the old kind of coffee because Postum is not served. I find that Postum cheers and invigorates while it produces no harmful stimulation." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

creed, red Indians this very hour might be holding a scalp dance on the site of this town.

"The new company," added Crane, "will sneak into nobody's backyard, will override nobody's conscience, will snatch away nobody's rights. It believes, first and foremost, in taking the people into its confidence at the outset. We purpose to make Lawyer Brickfelt, whom you all know and respect, president of the new company, Mr. Nelson and Mr. Burchard and others of the same conservative reputation directors, and Deacon Harris treasurer; and the first man to be appointed conductor on the new road will be Mr. Harmon, whose years of faithful service as stage-driver over the route entitles him to that honor. [An explosion of cheers.]

"This is not all; a gentleman, who, for the present, will remain nameless, will take one half the stock, and deposit the money for the same in your local bank before the end of the week. [Loudest applause of the evening.] The rest of the stock is at your disposal."

As the promoter sat, everybody else rose, cheered and hurrahed and shouted. The stock was subscribed for as if a hurricane had charge of the affair.

Just a year from the date of that meeting, Milford and the surrounding country celebrated the opening of the new trolley line. None of the evils so freely predicted were sown by the innovation. The two stores caught the spirit of enterprise enough to put up all their old dust-covered trumpery at auction, enlarge their places, and order supplies of up-to-date goods. At the end of twelve months the owners found that their profits were double the amount of any previous year in their experience. Milford, the village that had not seen ten new houses built in thirty-five years, started to grow! A couple of new streets were opened, and real estate owners began to realize that the value of their property was going up.

In the meantime, what of Muggins? He seemed rather a disinterested observer of the turmoil. He lived quietly on the hill, and though the evidence was unmistakable that his cunning hand still knew how to add fresh beauties to The Manse and its grounds, the strange tenant mingled little with the people of Milford.

Exactly one year after the trolley road was opened for business, Milford's eyes were greeted with the vision of huge posters, which read: "Milford, Attention! Grand Mass Meeting in the Town Hall, next Thursday evening. Everybody invited.

"The waterfall sings through the night,
The waterfall sings through the day;
A resounding engine of might,
Then why not make it pay?

(Signed) "ALFRED CRANE."

This cryptic announcement and the name of the promoter, who had neither been seen nor heard from for twelve months, were sufficient to fill the Town Hall with an eager crowd. On this occasion he acted as his own chairman; and in three minutes had placed his new scheme in outline before his audience.

"Citizens of Milford," he began, "for countless ages the waters of Kayroderos Creek have been running through this region; and right at this particular point was fixed a fall of about fifteen feet. The great Creative Power intended that that waterfall should be put sometime to manufacturing uses. That sometime has now arrived; and I'm here to-night to make due proclamation. You have too little business. Your young men, after standing about for awhile, go elsewhere; and this town loses them forever. The time has come to enlist the services of that fault in the creek's channel in the cause of keeping Milford's young men here with their old fathers and mothers."

Seeing that the field before him had been sufficiently plowed and harrowed for the sowing of the seed, Crane tersely unfolded the project. General electric works for the manufacture of all kinds of electrical implements; a building four stories high and covering half an acre of ground; the total cost, equipment and all else, not less than $400,000; one half of the stock already taken by an unknown, the rest thrown open to general subscriptions by local capitalists; the offices to be held by Milford residents.

In a week all the preliminaries were through. Milford's postmaster, James Carter, was chosen president. Ground was broken in three weeks, and the following summer the music of the falls was reinforced by the mighty melodies of whirring wheels and humming belts and the movements of hundreds of workmen.

Milford, of course, took a new leap forward. The best sinews and the most enterprising spirits of the town jumped to grapple the new opportunities.

Many of the villagers were not surprised when, at the end of another year, Crane's posters again summoned Milfordites to the Town Hall. This time, with no flourishes, the mouthpiece of the benevolent unknown reported that mysterious being's purpose to set up a public library in the community. To that end he offered to build a $75,000 housing for the books, these to be selected by a town committee, besides contributing a fund to add three hundred volumes every year to the shelves. All he asked of Milford was to meet the running expenses of the library. No Rip Van Winkle objecting, this Milford benefaction took its place in the lengthening list of surprises.

During the next few years little of extraordinary moment occurred in Milford. Nearly everything moved in normal grooves. The population rapidly increased; there were now several thousand more people than when Muggins walked into town that cold spring evening. Streets of beautiful cottages steadily multiplied. The old ramshackle store buildings made room for successors worthy of the town. A high school and two new church edifices came at the beck of educational and religious needs.

The gossip clubs duly noted all these changes; likewise that from some mysterious source came from time to time "lifts" and benefactions for which there was no explanation. Supplies of coal, in zero weather, landed at the doors of poor families. Blankets and clothing for children were handed into homes of want by expressmen. Some needed municipal improvement that had slowed down from lack of means suddenly had no excuse for a longer halt. Boys and girls of scant resources, but resolved to obtain an education beyond the gift of the village schools, discovered, at the end of the term, that they had unknowingly worked for and won a scholarship.

As time lapsed, Muggins was seen less often in the village; and finally his visitations ceased altogether. He now lived wholly with his books.

The inquisitive clubs had almost ceased to think of him when one evening in the store Dr. Huxley, the leading local physician, confirmed a rumor that Muggins was ill. "He will not live a week longer," stirred the heart of every man within hearing of the physician's prediction. The following day people saw Lawyer Brickfelt, Squire Burchard and Alfred Crane, who had come to town in response to a telegram, accompany the doctor to

Comfort for Old Age

JEWEL STOVES & RANGES

Heat does not always mean comfort. The dry, baked heat thrown off by radiators is not comfortable warmth—it saps life and energy out of you. You have noticed that in steam or hot water heated rooms. But the fresh, warmed air of is comfortable warmth—energizing, stimulating, healthful warmth. The reason the "Jewel" Warm Air Furnace is to be preferred to any other system is because it supplies just the amount of pure air needed in addition to an abundance of heat. As the fresh, warm air is delivered from the registers it displaces the colder and impure air. This makes comfortable, healthful warmth.

Jewel WARM AIR Furnaces

Learn About Comfortable Warmth Get This Free Book

It tells about comfortable and healthful warmth—it explains why warmed pure air is preferable to baked, dry heat. It tells of the economy of the "Jewel" Warm Air Furnace—how it saves fuel and gives more and better heat. It proves by eminent authorities why warm air is the hygienic heating. Autology

Dr. Moras has written a Commonsense Book on Autology, and by so doing, placed the Standard of the Creed of Health farther to the front than any man who has lived for a thousand years.
—Elbert Hubbard

"If I were a Carnegie I know of no way that I could get rid of my millions to better advantage than by placing a copy of Autology in every home in the United States. I believe the benefits would be greater than from all the libraries he has established."—H. G Sumner, Passaic, N. J.

Autology is the nearest to being the guide to Perpetual Youth of anything I ever saw in print. Anyone who reads it will know more about curing their ills and keeping well, than could be learned by reading all the medical books ever published. I have eliminated the old idea that we must be drugged, rubbed and robbed, electrified, burned and blistered, in a vain hope of getting well.—Prof. E. B. Denham, New Bedford, Mass.

"You are working a great good for humanity. My heart is filled with gratitude for what Autology has done for me. I was crippled with rheumatism to such an extent that I couldn't do my work, suffered all the time, very constipated, nervous, threatened with paralysis, pain and weakness in back and limbs. Now I feel perfectly well and strong and active as twenty years ago. My friends remark: 'How well you look, Mrs. Phillips'! Autology has saved me from a lingering death."—Mrs. H. F. Phillips, Algonquin, Ill.

"Wife and I thank you so deeply for your Autology, for we have the brightest and healthiest baby from its precepts."————, Hudson, N. Y.

Well or Sick You Need Autology

Autology is no theory, no fad, no creed. It deals with the practical business of your body and brain as you have learned to deal with the practical business of your home affairs, plants and flowers, your land and grain, your dollars and cents. With it there need be no such thing as pain or sickness in your life. Do you realize what that means? That you may see and know for yourself, write for

The Stranger Who Stayed

The Manse; and everybody said "will" under his breath. Three days later a village bell tolled "sixty"; and Milford knew what soul had passed from among the living.

The next morning Crane posters, the last the town was ever to see, bade all Milford assemble at the Town Hall "to hear news of great interest to every man, woman, and child." For once the hall could not hold the people who assembled; so they massed in front, and Promoter Crane used the pillared porch for a platform. With crape on his arm and tones befitting the occasion, he said:

"People of Milford, I shall take but a few minutes of your time. The man that you knew as Muggins is gone. You saw him, but you did not know him. Because of sorrow he buried himself, under an assumed name, in this quiet corner, away from the bustling world. He was an Englishman, born in Norway, and his name was James Watson Lonsdale. His father died early, and left his son a fortune of many millions. James studied at Eton and Oxford; and then for years traveled in every continent of the globe. A real estate investment in South Africa turned out a diamond mine, and his wealth increased tenfold in a few years. The death of one he loved, who, if she had lived, would have become his wife, drove him to seek a final home where nothing could remind him of joys prematurely snatched away. The place where he took up his abode was his. He bought it of the owner, whom he happened to meet in the diamond fields. The unknown who took half of the Milford and Castanet Junction stock was Muggins. By will he gives that stock to the town, to be used for the promotion of any needed public improvements. It was he who furnished half of the money for building and equipping the electric works. His interests there he bequeaths to the churches of Milford, all sharing alike. The giver of the library was Muggins. But this is not all. For the creation of a hospital for the free use of the people of this town he wills the site on the hill, and a sum to meet the expense of erecting the buildings and paying the current expenses.

"It was Mr. Lonsdale's wish that his will be withheld from public knowledge until after his burial, but those who shared the secret have otherwise decided."

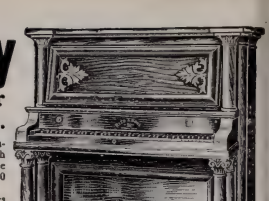
On the modest shaft beneath which sleeps the self-exiled Englishman is his full name, below which was chiseled, between quotation marks, the appellation "Muggins," and highest of all and in larger letters, with a golden gleam, are the words:



WHEN THOU DOEST GOOD, LET NOT THY LEFT HAND KNOW WHAT THY RIGHT HAND DOETH.

Always in His Place

WHEN a mere baby, just three years old, a little boy was seen toddling to Sunday School in the small town of Lagro, Ind. As he grew older, he still was in his place every Sunday, through rain, storm or sunshine. When six years old he entered the public school and worked hard and faithfully all through the graded school. Never in all those years has he been absent or tardy. He is now in high school. His interest in the Church and Sunday School has never waned. He has attended the Presbyterian church for eleven years without missing a single service. Although now grown up he still attends Sunday School. He is also a member of the church and doing good work for the Master. We trust as the years roll round and as the cares of life press upon him, he will ever find God's house a refuge from the storm, and work on faithfully to the end, until at last he hears the Master say: "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." A. FRIEND.

Among the Workers

—ONTARIO, ORE., has just closed a notable union meeting, resulting in 437 professions, and closing many vile resorts. The membership of the churches will be greatly increased. George W. Taylor was the evangelist in charge.

—REV. SAMUEL SCHOR, secretary of the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity Among the Jews, is at present in New York, endeavoring to bring his Palestinean exhibition to the metropolis. It had a great success in London.

—ONE OF THE most eloquent preachers in England to-day is a blind man—the Rev. J. Puleston Jones, a Welshman. He speaks with spiritual fire and his illustrations are drawn from the scenes and events of every day, the whole being full of pathos and tenderness.

—THE BIBLE Training School of Lestershire, N. Y., has acquired a new plant. It is in a beautiful grove of twelve acres on the banks of the Susquehanna and fronting Riverside Drive. For twelve years this school has been the centre of Bible teaching, evangelical and missionary work. The school is planning to occupy the new place in May next.

—MILVILLE, ORLEANS COUNTY, N. Y., has recently been visited by one of the greatest revivals that the community has experienced in many years. Rev. J. O. Jarman, assisted by Evangelist E. T. Liddell, of Philadelphia, has conducted special services with great success. Neighboring communities were interested in the movement and over a hundred people were led to Christ.—Melvil McGill.

—THE BROOKLYN Evangelistic Campaign, under Chapman and Alexander, which began a month ago in some forty-two districts, reaching from one end of that city to the other, closed with much enthusiasm on Tuesday evening, February 28. Dr. Chapman's closing sermon was one of power. He took for his text, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Before dismissing the great audience he called to the young men and boys and suggested that there might be among them some, if called by God, who might like to preach. Thirty-five responded, among them his youngest son, Hamilton. Dr. Chapman, Mr. Alexander, and a few members of the party sailed a few days later to begin a campaign in Wales.

—C. TELFORD ERICKSON, a missionary of the American Board at Monastir, Turkey, writes: "With the granting of the constitution, it was supposed that the work would move on unhindered; but nothing is farther from the truth. The reign of the Red Sultan was not more inimical to American Board work than has the present regime been to our work in Albania. My colleague was for six months forbidden to enter the country. We have three times been driven out, the first time when my wife was in bed with a twelve days' old baby. The last time she was sick with nervous prostration from witnessing the horrors and tortures inflicted upon the people. The military ordered us out in the night time with four small children; our way lay over mountain trails dangerous even for experienced riders, a four days' journey here to Monastir. In the time we have been here we have had a settled home only about four months. The Mission realized the only way our work would ever be established was to buy land, erect our own buildings and so root our work in the soil. This fund has no provision for such purchase, but we drew on it till it would stand, supplemented it with our salary, money gifts from friends to the children, over $2,000 personal outfit money, etc., and we have secured a splendid site, high, healthy, ample, a river on one side, building and limestone in abundance and all only a few minutes distant from Elbasan, the central city of Albania. But now we are at the end of our resources. There are four families of us, two Americans and two Albanians educated in America, and we have about enough money in the fund to put up one house, and nothing for buildings or enlargement of the work. We are like sentinels on the firing line without ammunition for our guns. We are the one mission to this people that has not a political propaganda behind it."

"SAVE-THE-HORSE" SPAVIN CURE.

REG. TRADE MARK

MAKES HIM GLAD AND PROUD and his words are right from his heart, for a valuable horse was in the balance and he had spent four years treating with other things.

Reading, Pa.—I must say that you have the best remedy on the market to-day and for price it is not a penny too much. I do and know how to express my glad feelings for you and the liniment, as it saved me about $400 on my horse, which I had treated with a dozen different remedies and by two of the best veterinarians. Who pronounced the horse incurable. All ask what I did, as he is going sound, and the first I used four years. I wish you could see him. Every where I go on Penn Street or any place the people stand and look at him—I am so proud of him I don't know what to do. The people can say all they want about other remedies, but I'll have "Save-The-Horse." I can hardly believe the cure you made and the way you treated me in my case. You must excuse me for writing a letter of appreciation like this, but I can hardly do otherwise with the horse I got now. I remain sincerely yours G. SCHLEIFENHEINER, Jr., No. 919 No. 9th Street.

This is one of the 15 house painting suggestions contained in our free portfolio of exterior color schemes. This portfolio will assist you in selecting the most satisfactory colors and materials for painting your house.

It is often difficult to know in advance just what effect a certain combination of colors will produce. This portfolio, showing actual houses in colors, and giving in each instance complete specifications for producing the effects shown, will enable you to know in advance what colors will look best on your house.

The portfolio is free. Its acceptance and use do not obligate you to use Sherwin-Williams Products, but the information it contains about these products will, we believe, appeal to your good judgment.

Another Portfolio
This one on interior decoration

Our Cottage Bungalow portfolio gives a complete plan with accurate specifications, for decorating and furnishing a home. The portfolio illustrates each room as well as three exteriors, all shown in colors. Even the curtains, rugs, draperies, and furniture are suggested. You can adapt any or all of the suggestions contained in this portfolio to your own home, or you can ask for and receive from us, without cost, special decorating suggestions carefully worked out and in harmony with the descriptions which you send. Send for these two valuable portfolios today.

Questions and Answers

A. E., York, N. Y. How long was it from the time Noah left the Ark until Abraham entered Canaan?

From the Deluge to the call of Abraham was 427 years, estimated, according to the best Bible authorities.

N. M. A., West Chazy, N. Y. When a person writes a story is he at liberty to send it to more than one publisher at a time and to accept offers from all? When one publisher buys a story is it his property to the exclusion of all others?

A manuscript should only be sent to one publisher at a time. This is a rigid rule of the profession, to break which by sending to several publishers simultaneously, would involve serious trouble, if more than one were to accept. When a publisher buys a story, he buys either the serial rights only or both serial and book rights. In either event, it becomes his exclusive property for his publication, unless it is desired to syndicate it to several publications, in which case the arrangement should be clearly understood.

C. K., Ghent, N. Y. 1. I recently heard a minister say he did not believe God created heaven and earth and all things in a period of seven days of twenty-four hours each. Is this sound doctrine? 2. Is it better or more sacred to use the word "Jehovah" than "Lord" in the twenty-third and many other Psalms so familiar to all?

1. The Bible nowhere implies that the word "day," as used in the account of the Creation, is to be interpreted as a day of twenty-four hours. Indeed, the Scripture tells us that "a day in his sight is as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day." The "day" of Creation was an indefinite period of time, and no one has the right to dogmatize as to its duration. 2. The word "Jehovah" is the name by which God made himself known to the ancient Hebrews under the Covenant. It is synonymous with "Lord," and is used in the Revised Version, although it will hardly displace the more familiar term which is endeared by association to all Bible readers.

W. V. M., Tullahoma, Tenn. Who said, "Truth crushed to earth shall rise again"?

William Cullen Bryant in his poem on The Battlefield.

Mrs. S., Grand Forks, N. D. 1. Kindly explain Ex. 20: 5. I can understand how our children suffer for our sin in the way of having to suffer for our lack of proper care for our health, but not further. 2. Is the temple Solomon built still in existence?

1. Our children suffer for our sins in a double sense, i. e., physically and spiritually; but the passage in Exodus referred specially to the continuing results of the sin of idolatry—"them that hate me." God reserved to himself the infliction of a special punishment for this sin alone. Under the Jewish law a man suffered for his own sin only (see Deut. 24: 16). 2. Solomon's temple was destroyed about B.C. 586.

J. B., San Diego, Calif. What is meant by the Victoria Cross?

The Victoria Cross is a martial decoration instituted in the reign of Queen Victoria and awarded only to those who displayed conspicuous bravery in the battlefield. The Cross is in the Maltese form, and manufactured from Russian cannon captured at Sebastopol. It is considered the highest honor a British soldier can wear.

E. W., Chicago, Ill. In my early childhood days we committed to memory a hymn, one verse of which and chorus ran as follows:

"Although you flourish like the rose,
That in the garden grows,
Your sparkling eyes in death must close,
No more will [illegible]
"We are passing away,
We are passing away
To the great Judgment Day."

Have been wondering if some reader of OUR MAIL-BAG could furnish the balance of this hymn, which I have always wanted to know. Sincerely hope so, as some reader may know it well.

H. E. B., Whitesboro. Did Jezebel, queen of Israel, know that Jezebel was conspiring to kill Naboth until she sent him word of the death? Was it for the [illegible] that judgment was pronounced against him, or for unlawfully possessing the vineyard?

We have no way of being [illegible] whether Ahab knew of the plot or not. We may, however, be morally certain that he did.

Ten Beautiful Roses
GIVEN TO CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS!

Wouldn't you like to have Ten Gorgeous Rose Plants blooming in your house or in your garden?

You may have them without actual cost if you will read this description carefully and follow its advice.

Think of it! Ten superb roses—red, white, pink, yellow—a color for every member of the household.

Hardy, rapid-growing roses. Ever-blooming roses for each week in the season. Roses whose fragrance is as the breath of the early summer.

Guaranteed to reach you in good growing condition, with special instructions on how to plant and care for them.

HERE THEY ARE:

Etoile De France. This glorious red rose blooms continuously through the entire season. The buds are exquisite and develop into immense, velvety crimson double flowers.

White Killarney. A hardy rose of robust growth and full branching habit, with buds long and pointed, developing into pure, snow-white flowers of enormous size.

Yellow Kaiserin. A yellow rose distinguished for the regal beauty of the buds and flowers. A robust, rapid grower, developing quickly into a well formed bush.

President Taft. A bright, sparkling pink flower produced in great profusion, filling sunny nooks and corners with exquisite beauty and delicious fragrance.

Dorothy Perkins. Large clusters of clear shell pink flowers deepening into a darker shade near the center. A most valuable acquisition to the list of hardy climbing varieties.

Queen of Fragrance. Pure white flowers of globular form shading to an exquisite shell pink toward the centre, and maintaining a sweet deliciousness during the entire blooming season.

Marigold. Deep full flowers of clear saffron yellow, borne on good stiff stems. A continuous bloomer that heads the list for size, fragrance and beauty of flower.

Maiden's Blush. Large flowers of salmon and rose pink tints, toned with an exquisite flesh color that resembles the flesh on a maiden's cheek. Vigorous and hardy.

Kaiserin Augusta Victoria. A rich creamy white flower that deserves its royal name. Large, deliciously fragrant, and retaining freshness and beauty for a long period.

Rhea Reed. This large red rose grows in great masses of double flowers developed from long, pointed buds. A marvel of mystic beauty and coloring.

How to Secure These Roses Without Cost

Isn't there, among your friends or relatives or acquaintances, some one who would be benefited by reading the Christian Herald? You can probably think of several in a few minutes, and it would indeed be easy for you to get them to subscribe for a short trial period, say from now until January 1st, 1912.

Therefore, if you will send us $1.00 we will mail the Christian Herald to any address in the United States and Canada until January, 1912, and for your trouble we will send, absolutely without any financial cost, to you or to any address you may designate, Ten Blooming Roses, like those described above.

This is the Planting Season
SEND NOW!

This is the time of year to plant Roses—this month and May are always best to insure early results. Therefore, why not send $1.00 now, quickly? We will send the roses to you right off, and you can secure the subscription later on, collect your one dollar from the new subscriber then, and thus the advance payment will have been refunded to you, a new member will have been added to the Christian Herald family, and you will have the ten roses growing in your yard, all without any financial expense to you. You surely can not afford to miss this great chance, and as the Christian Herald wants all readers to enjoy these sweet and fragrant roses, it is to be hoped that you will take advantage of this opportunity to secure 10 Roses in time for the real Rose season.

THIS OFFER WILL NOT APPEAR AGAIN

He certainly knew his wife's disposition and temperament, and he must have been dense indeed not to have realized that her assurance of the gift of the vineyard meant the removal of Naboth in some way. The letters were sealed with his seal, and it is more than probable that he knew this was done. A modern jury would surely call Ahab an accomplice in the murder. By Jehovah's instruction, Elijah said to Ahab, "Hast thou killed and also taken possession?" The judgment was "because thou hast sold thyself to do that which is evil in the sight of Jehovah." We may presume that this judgment meant complicity in the crime. It is almost too severe to have been meted out for the sin of accepting the blood-stained gift of the vineyard.

J. R., Gumberry, N. C. 1. What became of Solomon's temple? 2. What became of Noah's ark after the flood?

1. See answer to Mrs. S., Grand Forks, S. D. 2. It is believed to have found a lodgment on some peak or cleft of Mount Ararat, and to have gradually succumbed from exposure to the elements. Josephus, the Jewish historian (who lived in the first century of the Christian era), wrote of the ark in his Antiquities that "its remains are shown there by the inhabitants to this day"—that is, by the Armenian people. Of course, this cannot now be verified.

R. S. W., Fairview, Mont. What kind of food is pemmican, which Peary used when seeking the Pole?

Pemmican is a food preparation of the American Indians, consisting of buffalo or venison meat cut into strips and dried in the sun. These strips are then pounded and mixed with cranberries and other wild fruits and compressed into bags of cowhide. Pemmican keeps indefinitely and is much used on long journeys and also in time of war.

H. D., Ventura, Calif. 1. Is there anything definite known with regard to the deaths of Paul, Peter and John? 2. Why did our Saviour pray to the Father, having all power, both in heaven and on earth, inherent in himself, and why suffer anguish in view of death, when his mission upon earth was to die for sinners? 3. Would not our Lord's prayer for his enemies secure them from punishment?

1. According to traditional accounts, Paul was beheaded at Rome during Nero's reign; Peter was crucified there also; John endured much persecution and faced many dangers, but died a natural death, it is believed, at Ephesus. 2. Jesus when he became man was in "all respects as we are, yet without sin." He was susceptible to the same temptations and privations, pain and grief—the penalties of the flesh. Being God and immortal, he had power to lay down his human life and to take it up again (see John 10: 17, 18). In his self-imposed mission for our sakes he foresaw the physical suffering, and the anguish he would have to undergo, and even the death on the cross. The cry that was wrung from him was the cry of his human nature. 3. It was the expression of his Divine love and compassion, even toward those who, blinded by sin and fanaticism, had compassed his death. Believing him to be mere man and not God, they knew not what they did.

KNOCKING AT THE GATES OF TIBET

By CHARLES F. GEIGER

SLOWLY but surely the mystery which has so long enshrouded Tibet, "The Great Closed Land," "The Roof of the World," is being dispelled. From the remotest times curiosity and legend have centred about that land, and civilized nations have been stopped at its borders when in search of knowledge. It is only a few years since slumbering interest in Tibet was aroused by the results of the explorations of Dr. Sven Hedin and a few other intrepid travelers. As a factor in international questions Tibet has been unknown till within the last four years. England and Russia have both looked on it with longing eyes, but have seemingly studiously avoided all mention of it in their dealings with one another.

In 1907 the fate of Tibet was made an international question when that daring British military expedition, under Colonel (afterwards Sir) F. E. Younghusband, gained a forcible entrance into the exclusive land of the Dalai Lama, and after occupying the town of Gyantse, penetrated even to the sacred city of Lhasa. As a result of this expedition, the Tibetan cities of Gyantse, Gartok and Yatung were opened to British trade. In the same year an Anglo-Russian convention determined the following conditions with respect to Tibet: "The recognition of the suzerain right of China and the territorial and administrative integrity of the country; that no official representative at Lhasa should be appointed either by England or Russia, and that no concessions for railways, mines, etc., should be sought by either power."

Unsupported by any great government of the earth and with none of the publicity or spectacular effect of a military expedition, an advance was made upon Tibet which is destined to rival all others in glorious results.

On the 18th of July, 1908, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Muir, missionaries under the direction of the China Inland Mission, reached Batang, in Chinese Tibet, where they at once established a mission station. They were followed a week later by Dr. and Mrs. Shelton, of the American Christian Mission. Writing from this far outpost of Christian civilization—a distance of nearly one hundred days' travel from New York—Mr. Muir says: "We are actually as far west here as we can go at present, and at the door of the Great Closed Land. You can imagine how very strange we feel to be living here, where it is impossible for a European to go a step farther. Districts are opening, and last year we got into places where no foreigner had been before. The new official, when he comes, will doubtless reduce other tribes to submission, and as fast as the Chinese get control they will let us go in, but they will not do so now, because they cannot protect us there; for in the eyes of the world, they feel responsible for Tibet, and so they make us keep out." In 1910, by permission of Chinese officials, Mr. Muir was enabled to take an extended journey into Tibet proper. He penetrated as far as Chamdo, at which place the official refused to let him go any farther; so he turned back, passing, on his return to Batang, through the cities of Draya and Gartok, the latter one of the British trading towns.

The journey was through fertile mountain valleys, over swift flowing streams, and rough mountain roads always 12,000 to 16,000 feet above sea level, where the altitudes made the journeying both dangerous and difficult.

Mr. Muir's House

Tibet is all mountains and valleys. There is scarcely a plain worthy of the name. The mountain passes are at a high altitude, and crossed only with great difficulty. The valleys were found to be well populated, but the cities were small, and the houses crude buildings of mud walls. The streets are narrow and dirty. Northern Tibet is peopled largely by nomad tribes, while in the south there is a more settled population. Moffat in Africa beheld the smoke arising from a thousand villages, in the early morning light; so Mr. Muir on this journey saw entire villages, where Jesus is not known.

Buddhism has probably a firmer hold on the Tibetans than on any other people in Asia. This form of religion was brought in from India many centuries ago. The Dalai Lama at Lhasa is supposed to be the reincarnation of Buddha. He is the Grand Lama, and under him are all of the many lamas, or monks, of the lamasaries. Every family gives a son to be a lama, though it be the only son of the family. Writing of the great lamasary at Chamdo, Mr. Muir says: "The lamasary is built above the river in the fork of the two streams that join here to make the Mekong. The Tibetan city is built on the first level and the lamasary is on another level above the city, so that it may be seen from all directions. This lamasary is very wealthy. I was not permitted to see the main temple, but it is reported fabulously rich in gold and silver and gems. The one small chapel that I did see gives an idea of the wealth. It was the shrine of the thousand Buddhas. In this shrine in every lamasary the thousand images of Buddha are painted on the walls, or on a scroll, but here in Chamdo each separate Buddha was an image of brass, about six inches high and gold plated. The main idol was adorned with gems and gold and silver and coral, and in all, the small chapel gave an idea of richness and prosperity."

In the ordinary lamasaries often a thousand lamas may be found; while the great lamasary at Lhasa is said to contain over 5,000 of these monks. The Tibetan Buddhists have no knowledge of Jesus, or of his mission on earth. They have no knowledge of the Gospel, except as it is brought to them by heroic missionaries, and those who have dared to establish themselves on the Tibetan frontier in India. In order that one may form some opinion of the valiant spirit of Mr. Muir, the following extract is given from a personal letter: "The Tibetans are resenting the new regulations of their Chinese rulers, and so we have rumors of wars that may or may not develop into grave proportions. We are here and our God is able; so why should we fear? What can man do unto us? It is sufficient honor to be here and to have had the privilege of living where no Protestant missionary lived previous to our coming."

Mr. Muir is enduring his isolation and hardships as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. Having acquired the difficult Chinese language, he found it a yet more difficult task to learn the Tibetan. He is hopeful that soon other portions of Tibet will open to the Christian missionary, and eventually all of Tibet. The regions which he has explored in the interests of the Gospel, it is hoped will yet be evangelized.

The Easter Angel and His Message

TEXT: Mark 16:6
"He is risen; he is not here"

I. The Angel

WITH each account of the resurrection angels are connected. Their garments were snow-white. They were dazzling. Their appearance was like lightning. At sight of them the military guards were smitten with fear and became like dead men.

That feature in the life of the angel visitor which Mark with characteristic vividness selects for special notice is his youth. "A young man" was sitting in the tomb. And that suggests the youth of the immortals. Immortality without youth and with the memory of the lost youth still active would be an appalling curse. That possible tragedy is a theme often used by writers and by none more beautifully than by Tennyson in his Tithonus. Immortal life was granted Tithonus through Aurora in response to his prayer, but youth was forgotten in the plea, and when age came upon him he cursed the decree which tied him to life and envied the dead in their grassy beds. Now here we have on Easter morning the suggestion that the immortals are always young. In this life we grow from infancy to youth, to maturity, to decay. We have noisy debates as to the age at which life's productiveness ceases, we have satires as to the value of a suicide club, we have suggestions, sometimes playful, sometimes serious, as to how to get rid of the old, we have proposals of chemical methods, based upon physiological secrets, by which the maturity of life may be lengthened, we have essays upon how to grow old gracefully, we have reminders that age has its compensations and puts valuable qualities into the spirit. And the conclusion forced upon us by all the discussion of the problem of old age is that souls shrink from age and cling to youth, for whatever values age may bring, it is associated with the idea of decay and seems to involve decay.

Of course there are some whose minds stand the strain of life, its wear and tear, without apparent damage, like Victor Hugo, who, after a half century of intellectual energy, pouring out his thoughts in all forms of literary expression, said he had but just begun to express what was in him. There are many such souls. But even with them age is an intellectual drag if not a paralysis. Such minds are like strong engines in poorly timbered vessels, moving on through seas not too heavy for the engine, but too heavy for the hulk. And a trembling enfeebled body is a poor home for an eager spirit. It gets weary the sooner under the weight of an alert mind. A brilliant writer said: "The tragedy of growing old is in remaining young," which means that the lack of correspondence between spirit and body is a sad disaster. And the assurance of this radiant being at the empty sepulchre on Easter morning is that the time is coming when there will be no such distressing contrasts, when the vessel will be strong enough for the engine which drives it, the house be eternally suited to its tenant. The glorious body for which we shall exchange the body of our humiliation, the spiritual body, with its marks of power and glory, will have the splendor of youth and be able to meet all the demands of a tireless spirit.

Moral Deterioration

Sometimes age means the decay of other things besides the body. Moral deterioration with the lapse of years is common enough. A medical writer has maintained that moral sentiments naturally decay in the course of years, and that "age becomes ethically inferior to youth by a process as natural as the whitening of its hair or the lowering of its vital force." Such teaching is full of peril. Its basis is materialism, which denies personal freedom and makes character a product of physical forces. It is quite true that history has instances of moral lapse, notable cases like Nero and Henry VIII., common cases like that which Stevenson portrays in his Ebb-Tide. There have been a good many sad relapses and sadder wrecks of character. They are not inevitable. The moral glory of life as well as its intellectual strength may stay with us to the end. But there is sore danger that moral ideals may be lowered and moral sinews be unbraced by the disintegrating power of time. And it is blessed to know that at last in the highest things, the things that make the best in life, the things which when preserved lead life at its grandest to the grave, the vision, the ideals, the impulses, the courage, the holy tempers of the soul, there will be eternal youth. No moral weakness, no eclipse, no dimness, no old age, but everlasting moral strength. Such strength is guaranteed in eternal youth. You cannot separate the process of growth from healthy life. Living things grow. Living souls grow there as well as here. And the growth will never conduct any soul into the dim light and lonely valleys of old age. An old mystic said, "The oldest angels are the youngest." That suggests a process the reverse of what we know here. Instead of growth leading to age it will lead to youth. The longer we live the younger we shall get. Youth will always thrill us. Eagerness, zest, glow, hope, power, splendor will characterize life forever and forever.

II. The Angel Message

1. "He is not here." One of the foundation stones of the Christian Church is the empty grave. The first deniers of the resurrection admitted the empty grave when they said, "His disciples came and stole him while we slept." The body was gone. Where? Did his friends steal and hide it so as to give color to their story of a Risen One? Then they were liars, and out of their theft and falsehood came their later jubilant faith and the enthusiastic service which brought them persecution and death. Now men may be persistent in adhering to a lie when their own interest is involved, but they do not get radiantly happy when they repeat the lie, and do not sacrifice themselves in a service which they know has such moral rottenness at the heart of it. Where was the body? Did his enemies know? If they did they could easily, at any time in the days succeeding Pentecost, have produced the body or taken competent witnesses to view it, and so shattered the resurrection romance and made a laughing-stock of these disciples who were organized either as liars or dreamers. The body—where was it? Was the death only apparent? Did Jesus, under the influence of aromatic spices and the cool air of the rock tomb, revive and creep out wounded and weak? Did he find some obscure place in which to hide while he recovered a measure of strength? Did he die at last in some Phœnician inn or among the rock caves of the Essenes? Did he keep himself aloof from his friends because he had ceased to care for them? Or did he do it in order to create the impression that he had risen from the dead? That is a theory which transfers the imposture from the disciples to the Master and is absolutely abhorrent to any decent soul.

Death Conquered

The theories of modern deniers of the actual resurrection differ from these earlier and bungling ones of a stolen body or a sick body. Now they say that while the body was not lifted into life, Jesus himself was really alive, in the life which all souls have when the body is overthrown, and the living one sent spiritual telegrams to the expectant spirits of these disciples and made them sure not only that he had survived death, but sure also that they saw him in bodily form and heard him speak and walked with him in the roadway and sat with him at meat and breakfasted with him in the glowing dawn by the lakeside. But the difficulty with all such theories about expectant disciples being persuaded by spiritual communications that their Lord was alive, is, first, that they were not expectant—not in a mood to be persuaded by anything but sense perception; and second, their belief was not merely that their leader had survived death, but that he was risen from the grave, and that faith could not have lived if the dead body still rested in its rock niche. The beginning of their faith was not a spiritual telegram, but a missing body. Breathless with haste, Peter and John looked in on Easter morning, saw the linen clothes lying in orderly array, as though their wearer had risen in leisurely fashion, but saw no body; and they believed. A vacant tomb, not a spiritual impression, was the basis of faith. "He is not here"—that was the first truth verified. When Peter and John after Pentecost had healed the lame man and were put in prison for it, and in the morning were brought before the council, the leaders of which were Sadducees, who denied that there was any such thing as a resurrection or angel or spirit, and Peter, once a coward, now a hero brave and calm, said, "If you inquire into this good deed, be it known unto you that Jesus whom ye crucified, whom God hath raised from the dead, he hath made this man whole." Why did not the Sadducees put these brave preachers to confusion and disrupt this new sect by pointing out the sealed and occupied grave? Why didn't they? There is only one answer. They couldn't. "He is not here."

2. "He is risen." Jesus in his complete personality has weathered the storm of death. Some would comfort us in our griefs with assurances of an impersonal immortality, with promises of final absorption into the universal soul, with guarantees of an immortality of influence. These are all vague, misty theories, with no answer in them to the clamor of the heart. If anything is to last it ought in justice to be that which is highest in value. Now the highest treasure we know is personality. Says one student, "Expel if you can the idea of personality from the universe, and it is doubtful whether anything appears to exist in some relation or other to conscious and intelligent, that is personal, life. . . .

"He is Risen!"

The visible world somehow fits into the spiritual fact of personality, and the universe breaks up with personality taken out of it." No immortality of influence or of virtue can be a substitute for personal immortality or is indeed conceivable apart from it. "He is risen." One can imagine without any great strain of his imaginative faculty a tone of expostulation in the angel word. "He is risen." He could not be among the dead. He must be alive. That is the natural angel view. The surprise of the disciples was his resurrection. But the surprise of the angels was his death. Now the view of the angel is the true view. We feel the truth of it when our eyes are clear. The best must live on. "As God lives, what is excellent is permanent." We cannot believe that the universe brings forth its finest products just in the way of blind exercise or as bits of sport. We cannot think that the heroes and the saints, the towering flashing souls, are made just to be dashed in pieces when completed. Such a universe would not be rational. It would be bedlam. "He is risen." Of course. Nothing else could be imagined about him. And the disciples came to hold that view. Peter said at Pentecost, "It was not possible that he should be holden of death." But they did not at first see that. They did not in advance so understand the glory of their Master as to expect the resurrection or be confident that he would survive death. The prospect of his death alarmed them. The fact of it appalled them. They needed the manifestation clear and unmistakable of his death-conquering power, just as they needed in him the manifestation of God and of goodness. It was after the resurrection and after the Spirit's coming that all the films were brushed from their eyes, that the angel view became their view and they saw that the risen life was his necessity.

Sin's Captives Freed

"Risen." By his own act. "I have power over my life to lay it down and power to take it again." He is "declared to be the Son of God with power by his resurrection from the dead." Not made the Son of God by his resurrection, but declared to be such. The resurrection is the clear and final statement of his divinity, which would not be true if he were lifted by power external to himself. It is his power which checks the operation of nature's laws, brings again the thrill of life to the dead form and the flush of life to the pallid cheek, which restores not an enfeebled vitality but an abounding life, which transforms the very particles of the body with such a mysterious change that gravitation cannot control it and solid walls cannot serve as detaining barriers. And this mighty conqueror is our mighty deliverer. With his splendid all-sufficient power he wrenches loose and carries off the gates of sin which would imprison us and the gates of death which would bar our progress, sets free sin's captives and death's victims and becomes our living ever present leader into life that is holy and glory immortal.

* Pastor Madison Avenue M. E. Church, New York City.

The Dawn of Easter

THE flowers will bloom for Easter;
The lilies pure and white
Will bring their sweetest perfume,
And make the old earth bright;
They come from depths of darkness,
To bloom in sweetness here,
In purity and beauty,
All lonely hearts to cheer.

O glorious dawn of Easter!
That morning long ago,
When from the dead our Lord arose,
And conquered every foe.
The sun in golden splendor
Would burst through clouds of night,
And old earth would seem fairer
In this its brighter light.

Oh, glad, the dawn of Easter morn,
The gladdest of the year;
Our Lord indeed is risen,
Rejoice, and never fear;
With angels join your voices,
His praises now to sing;
He ever lives who once was dead,
Our risen Lord and King.

Vacation Bible Schools

THE National Vacation Bible School, of which Robert G. Boville is director, has had a year of unusual success. During that time the institution has ministered to the physical, mental and moral welfare of 19,578 boys and girls all over the United States. Vacation schools are now located in New York, Jersey City, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Providence, Baltimore, Kansas City, Albany, Holyoke, Cleveland, Pittsburg, McKeesport, Pa., Homestead, Pa., and Washington, D. C. In the daily routine, manual work and play are coupled with Bible lessons and devotional exercises. The children devote the best products of their manual labor to neighboring children's hospitals and at the close of each session, they carry their gifts to their sick comrades. They subscribed 10,000 pennies toward the building of another Vacation Bible School, which is to be opened in some new district where vacation privileges are few. The Daily Bible Vacation School had its origin in New York City in 1901. Twenty-one colleges are now interested in the work. More than half of the schools owe their support to the contributions of the churches in which they were held. Another institution of this character is to be opened at Hankow, China, under the direction of the Rev. E. H. Cressy.

ANVIL STROKES

..THE growing Christian requires much spiritual food.

..OUR daily talk should harmonize with our Sunday prayer.

..A MAN doesn't harden his heart until he has softened his head.

..A MAN may work his way into heaven by working his way into the hearts of people.

..HE WHO cannot pray in public has no way of proving that he prays in private, except by the way he lives.

..THE man who goes on to perfection through the course of a lifetime, will go on in perfection through eternity.

..THOUGH he doesn't open his mouth, the sinner says "No" to God every time he has an opportunity to say "Yes."

..A FRIEND is such a valuable asset that a man can afford to go a little out of his way to convert an enemy into one. W. J. B.

Better Than Sculptured Marble

DEAR CHRISTIAN HERALD:

I am a subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD almost, if not quite, from its infancy. I have been an admirer of Dr. Klopsch since he became interested in it, and I think that in honor of his memory a monument at Mont-Lawn surpasses and speaks as no sculptured marble ever would. I earnestly hope that it may be perpetuated. The little children who used to watch for his coming will never forget their friend and benefactor. His influence will live for ages to come. MRS. N. T. C.

The Day of Hard Things

By EUGENE THWING

PRAISE of hardship is never a popular philosophy. The most eloquent tribute may be paid to the value of pain, and struggle, and misfortune, yet we are not eager to welcome them as heaven-sent blessings. When Paul exhorts us to "covet earnestly the best gifts," we think naturally of success, and power, and helpful service, seldom stopping to consider how these things must be gained. It isn't easy to agree with James when he writes, "Count it all joy, my brethren, when ye fall into manifold temptations."

Nevertheless, it is wholesome to face the truth. If we really want "the best gifts," if we really desire to gain power and make our lives rich in usefulness, we must know the price and be willing to pay it. A great life can no more be made without trials than a gold coin can be made without fire and pressure. What would we think of the miner who carefully put his ore away in a glass case because he feared to subject it to the fiery furnace of the smelter, and the heavy rollers, the steel punches and the crushing dies of the mint? He would be "protecting" his ore from the very process necessary to bring it to its highest value.

MERE hardship in itself, of course, is not a warranty deed to greatness. We need not hunt for trouble as a first preparation for success. But we must surely expect it, for it lurks somewhere in the path of every aggressive and progressive life. There is no standing still, no hiding in camp, for the Christian soldier. "Let him who is enlisted for the war expect to meet the foe." Let him "endure hardness like a good soldier," thanking God that out of the struggle and hardness—yea, even out of the defeat—may come the strength which later shall prove invincible.

"Godly men," says Dr. Stifler, "find treasure in disaster. . . . A failure in business has taught many a self-willed man that the directing hand of his life was God's, and not his own, and has been the means of teaching him the truth of the first beatitude. . . . It is a shame for a man to come out of a long sickness and not be stronger at heart. It is a pity to waste a temptation or a misfortune; they are the most valuable things that we ever get, for they conceal new ideas, and possibly can lift us to new beatitudes." As Emerson said, "Every evil to which we do not succumb is a benefactor."

IT IS a good deal easier to talk about these things than it is to fit them into our everyday experience, but there need be no theory in the matter at all. Every one of us can translate this truth into terms of real life. It is nothing if not a practical working rule. We are familiar enough with it in business life. The wise father sends his son into the workshop with cap and overalls to begin at the bottom and learn, through hard experience, the details of the great business before taking him into the handsome suite of offices as a partner. The man whose business judgment is surest and whose operations are most successful is the one who has "learned his lesson" through bitter heart and nerve trying experience. The positions of trust and responsibility go to such men, who have met opposition, who have grown strong in struggle, who have grappled with defeat, who have been thrown down, perhaps, but have risen again more eager for the fight, more sure of the victory.

THERE is great need in this nation for strong men and strong women. The fight against the monstrous evils in politics, and business, and society cannot be waged successfully by weaklings. Everywhere we find good people bemoaning the evils so rampant in public and private life. They theorize regarding causes, and tell what ought to be done—and wait for somebody else to do it. Like the ten spies in Canaan, they see the giants, the sons of Anak, and feel themselves to be like grasshoppers before them—and so they are when they feel that way; but if they are willing to pay the price they may be giants, too, in spirit. A difficult task, bravely undertaken, brings, step by step, its own equipment, and develops, through hardness, the strength to prevail. It is only "through labor and painful effort, by grim energy and resolute courage, that we move on to better things," as Roosevelt says.

Have you ever been in perplexity or trouble, when you felt the need of a brother's sympathy and counsel? Where did you look for it? Did you go to one whose life had always been easy and pleasant, or did you go straight to one who knew, from his own experience, just what you were suffering?

When did ever a man or a woman do a great thing for humanity and for God without the preparation of difficulties and hardships overcome or sorrows endured?

THE only thing worth while in life is service to others—a life that will brighten and lift up all it touches. Any trial, any hardship, any victory over difficulties that can give the sweetness and strength for such a life of cheer and helpfulness is a wonderful blessing.

When some brother or sister who is passing through the "valley of the shadow" reaches out an appealing hand to you for help, it's worth while to be able to give that help. The burden and the pain in all walks of life give glorious opportunities to the strengthened, purified, valiant soul.

He who came into a sinful and suffering world with miracles of love and helping was a "Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." He uttered his most inspiring message when he said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do." Certainly he spake not to cringing, doubting, selfish, or ease-loving men. His promise, his wonderful legacy, was for those who are willing to gain through pain and struggle his meek and kingly spirit. Is there any more wonderful blessing in all of human life than such a legacy and the experience which fit a man or woman to claim it?

Eastertide

EASTER lilies softly swinging,
In the breezes gently singing,
Echoes sweet their bells are ringing,
At Eastertide.

Nature voices all her gladness,
Lays aside her gloom and sadness,
All is peace and joy and gladness,
At Eastertide.

So let every heart of sorrow
Neither trouble keep nor borrow;
All is peace upon the morrow,
At Eastertide.

Tell the resurrection story,
Tell of Him, the King of Glory,
Every tongue repeat the story,
At Eastertide.

Ring, ye Easter lilies, ring!
In the breezes gently swing;
Every heart for joy shall sing,
At Eastertide.

Some Famous Wills

THE last wills or testaments of historical personages are always of interest to the world at large. There have been some very remarkable wills, but in general these reflect the characters of those making them. Though the common form of the document as we now know it originated in Roman law, men in the olden time disbursed their property much the same as we do in modern times. Adam made a will, though he had not much to leave. Sennacherib, 700 years before Christ, made a will in which he bequeathed to friends, bracelets, coronets, trinkets, gold, ivory and precious stones kept in the Temple of Nebo.

Jacob must have left a will, for the Scripture says: "Joseph received a portion above his brethren."

Those old-time worthies, Plato, Aristotle and Petrarch, left wills of great length and ornamented with those beauties of language in which they were skilled masters.

Cæsar bequeathed his jewels, swords and military accoutrements to acquaintances who he thought would appreciate them for the sake of the owner.

The will of William Shakespeare is deposited in Somerset House, London. In addition to the will he left behind a command for no one to disturb his grave—one, however, which was not obeyed. It read:

Good friend, for Jesus' sake forbear
To dig the dust enclosed here;
Blest be he who spares these stones,
And curst be he who moves my bones.

Napoleon's will was a long time on exhibition in London, but is now in French custody.

The will of Washington is on file in Virginia, but a copy of it is kept in Washington.

Robert E. Lee, the Southern general, though he fought to keep black men in chains, freed his own slaves by his will.

Lincoln and Grant both died intestate.

The last testament of P. T. Barnum was so long it had to be printed in pamphlet form.

Brigham Young in his will provided for nineteen wives and almost three times as many children.

Florence Nightingale, who recently died, in her will bequeathed her body to dissection that medical science might benefit.

There have been many curious wills manufactured in fiction, but often the wills of real men and women surpass in both curiosity and originality any that can be thought out or conceived by the brain of the romancer.

Regarding Creeds

PERMIT me to thank you for your timely editorial on "Concerning Creeds." I have been wondering what has possessed the minds of so many Christian writers, that they have become credophobists, when every intelligent Christian knows that some kind of creed is absolutely essential as a bond of unity in any church organization. How any one can profess to have faith and then deny having a creed is a mystery which I cannot solve. God speed you in your efforts "to contend for the faith," etc., and for your work of charity and good will in all directions.

New York's Capitol Flame-Swept

EARLY on the morning of March 29 a fire broke out in the west wing of New York's historic capitol at Albany, and before it could be subdued the huge $27,000,000 pile was damaged to an extent of between $5,000,000 and $8,000,000. The State of New York will have to bear the loss, as there was no insurance on this part of the building. Only one human life was sacrificed, that of a watchman named Abbott. Great as is the material damage from an architectural and utilitarian standpoint, it is almost as nothing when compared with the priceless treasures in the way of historical books, documents, manuscripts, paintings, urns, relics, bric-a-brac, etc., dating back to the earliest history of our country and commemorating every step of the State of New York's achievements and progress for more than three hundred years, which have been sacrificed to the flames. These can never be replaced; their intrinsic and historical value was such that money could not have purchased them, therefore their loss cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. The magnificent State library, probably the most complete and valuable of its kind in the world, was totally wrecked. In all about 1,000,000 books, pamphlets, manuscripts, files, drawings, plans and specifications were destroyed. The collection of Governor Clinton, containing hundreds of letters from Washington, was destroyed. Among the burned papers was the first charter of Trinity Church, New York City, from the British Crown. Oil portraits and crayon sketches of men whose lives have been identified with the history of the State in all its phases were consumed. A sentiment clung around some of these which words cannot describe. Faces of Colonial days looking down from their canvas had made themselves familiar to the people of our generation, linking, as it were, the historic past with the rushing present. Now they are gone, leaving only memories which a short time will efface. Many Indian relics, which cannot be duplicated, went up in flame and smoke.

Of course the library records were the most valuable from a sentimental viewpoint, as they practically encompassed the whole history of the State, its political rise as also its social side, to the present commanding position it now occupies; but there were also destroyed very many valuable documents relating to the present time, the loss of which will entail much confusion and probably clog the machinery of some of the State departments for some time. Some of these were of great commercial value. They were chiefly stored in the Excise, the Lunacy, the Court of Claims, the Regents', Attorney-General's, State Treasurer's and the Charitable Departments of the State Government. In the examination offices many of the thousands of test papers from the examinations held in January were burned. Only those stored away in the east wing were saved. What effect this will have on the standing of students is not known, but it is believed the loss of these papers will not militate against the pupils, as in all probability the regents will accept the rating or percentage given by the teachers in the schools in which the pupils made their studies. Practically speaking, all the destroyed examination papers came from New York City. The regents' examinations are held twice a year, in January and June, and were students to be deprived of their January credits, it would certainly put them back considerably in their qualifications for admission to the various professions.

The fire, fed by the thousands of books and other inflammable material in the library, swept through five floors along the entire western wing. The flames drove the firemen back again and again, and it was not until after nine hours' hard work that the fire was extinguished. The damage to the exterior masonry was conservatively calculated at $2,000,000. The interior masonry suffered an injury of almost like amount. The grand $1,000,000 stairway, pronounced by authorities the most imposing architectural feature in America, was defaced and blackened, and most of its beautiful carvings and cornices destroyed.

Fortunately, the Senate Chamber was practically untouched, and a few thousand dollars can restore the meeting-place of the Lower House to its former condition; but as far as the building is concerned it will take both a long time and millions of money to put it in its former state.

The capitol has been justly admired for its architectural beauty all over the world. The structure is white granite with red-capped towers. It has been in course of construction fo almost forty years, and to date has cos some $27,000,000. The original plan called for an expenditure of onl $4,000,000, but as the years hav passed it has been enlarged and embel lished under every successive adminis tration, until it is probably the mos costly public building in America Time and again public sentiment ha condemned the outrageous cost, seein; no good to be accomplished in such magnificently pretentious structure The dimensions of the capitol are 30 feet north and south and 400 feet eas and west. With its porticos it cover over three acres. The foundations o the walls are laid in beds of concrete sixteen feet deep and four feet thick so there is not much danger of the edifice tumbling, except from the most violent of earthquakes. The building is beautifully situated, crowning the highest of the hills on which Albany is built, and overlooking the city and its environs. The present set-back wil indefinitely defer its completion.

EASTER SONG

THE Sun should rise most fair this day,
All birds exult and blithely sing,
And all life swell a roundelay
Till earth with soulful song shall ring.

For our Lord from the grave did rise,
And conquered death forevermore,
And we with Him beyond the skies
Shall havens gain unknown before.

This sweet springtime that fills the air,
And brings the bloom to all the hills,
It only tells of life more fair
When we have known the frost that kills.

The buds that swell this Eastertide,
And brooks long hushed now glad in song,
They tell to all the world so wide
That there can be no death for long.

The grasses breaking through the sod
A tale of resurrection tell—
Thus lived again He that was God,
And for all creatures all is well.

So let this day be fair and glad,
And music ring in earth's domain;
Of death let no thought make us sad,
For we but die to live again!

It Grows Better and Better

I want to thank you for the pictures you so generously sent me. I shall prize the fine one of Dr. Klopsch, and shall have it framed and hung in my room. The worker is called home, but the work will go on. Your paper gets better and better. I am interested in every department of it. Mrs. Kingsley's serial is most interesting.

THE BIG ROOSEVELT DAM OPENED

THE second largest dam in the world has just been completed in Arizona. It was opened by Theodore Roosevelt, after whom it has been called, on Saturday, March 18. The ex-President pressed an electric button, setting in motion a mechanism which raised three massive iron gates, weighing 6,000 pounds each, allowing three torrents of water to rush forth down the great valley, from which it will be turned to irrigate some 250,000 acres of land formerly arid and useless. This irrigation scheme of the government is to induce Indians to take to farming. Desert wastes will be made to blossom as the rose, and a good livelihood will be obtained in places that were once as unproductive as the middle of the Sahara. The poor Indians, especially the women, in times gone by had to carry water like beasts of burden in order to make fertile little patches here and there from which they obtained after infinite labor a few ears of corn or some stunted vegetables. Now they can have farms hundreds of acres in extent and raise enough to bring them large returns from exportation. The Roosevelt Arizona dam cost over $6,000,000 in construction. It is of sandstone and cement and rises 284 feet above the Salt River. It is 1,080 feet long on top and 170 feet thick at the base. The reservoir is twenty-five miles long and 280 feet deep and has a capacity of 56,628,000,000 cubic feet of water. The only dam in the world that surpasses it is that of Assouan on the Nile. The opening up of this part of the country to arable cultivation by means of irrigating the wastes will certainly prove a great blessing to the Indians of the section, whose lot heretofore has been far from a happy one. With a productive soil, they will be able to settle down in a permanent way, devote all their attention and energy to tarming work from which they may make a good livelihood and thus become producers and useful members of the commonwealth.

A Section of the Wall of the Roosevelt Dam

The irrigable area is capable of providing the most abundant crops. Indeed, it is to be doubted if in all the arid West there is a valley better adapted to cultivation than the one over which the waters of the dam will now flow. All it required was the necessary moisture to make it productive, for the climate is kindly in this section. Almost all crops common to the semi-tropical and temperate zones can be raised here, and the year can be made a continual sowing and reaping season from January to December. Harvests can be gathered every month. It is estimated that the annual income from the land, when under right cultivation, will approach a nine-million-dollar mark, and that some 15,000 families may be comfortably supported on the farms.

Hopes of Early Peace in Mexico

General Bernardo Reyes | Ramon Corral, Retiring Minister of the Interior | Jose Yves Limantour, Minister of Finance | Francisco de la Barra, Formerly Ambassador at Washington | Enrique C. Creel, Retiring Min., Foreign Affairs

WHILE in the United States' mobilization camps in Texas training and preparation have been pressed forward as if war were expected in the near future, the fighting of the federals and revolutionists has been steadily increasing just across the border in Mexico. The States of Sonora and Chihuahua are still the theatre of the most active warfare. In spite of conflicting reports of the results of battles each side seems to have had some successes and some reverses. In an attempt to hold Chihuahua City seven hundred insurrectos have taken up positions between Chihuahua City and General Rabago's federal forces, according to reports from the war zone. This division is a part of the force of Francisco I. Madero, the revolutionary President, who is now said to have about 1,500 cavalry.

An American engineer who recently returned from that district said of the situation: "We learned that Rabago was on his way to Casas Grandes, when in obedience to a call from Chihuahua that the insurrectionists were becoming numerous about the city, he turned southward. Before he got far, he found that insurrectos had surrounded the city about twenty miles out. We know the insurrectos were there, for we had to pass through their ranks. Rabago is now in the position of being cut off from Chihuahua, and yet pushed toward it by an insurgent army at his rear."

The federal troops under Luis Medino Barron, chief of the Rurales in Sonora, were credited in the official dispatches with the defeat of 500 revolutionists at La Colorada. Passengers arriving in Nogales over the Sonora Railway from the south did not corroborate the official Mexican account of the battle. Instead of a federal victory, with a large number of the rebels slain, these passengers said that the government troops were defeated, and that the rebels were still entrenched on a hill commanding the town and controlling its water supply. A later report bearing out their statements said that the revolutionary force that took La Colorada was well received by the inhabitants.

Though the activities in the field still go on, the leaders on both sides are making every effort to restore peace. Señor Francisco Madero, father of the revolutionist leader, said recently when passing through New Orleans on this way to Mexico:

"We are working for peace now, and will try to conciliate the warring factions. It isn't so much an election as a change of policy that we will fight for to the end. We are fighting for principles and not for political rewards."

An American mining engineer of Mexico City recently said: "This insurrection is not a warfare waged by ruffians and bandits, but properly organized by intelligent people who know what they want and intend to get it. The Mexican people want to elect their own governors and mayors of the various cities and towns and not have incompetent officials forced upon them. The governors have become millionaires on the gleanings of their offices. The Mexican people have never had a square deal, and the demands of the insurrectos are so reasonable and so just that all the foreigners are in sympathy with them."

The arrival of Señor José Yves Limantour in Mexico City was not without remarkable results, though his reform moves do not seem to have been attended by any increase of satisfaction amongst either the revolutionists or the milder political reformers. After several days of apparent tentative awaiting of expressions of public sentiment, President Diaz nominated the new Cabinet he has chosen to succeed the one which he requested to resign. The personnel of the new administration is as follows:

Foreign Relations—Francisco Leon de la Barra.
Justice—Demetrio Sodi.
Public Instruction—Jorge Vera Estanol.
Industry and Colonization—Manuel Marroquin y Rivera.
Communications and Public Works—Norbeto Dominguez.
Finance—José Yves Limantour, incumbent.
War and Marine—General Manuel Gonzales Cosio, incumbent.

Changes even more sweeping are in contemplation, for it is understood that all sub-secretaries will resign when the ministers take office. There is much dissatisfaction over the make-up of the Cabinet. The military patrol of the city has been increased, and the situation seems to be more critical than ever. The anti-government political clubs have even gone so far as to announce a slate for a Cabinet that would be acceptable to them. It is:

Foreign Relations—Señor Limantour.
War and Marine—General Bernardo Reyes.
Interior—Rafael Rebollar.
Justice—Felix Romero.
Treasury—Manuel Zamacona.
Industry and Colonization—Emilio Pimentel.
Communications—Gilberto Crespo.
Public Instruction—Vasquez Gomez.

One of these men so acceptable to the liberal forces, Manuel Zamacona é Inclan, has been named as ambassador to Washington to succeed Señor de la Barra. The Mexican people seem well enough pleased that Señor Limantour should remain in the Cabinet, but are not averse to declaring their dissatisfaction with a number of the new appointments. General Cosio, the minister of war who continues in office, is one of the three members of the old administration against whom the masses have raised the cry of "old age." All of the retiring ministers were past sixty-five years of age, and it has been well known that their duties have been for some time performed by substitutes.

The revival of the possibilities of General Bernardo Reyes taking a hand in the affairs of Mexico is heralded with great joy by many of his countrymen. General Reyes left Mexico some years ago, it was believed at the request of the government, as his popularity and ability, coupled with his pronouncedly modern and reformative ideas, were then considered dangerous by President Diaz and those in power. He has been recalled to Mexico by cable.

Predictions of a peaceful solution of the internal disturbances in Mexico are being freely made by army officers of high rank, who are now in the mobilization camps on the border. Many of these officers were sure, only a short time ago, that the American troops would occupy Mexican territory within a few weeks. All are now convinced that the end of the trouble is almost at hand.

The attempt which has been made to implicate Japan in the Mexican trouble was finally and permanently made of no account by a remarkable peace message from the Emperor to President Taft. This message was transmitted to the President by Baron Uchida. It reads as follows:

"To the President of the United States of America:

"I was greatly pleased to receive your very kind message conveyed to me through my ambassador in Washington and I thank you for it. I was already well convinced that you had given no credence to the false and wicked reports regarding Japan, but it was especially a source of profound satisfaction to me to receive from you the assurance that the relations of amity and good understanding between our two countries were never better or more cordial than at this time. I am most happy to be able entirely to reciprocate that assurance. MUTSUHITO."

In making this message public the White House had nothing to say further than that the message spoke for itself. It was looked upon as the crowning blow to the war scare which has been occupying columns of space in some American and English newspapers.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—THE POPULATION of Germany has increased 4,261,934 in five years. The result of the last quinquennial census taken in December has just been announced. It gives the number of the Kaiser's subjects at 64,913,423, and as has been nearly always the case, females predominate considerably, there being 860,000 more of them than males.

—A WIRELESS TELEGRAPH station is about to be erected at Fort Myer, Va., just outside the national capital. It will have the most powerful apparatus in the world for sending and receiving messages; it is estimated that through this station a span of communication extending over 3,000 miles can be bridged. It is primarily designed to keep the headquarters of the American navy in close touch with the war vessels in the Atlantic Ocean.

SOME PEOPLE may not be aware that many of the leading powers have now what are known as air navies for which a fitting appropriation is made in their respective budgets. For instance, England's air-service will cost for 1911-12, as estimated, about $500,000. There are now five aeroplanes available for work in the British Army. Three airships are also available and two more are being built. Germany has nine completed dirigibles, France four, and eight more in course of construction, and Russia has nine, with one building and four on order. In 1910 the German Government expended for aerial work $2,000,000; that of France $680,000, and that of Russia $919,100.

—A VALUATION of $2,512,146 is placed on the estate in New Hampshire of the late Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy, who, as a comparatively poor woman, began teaching Christian Science about thirty-five years ago. This sum is the valuation of the appraisers, whose report was filed in the Probate Court by General Henry M. Baker, executor of the estate. While the property left by Mrs. Eddy in Massachusetts has not been formally appraised, General Baker estimates that it is worth $250,000. The total value of Mrs. Eddy's estate, therefore, is approximately $2,760,000. Stocks and bonds to the amount of $1,057,788 and copyrights valued at $1,400,000 are the chief items of the estate.

—IN DISCUSSING the trusts, we should not overlook the fact that all trusts are not inimical to the interests of the consumer. This occurs to us in connection with a recent comment on the Beef Trust, which is now under investigation. We have at hand a statement of the business of Armour & Co. for the last year, which shows the percentage of profit on capital and surplus to be 6½. This is a little less than 2 1-3 per cent. profit on the "turn-over," or total volume of business done in all products. This is marching pretty close to the dead-line of profit and loss. A profit of 16 to 17 cents per hundred-weight on beef sold to consumers means a profit of less than one-fifth of a cent per pound. Anything lower than this would practically mean doing business at cost. Thus it will be seen that, in the case of one trust at least, a very slight difference which would mean little if anything to the consumer would mean a loss to the concern. These facts we state as a simple matter of justice, so that CHRISTIAN HERALD readers may not be misled into a too sweeping condemnation without sufficient investigation.

Who Is to Blame?

IT IS to be hoped that the official investigation of the terrible fire disaster in New York, by which over 140 lives were lost, will be searching and unsparing. It seems to be conceded that the building was inadequately equipped with life-saving appliances; that the doors from the workrooms to the stairways opened inward instead of outward, if indeed they were not locked, and that there was criminal neglect somewhere in permitting such conditions to exist after inspection. Although warned by the Fire Department, the officials seem to have had no realizing sense of their responsibility for such conditions. It is beyond all question that such a disaster could have been foreseen and prevented. Who, then, is to be held to accountability?

There are several thousand factories in New York in which human life is as lightly guarded as in the Washington Place death-trap. Our civilization is a pitiful thing if it be not based upon principles of humanity and common sense. We point with pride to our great metropolis and its mammoth buildings, and to the glory of our mechanical and industrial achievements; but what a price they cost us when we look back at that tragic Saturday night, with its vision of those poor helpless victims huddled in a fiery furnace from which there was no way of escape. The ancients who made their children pass through the fire to Moloch were not more inhuman than the city which exposes its children to such a fate as this. It is a picture that shames New York before the whole world.

Nothing can restore the lives that have been sacrificed. No human comfort can assuage the sorrow of those who have lost their dear ones. It may be for others merely a nine days' wonder and soon forgotten; but for them, all through the weeks and the years to come, the memory of that night will remain a perpetual and abiding sorrow. The great Father alone can console the bereaved ones for the loss of those who went to their deaths so young and so unwarned. But if their fate should result in better protection for the vast army of workers who remain and should thus lighten the sorrows and sufferings of another generation, they will not have died in vain.

The Nation and the Child

IT HAS taken many ages for men to discover that the health and welfare of the child lies at the foundation of national greatness. A people which deliberately allows, as most peoples have always allowed, an enormous proportion of its children to die in infancy, is criminally fatuous and short-sighted. Modern science has shown that it is feasible to save many of these little lives, and by the exercise of only simple honesty and common sense. Take the matter of pure milk, for example, upon which more than upon any other one detail depends the health of young children. Yet it is only lately that the proper standards have been set and laws made to secure this necessity to infant health.

The harm which infected milk does was strikingly illustrated in the design of a frieze used in a recent child welfare exhibition. The wicked microbes which play in the unclean milk-pail of the careless farmer were first shown by the artist. Then bigger ones danced around, as the pail stood at a high temperature in the farmer's front yard. The baby's milk-bottle held the microbes in their latest and most deadly development; and the white hearse and plumed horses completed the effective series. The disregard of child-health displayed in the employments of older youngsters was illustrated by pictures of little girls and boys compelled to sit in long rows and work for hours at a time upon the making of fancy flowers and feathers and the "picking over" of wool and cotton. Little parodies upon familiar nursery rhymes helped to stamp the lessons of the exhibition upon unthinking minds. One of these ran:

> One little child made Irish lace;
> One little child made flowers;
> One little child made willow plumes;
> And one sewed silk for bonnets;
> And all of them worked in a close, hot room
> Through the day's bright, sunny hours.

Theodore Roosevelt never spoke a truer word than when he made the assertion, often ridiculed, that large families of healthy children are a main source of national power and greatness everywhere. A sickly people, with a stationary or dwindling population, must go speedily to extinction. The cry, "Save the children," now ringing from every quarter of our land, indicates that we are waking up to our responsibilities, and none too soon.

A Clean Conscience

NEXT to the divine grace and forgiveness, the approval of one's own conscience is among the things most to be desired. And indeed a good, active, quickened conscience is a witness that gives a zest and sweetness to life, with assurance to the heart and a wholesome enjoyment of all God's blessings. If with his help we are able to say with Paul that we have "a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men"; which prompts us to perceive and to do the right; which leads us to be generous, charitable, forgiving; which rejoices not in worldly show and vanity but in true, simple service pleasing to him and helpful in his work; which holds faith in God and in our fellow-men—then, though occasions may come when we still shall feel the law of the body warring against the law of the Spirit, we shall be kept from capitulating in the hour of temptation and weakness. Intellect, reason, passion, may all deceive us, but the quickened conscience never does. With Christ in the heart and a clean conscience, one is fortified against all the experiences of life.

Silenced

IN THE general revival of interest in the old Bible, which has come with the almost world-wide celebration of the Tercentenary of the Authorized Version, there is little consolation for the school of Biblical critics whose attacks on the sacred Book have kept them pretty steadily in the limelight for several years past. Never since the Christian era dawned has such a volume of universal praise of the Bible come from the pulpits of two continents as is now finding utterance. And it is specially significant that amid this stream of appreciation there is not visible a solitary ripple of detraction. One recalls only a short time ago, the attacks on Biblical integrity and inspiration, the explanation of the flood as hyperbole, of the miracles as folklore, of Jonah as a moral fable, of Babel as a legend, of Jairus' daughter as myth or tradition, and, descending to detail, of Eutychus as merely a sufferer from concussion instead of a dead man restored to life. These and a hundred others were their stock in trade. They had then a note of uncertainty about everything; but now, amid the tumultuous acclamation of the old Book and its Gospel, they are silenced. Thus in a single year the Bible celebration and renaissance have given to the assailants of the old Book the greatest set-back they have ever met. They know now what the Christian world, clerical and lay, thinks of the Bible, and how dearly it is beloved by the "common people."

The Menace to China

IN SENDING a virtual ultimatum to China on what seems to the rest of the world to be rather doubtful provocation, Russia has displayed the same methods that marked her course during the early stages of her trouble with Japan. Moreover, she has entirely forgotten or abjured the role she once played as the advocate and originator of the movement for world-peace. Of course, nothing more may come of the present trouble with China than the concession by that government, for policy's sake, of the Russian demands for commercial and diplomatic privileges in the province of Ili, for what between plague and famine on the one hand and a lean exchequer on the other, the ancient empire is not in a condition to oppose aggression by active resistance. Other powers stand behind Russia, ready with demands upon China's integrity. It would be a bold and reckless foe that would invade a country ravaged by plague. But the best informed authorities declare that the growing spirit of nationalism in Asia will ultimately assert itself in a way that will make th impairment of China's integrity a very dangerou adventure. The old land has become liberalized; i has adopted many reforms; its people are graduall becoming enlightened in the modern sense, and ar developing a national spirit which is unmistakable Furthermore, China has the world's sympathy an respect, and her attempted spoliation would not b viewed with approval by any means. Her mornin star is in the ascendant, and when it is fully rise she will be abundantly able to maintain her plac and to assert her influence among the nations. Then the spoilers may be glad to moderate their ambition and even to forego them altogether. Time move slowly in the Far East, but the hands on the dial ar surely moving toward China's hour. When th clock strikes, who can tell what may happen i history?

Live in the Sunshine

LIVE in the sunshine! You may apply this spirit ually, if you choose. The sunshine we ar thinking of is the warm, glowing, golden radiance that in these lovely days of spring is changing the dry, bare stubble of the fields to the richest emerald making the world everywhere beautiful, starting the green leaves in a rare unfolding and bringing health to many a sick-room. If you want a tonic avail yourself of the sunshine. Nothing else is half so good.

> Live in the sunshine, don't live in the gloom,
> Carry some gladness the world to illume.
> Live in the brightness, and take this to heart;
> The world will seem gayer if you'll do your part.
> Live on the housetop, not down in the cell;
> Open air Christians live nobly and well.

There's a whole library of philosophy in this little stanza. Don't worry; keep sweet; trust in God; give carking care a wide berth and get out into the sweet spring sunshine as often as you can.

—WHEN THE daily press dips into theology something is pretty sure to happen. Recently the cable brought the news that the Canterbury Convocation had practically decided to reconstruct the Decalogue. As we surmised at the time, the statement had an exaggerated aspect. We now learn that the foundation for the report was a motion by the Dean of Westminster for the use of a shortened form of the second, fourth and tenth Commandments, to be substituted as a summary for use once a month, the following being the form:

The priest (or pastor) shall say: "The Lord Jesus said, Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord; and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the First Commandment. And the Second is like, namely, this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other Commandment greater than these (St. Mark 12: 29-31). And he said, On these two Commandments hang all the law and the prophets" (St. Matt. 22: 40). "Lord, have mercy upon us, and write these thy laws in our hearts, we beseech thee."

This is the familiar New Testament summary and can hardly be called even a revision. It is simply intended to take the place of the repetition of the Decalogue in full in Sunday worship.

Memorable Trial of Century

ONE of the most memorable criminal trials of history is in progress in the city of Viterbo, Italy. Imprisoned in a large iron cage, guarded on all sides by soldiers, are thirty-four Camorrists, all of whom are charged with taking an active part in the Camorra slayings. In the front of the cage and to the right is Maria Stendardo, the only woman prisoner; in a little cage by the side of the large one is Abbatemaggio, one of the band, who turned informer. The opening of the trial was accompanied by scenes never before witnessed in court. The accused men alternately cursed in a rage and sobbed hysterically, while their women friends in the audience screamed and fainted. Giuseppe Salvi, who is charged with having stabbed to death Gennaro Cuoccolo and his wife, was cross-examined. It is charged that he found the evidence of Cuoccolo's treachery to the Camorra and brought about his sentence of death, which six persons proceeded to execute. It is claimed that according to the rules of the Camorra a ring was taken from the hand of the murdered man to be sent to Salvi in proof of the fact that his wish for vengeance had been observed. Carabineers claim to have found this ring in the mattress of a bed at the home of a woman known as the companion of Salvi. The case is being tried in the Church of Scalzi, which dates from 1675 and is now a court of assize. Four of the prisoners are accused of instigating the murder of Cuoccolo and his wife, "the beautiful Sorrentina," six of committing murder, and one of complicity in receiving stolen goods. A priest, Father Ciro Vitozzi, is among the accused, but is allowed a seat outside the prisoners' cage. There are 600 witnesses for the prisoners and 330 witnesses against them. There are twenty-four jurymen, twelve of whom form the actual jury and twelve are to act as substitutes in case of need. It is expected that the trial will last at least a year, that most of the prisoners will be convicted, and that it will be the most memorable criminal trial in Europe for a century. The Camorra is a secret society which has existed in the former kingdom of Naples since 1820. It has been composed of circles with chiefs, which formed vigilance committees that robbed and frightened the public. It had almost expired until comparatively recently, when it pursued its diabolical plans more murderously than ever. The horrible Black Hand business has become so red-handed in Europe, and even in our own America, that society will be compelled to deal with it much more strenuously than it has heretofore done; for the vengeful killing, if tolerated, will not remain within the ranks of the Italians, but will become general, and disorder and crime of all kinds will run riot. This is too nearly the case now in some of the great cities of our country. The Mosaic law against murder and theft is the basis of the jurisprudence of the ruling empires of the world. It may be that the verdicts of the Camorra trial will echo the threatenings of the law:

Cursed be he that smiteth his neighbor secretly. . . . Cursed be he that taketh reward to slay an innocent person; and all the people shall say, Amen. (Deut. 27:24, 25.)

The Prisoners and the Informer in the Camorra Case Caged in the Church of the Scalzi, Which Is Being Used as a Court of Assize at Viterbo, Italy

Died at His Post

Dr. Edward F. Ashley, a bacteriologist and an assistant to Dr. Doty in the Health Department of New York, died on Swinburne Island the other day of cerebro-spinal meningitis. His task was to guard the port against the contagious and infectious diseases which immigrants bring to our shores. In dissecting the body of one who died of cerebro-spinal meningitis he became infected with the same disease. Dr. Simon Flexner immediately treated Dr. Ashley with the serum which he had discovered, but the disease was relentless and carried him off. Dr. Ashley was a graduate of Yale and of the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons. He had been nine months assisting Dr. Doty in his important and perilous task. This young man was a true soldier on the firing line of the great fight against disease, and gave up his life in the interest of science and for the protection of the health and lives of his fellow-men as a real hero. He was a modest, silent hero in the standing army of peace for the protection of public health and life, and he is worthy of the highest gratitude and honor of his fellow-men. Another such hero was Dr. Raymond W. Brown, House Physician of the Hudson Street Hospital in New York City, who died in that institution of cerebro-spinal meningitis a few days after the death of Dr. Ashley. There are some quacks who bring the medical profession into disrepute, but the rank and file of physicians are true as steel and brave as any soldier that ever faced a cannon in their fearless handling of any disease, however dangerous. Every now and then one of these brave men drops down as a victim, as real a hero as any patriot who ever fell upon the field of battle. The death of young Ashley was untimely, but he lived a thousand lives of worth and heroism in his nine months of tragical service for his fellow-men. What was said in derision to Christ on the cross can be said with reference to Dr. Ashley and men like him:

He saved others, himself he cannot save. (Matt. 27:42.)

Drowned by Money

The bodies of a well-dressed man and woman were found in the river near Brunoy, a charming little country town just outside of Paris. The man had been kept under water by the weight of coin in his pocket. In one pocket he had $95 and in another $115, all in silver and copper pieces. The specific gravity of many souls is increased by the amount of money that is piled up and the inordinate affection which is bestowed upon it. Wealth set to proper uses is a blessing and even a means of grace, but wealth hoarded for its own sake is a curse. The drowning of the soul through money is referred to by Paul in his letter to Timothy:

But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. (I. Tim. 6:9.)

Learning Trade in School

One of the latest features of the educational system of New York is the Vocational School for boys in Manhattan Borough. It is now in its second year and has over four hundred boys studying for a trade. The boys are taught, without charge, machine shop practice, electric wiring and installation, plumbing, printing, blacksmithing, bookbinding, metal and wood working, etc. The sessions are from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. and are held every month in the year except August. Any boy over fourteen is eligible for admission provided he can pass examinations in reading, writing, and arithmetic. Students are received on five months' probation. The object is not to turn out finished artisans or skilled mechanics; it is to fit boys for a trade. The practical exercise in the trade is given as well as the theory. Training for the ordinary duties of life is not neglected. It is expected that this Vocational School will open up communication with some of the great foundries, factories and workshops, so that the boys may have a better opportunity to practise the theories that are taught to them. A law has recently been passed by which the Board of Education is permitted to sell the products of the pupils for the benefit of the schools. More and more the public school systems of the country are introducing the industrial feature into their curriculum, which will be of great advantage to the individual scholar as well as to society in general. There is a royalty in the successful work of the artisan which must not be forgotten amid the many devices instituted for securing values with as little effort as possible. The law of value for value and of self-support is involved in the instruction of the apostle.

And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you; that ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing. (I. Thess. 4:11, 12.)

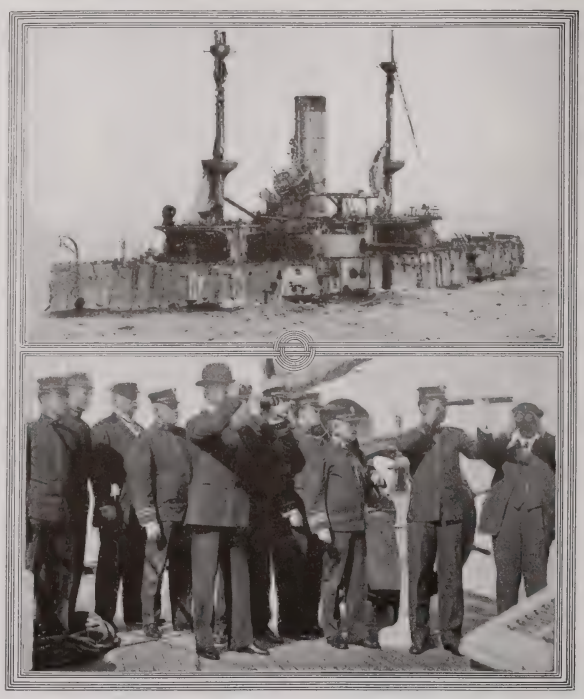
Generous Gift to Coachman

Mr. John G. Muller, a retired manufacturer, formerly of New York City, living at Oneonta, N. Y., called his coachman, Grover Henderson, to his bedside and said: "Grover, I'm a pretty sick man, and you have always been a good boy. I am going to make you out a check for $5." "Yes, sir," said Henderson, and waited. When he took the check he almost fell over with astonishment when he saw that it read for $5,000. Mr. Muller was so impressed by the man's gratitude that he called Henderson back and gave him another check for $5,000. The coachman has a wife and two little children, and intends to see to it that the $10,000 shall contribute very much to their comfort and happiness. There would be very little conflict between capital and labor, if labor were always thus devoted and capital thus generous. The reward of a faithful servant is thus referred to by the wise man:

Whoso keepeth the fig tree shall eat the fruit thereof: so he that waiteth on his master shall be honored. (Prov. 27:18.)

Wrongly Imprisoned

Andrew Toth twenty years ago was sent to the penitentiary in Pittsburg for life, convicted of having killed a fellow-workman, Michael Quinn, in the Edgar Thompson Steel Works of that city. There were two Toths engaged in the mill, one by the name of Andrew and the other by the name of Steve. They were not related. Suspicion fell upon Steve Toth, but no evidence was produced against him. A dozen men who were suspected were drawn up in line, and a Hungarian pointed to Andrew Toth, declaring that he was the murderer. Andrew could not speak English, did not know what was going on, was not even in the mill at the time of the murder, did not know Quinn, but he was convicted in the courts and was sent to prison for life. The other day the Hungarian who through spite had identified Andrew Toth as the murderer made a confession of his sin against the man, and declared that he was entirely innocent of the crime. The Governor of Pennsylvania, hearing the news, immediately pardoned Toth. In the crowd that greeted him on his release were his four grown sons, all workmen in the mill where he was employed. Workmen cheered, and he was overcome with gratitude and joy. He said, "No pay can recompense me for the anguish brought to my wife in Hungary and to my sons here, but I do not hold resentment against any one, as God has been my support and comfort every day of my imprisonment. There has not been a day in the twenty years when I have not prayed often that God would let the truth be known, and that I would be set free." F. M. Wilmot, secretary of the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission, received a letter from Andrew Carnegie the other day in an envelope addressed in the ironmaster's handwriting on his private stationery. Within was a clipping telling of Toth's release and of his penniless condition. At the bottom of the clipping Mr. Carnegie had written in pencil: "Glad to help if true. Please investigate and oblige." It is to be hoped that Mr. Carnegie will fulfil Toth's desire and furnish him a little farm in Hungary where he and his wife may make a modest and honest living. Society has been guilty of an injustice for which it can never atone. It has dealt an innocent man a cruel damage that can never be repaired. There can be no order or happiness or success in human society, except upon the principles of everlasting justice and truth. Upon these twin virtues depend both the moral and material welfare of the race. The punishment of the innocent is hateful to God.



He that justifieth the wicked and he that condemneth the just, even they both are abomination to the Lord. (Prov. 17:15.)

DESTRUCTION OF THE OLD "TEXAS"

THE old battleship Texas, in recent years renamed the San Marcos, "will plow the waves no more." She came to a not inglorious end lately when one of our dreadnoughts, the New Hampshire, riddled her with shells down in Chesapeake Bay. Now, amid the slime and mud of her watery grave, will rest and rust and rot the ship that helped to sink Admiral Cervera's fleet in Santiago Bay. The Texas had outlived her usefulness. Alongside the modern warship she was obsolete. This demonstrates two facts, namely, the great advance made in marine architecture and the short life of even the largest vessel built. About ten years marks the limit of the best ship. After that the mass of steel and brass, which costs so much to construct, is only fit for the scrap heap. The very fact that ten million dollars' worth of material and construction (the present cost of a battleship) is practically worthless after ten years, should be a strong argument in behalf of a universal peace movement. The maintenance of a fleet is an expensive game.

The Texas was built in 1889 and cost in the neighborhood of five million dollars. As she could no longer be used in the service, the government devoted her to the purpose of making a test of the high explosive shells of an up-to-date war-vessel. The New Hampshire was selected for the target practice, principally because the guns of this vessel were thought to be giving out and naval experts wished to see if they were still capable of dealing destruction. The experiment proved that they were. The shooting was done at a range of from five to six and a half miles with the twelve and eight-inch rifles, and about four and a half miles with the seven-inch guns.

A General View of the San Marcos After the First Period of Firing

Secretary Meyer and a Group of Officers Observing the Firing

A splendid record was made by both tests. The shells wrought havoc with the old warship. A number of shots penetrated the hull from one side to the other and one pierced the nine-inch wall of the conning tower as if it had been so much cardboard instead of the toughest steel. The explosion of the shells within the vessel caused a raging fire to sweep through the compartments, and soon the old Texas was but a flame-scarred, battered hulk. Water rushed in through the gaping holes in her sides, and she settled down in the ooze and mud of the bay.

The passing of the Texas brings us to a consideration of the marvelous advance which has been made in the science of battleship building within the past decade. The war monsters of the present day cost more than twice as much, and the last word in projecting dreadnoughts is far from being spoken as yet. Rivalry is spurring the great powers in the designing and building of armaments, which the most vivid romancer could scarcely have imagined less than a score of years ago. Floating leviathans of steel, having a displacement of 26,000 tons, now sweep the seas with their 28,000-horse-power engines with the grace and swiftness of pleasure skiffs. The latest to be added to our fighting fleet is the Arkansas, the launching of which was described in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of January 25. This mighty vessel has a length of 562 feet with 93 feet beam, and makes a speed of twenty-one knots an hour, generated by Parsons turbine engines. Yet, powerful as she is in construction, machinery and guns, in a dozen years or so her ten-inch armor plate may only be fit for the scrap-heap, or at best, like another Texas, be a target for the guns of a coming dreadnought.

The Aftermath of New York's Factory Fire

ACROSS the lower East Side of New York stretches a zone of mourning, the result of the disaster which took place at the Asch building, Washington Place and Greene Street, on March 25. The awful toll of death has reached 143, and may yet be increased. Years have passed since New York has been so deeply stirred as by this fatal fire. The walls of the building were hardly cool before investigations were under way to fix the responsibility for the loss of life. Survivors of the tragedy have told their stories—heart-rending stories of sacrificed lives—and when closely questioned have told quietly the tales of the heroes and the heroines who saved dozens of lives at the risk of their own.

While those in authority were striving to find the true reason for the disaster, the East Side was seeking to identify its lost loved ones. A temporary morgue was established on one of the East River piers, and there all day Sunday sounded the tramp of passing feet, while a crowd of over 50,000 persons filed up the pier past one line of coffins and down past another on the opposite side. The scenes that took place in connection with the identification of the dead were harrowing in the extreme.

Monday was a day of sad processions following hearses, most of them white, from all parts of the East Side into Delancey Street and over the Williamsburg bridge. But there was a change in the temper of the thousands on the sidewalks, who paused to watch the mournful cortèges go by. Grief possessed the mourners, but words of indignation were murmured on the sidewalks. Now that the first shock is over, there is an ugly spirit working on the East Side which is making itself plainly felt by all observers.

Among the incidents of the day which stirred the pity of onlookers was the funeral of Jennie Stollino, an eighteen-year-old victim of the disaster. It was like a bit of life taken out of a corner of Sicily. The widow Stollino and her three remaining daughters, all of whom lived by Jennie's wages, walked all veiled in black from head to foot, with bowed heads from their home at No. 315 Bowery to Bonomolo's undertaking shop at No. 294 Elizabeth Street. The streets fell silent as they passed.

At the undertaker's, where the girl's body lay with those of Sara and Lucy Maltese, also victims of the horror, there were sixteen little girls, fellow members with Jennie Stollino of a Catholic order. They were all dressed in black and wore white veils caught back with bunches of white carnations and roses. The undertaker's men lifted the white coffin from its stand beside the others, under the image of the Virgin and the little altar on which the candles flickered, and took it out into the street.

The sixteen girls in white formed a hollow square, inside of which were the widow and the three sisters and the coffin. And so they marched across the street to the Church of Madonna di Loretto. There the priest met them at the door and walked before the coffin to the great altar between rows on rows of sobbing men, women and children, most of them dressed in the costumes of Sicily and Southern Italy.

Outside, a great crowd stood silent in the street, listening to the voice of the priest chanting the mass for the dead.

A quarter of a million mourners followed behind the hearses of the unidentified victims of the dreadful fire on the day of the great public funeral. Almost every union shop and factory in the city was closed during the hours when the great cortège wound its way through the East Side and the streets west of Broadway, lined with the shops and lofts of the garment-making industries. Unions of all the trades joined the great demonstration, and made it a vast, silent protest against the systems under which such a catastrophe is possible.

The evidence which is being gathered will be used not only to place the responsibility of this fire, but as data upon which to base the improvement of city and State fire regulations. Within two days after the fire, bills had been drawn and submitted to the legislature at Albany. Many suggestions and plans are being talked over, and there is no doubt that the conditions in loft and factory buildings, not only in New York but in all America, will be greatly improved.

Many stories of other buildings that are insufficiently provided with fire escapes and fire preventive apparatus are being told. The first important fact brought to light in the course of the investigation was that the responsibility for fire escapes and exits is divided between several departments of the State and city governments. This is to be changed as quickly as it may be so that one department will have entire charge and authority to enforce its mandates.

It has been shown that the building in every way complied with the laws which govern such places. It had the required number of elevators, exits, and the one fire escape for which the law calls. Those who passed on the building cannot be implicated, it is believed. The great trouble lies in the laws and regulations themselves. These must be changed.

One of the most necessary innovations is the fire-drill. It is more than probable that a great many lives would have been saved if the girls in the Triangle Waist Factory had been accustomed to fire-drills and had known of the various exits.

Expressions of sympathy have come from many parts of the world. In New York City that sympathy has taken concrete form in a substantial movement for the relief of the injured survivors and the distressed families.

Preparing for the British Coronation

—LONDON IS a mighty hive of industry at the present. Every one is working in preparation for what it is anticipated will be the greatest event the British capital has ever witnessed—the coronation ceremonies of King George and Queen Mary. Nowhere, perhaps, are activities more pronounced than in staid old Westminster Abbey, that hoary pile which has been the arena of so many historic scenes. The walls are being brightened up and festooned and garlanded with multicolored banners, streamers and sashes. Even those places where sleep the illustrious dead, the artistic fingers of decoration have covered with rosettes and immortelles to recall the triumphs of bygone times in order to excite a jealousy that will make the crowning triumph of the present eclipse them. That part of the Abbey known as the Chapel of Edward the Confessor is the spot where the actual crowning of the king and queen will take place. It is officially known as the "theatre" and it is here that the largest amount of attention is being given. The king's throne, the historic old chair of St. Edward, is elevated on a dais in the centre of the theatre facing the high altar, and is approached by five steps. Side by side with it, but two steps lower than the king's, stands the more modern chair that will be occupied by Queen Mary. On the right of these are two chairs of state, with stools in front of them, that will be occupied by their Majesties during the ceremony and until the moment arrives for the placing of the crowns upon their heads. These chairs directly face the seats reserved for the members of the royal family and the distinguished foreign and royal and other visitors whom it is especially desired to honor.

Relief Work in Famine Camps

A Scene in the Great Chinese Famine Camp at Chin-kiang, Where Thousands of Refugees Are Now Being Fed by Charity

AT NO time during the present famine in China has the relief work been better organized or more effective than now. The two Relief Committees—one in Shanghai and the other in Chin-kiang—are working hand in hand for the benefit of the sufferers, and a large number of sub-committees throughout the famine region in both provinces are benefiting by this harmonious and effective co-operation. By these means, the neediest sections are reached in the most direct manner and the famine camps are not overlooked.

The chairmen of the two Committees, Mr. James Ferguson of Shanghai and Rev. M. J. Walker of Chin-kiang, sent this cablegram to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD announcing the completion of the plan of distribution of the Buford's cargo of flour:

Shanghai.

CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York:

Two committees have arranged distribution Buford's cargo. FERGUSON. WALKER.

Long ere this, every sack of flour contributed by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and through other sources has doubtless been distributed in the famine camps and elsewhere, and is doing its life-saving work.

Chairman Walker of the Missionary Committee at Chin-kiang writes of date February 11:

Since my last letter a week ago, we have received a wire telling us of the arrival of another instalment for the Famine Relief Fund of $10,000. This will enable us to send more to Hsu-chow-fu and Ken-cheng. The condition is very bad indeed in and around Po-chow. It is said there are about 20,000 living in great poverty in Chin-kiang.

On February 24, Chairman Walker wrote that the committee had disbursed all famine funds on hand up to that date. Money had been sent to Po-chow and Hwai-Yuen, in Anhui province, and also to Suchien and Hon-cow-fu in North Kiang-su province, besides smaller amounts to Antong, Tsing-Kiang-Pu and Chin-kiang. He added, "We now feel that the greatest demand for immediate help is in the centres around Po-chow and Suchien. Hwai Yuen is also very needy. Now is the time to save life."

In a letter from Po-chow, the Rev. Wade D. Bostick writes:

We have just had from the Famine Committee at Shanghai about $10,000 gold for distribution; but think of what a task we had to decide on who should receive it, for in this one county there are more than 200,000 who have nothing whatever to eat. When we had distributed tickets, entitling the holder to a part of this money, and had given it out to them, there were a few hundred dollars left over. We wanted to get a plan for immediate distribution of this remainder, so we announced early this morning, four different large temples, at which places we would give tickets to those who had not received anything, expecting to give out about four thousand tickets. The people went inside the yard, after which the gate was closed and no one was allowed to go in or out till all the tickets were distributed. But to our dismay, there were nearer ten thousand than four thousand at the four places at eleven o'clock, the time mentioned for closing the door.

Among these people, there was not a single one who would not move an ordinary American to sympathy, and there were some who were the greatest objects of pity that any one in all the world ever saw. Old women tottering with age and hunger; men, who a few months ago were able-bodied farmers, now in rags and shivering with hunger and cold; some men with nothing but the thinnest ragged clothes on and barefooted, even though the ground was frozen a half a foot deep and snow was falling. Some came with children wrapped up in the breasts of their garments. One poor fellow in rags had a small baby in his arms and was carrying on his back his sick wife, evidently helpless from hunger. One man, who looked as though he was almost starved, was holding a baby of only a few months inside of his clothes to keep it warm, the baby looking just about starved. I spoke a few words to him and found that the mother of the child had recently died of starvation.

When the tickets were given out and we were ready to open the gate, it was seen that some three thousand more were outside. The mayor of the city being there, he decided to let them in and asked us to give tickets to them. I stood close by the side of the big gate when it was opened. There were about twenty strong soldiers in and around the gate to keep the people from rushing in too fast; but in spite of our precautions they came with such rushes that some would be pushed over and would lie there as a stumbling-block for others. There would almost instantly be a pile of the fallen ones, who were saved from being crushed to death only by the soldiers beating the crowd back and then pulling with main strength the fallen ones to their feet. As I saw this eager rush, I found my heart in my throat and my eyes full to running over. Some were scrambling through the crowd, hugging little children close to them, for they knew that if they had the child along they would be counted as two and would get more. I no longer wonder that some are often crushed to death at such a time.

Some time ago I wrote to you of people living on wheat bran. Some are now to be seen cooking the leaves of trees, such as we would put in a horse stable for bedding. I have heard of the cooking of simple dry wheat chaff! Now, how that can be considered as human food I do not know, but it is what is being done. It means that many of the sufferers are at their very last extremity. Barefooted and all but naked on freezing cold days children are met on the streets crying out, "I am hungry! I am hungry! I am hungry!"

The story of woe might be prolonged indefinitely. Such cases are only a few of 200,000 in this one section in which I live. There are two adjacent counties, each having about 200,000 more, in just the same needy condition. And these three counties do not count one-third of the famine district. Little girls are to be had by hundreds without a price and little boys for from 10 cents to 50 cents each.

A correspondent writing from Peking gives the official view of the general situation in the famine districts. One thousand villages have been deserted; 30,000 families are wandering south in search of food. Many, rendered desperate by suffering, are committing depredations. Most of the refugees are ragged and feeble and their feet and hands are badly frost-bitten. There are a number of districts in which there is no more food left, and even those who have money must send a long way to buy. Fighting over food is a thing of frequent occurrence, and lives are risked daily for a dish of boiled rice. People fall dead from sheer starvation and no comment is excited. Refugees are appealing to the missionaries for food and shelter and are being helped as far as possible. At Chin-kiang, the missionaries are feeding 10,000 people daily, besides sending large quantities of flour and rice to many needy sections farther inland. Fortunately, the fear of plague visitation in the Canal provinces is no longer felt, as the epidemic seems to have been fairly checked in its southward march.

OUR NEIGHBOR AND OUR GUEST

Social Usage of To-day

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

WE HAVE recently been told in the press and elsewhere that the custom of calling, once universal, is gradually falling out of fashion. No doubt in large cities, where friends live at great distances from one another, calling is less general than of old. Take, for example, a city like Chicago or New York, where homes are remote from the business centre, and the hours of an afternoon would be absorbed in the effort to make a single call, and it needs no explanation to show us why this friendly custom is there becoming obsolete. In smaller towns and suburban villages, whatever may be said to the contrary, women still make afternoon calls. Clubs and associations where the women of a neighborhood meet one another at frequent intervals, detract from the former necessity, and this may account for the change of mode. The telephone is responsible to some extent for the decline of calling, the temptation often being to have a talk over the wire instead of face to face.

A friend said the other day that she appreciated more than ever in what she styled "these degenerate days" the trouble her acquaintances took when they left their homes, rang her doorbell, crossed her threshold and sat down to have a chat with her, without invitation or prearrangement. It would be indeed the greatest of pities should we ever allow the many-sided activities of our modern lives so to trample upon leisure and scorn the sweet offices of friendship that we should cease to exchange ordinary informal calls.

WHEN a newcomer enters a community, it is very pleasant for her to receive a welcome from the people among whom she is to reside. She usually receives this through the simple medium of calls. If she and her husband identify themselves with a particular church, the minister and his wife and a representative of the hospitality committee will call upon them at an early date. Other members of the church will call, and in due time other residents of the town will extend the same courtesy. The rule is for a married woman to leave, when calling on a married friend for the first time, one visiting card of her own and two of her husband's. A first call should be returned when possible within a week. If for any reason the call is not promptly returned good form requires that an apology should be made for the tardiness later on. If, on the occasion of a first call, an invitation is tendered to a reception or other function, the invitation may be accepted and the call returned afterward. A large and formal reception, a luncheon or a dinner requires a later call.

Dinner invitations, by the way, should be answered immediately. Every invitation to which the letters R. S. V. P., or the English equivalent, a reply is requested, is appended, must be at once answered. If a dinner guest is unexpectedly compelled to break the engagement he or she must notify the hostess by the quickest available means. A dinner engagement should never be broken if it can be helped.

ONE who is bereaved and obliged to put on mourning may drop responsibility about her unpaid calls. She is not supposed to think of them. When she again enters society it will be her privilege to resume calling upon her friends. If the door of the house at which one calls is opened by a member of the family cards are not handed to her as they would be to a maid. The visitor may leave her card unobtrusively on a table before saying good-by. When there are several women in a family, and the call is somewhat formal, a visiting card should be left for each. This is wholly needless, if the call is at a house with which friendly and intimate relations are maintained.

Mourning cards may be edged with black either deeply or with a narrow line according to preference. An extremely deep edge of black is too sombre and the narrower line is the better choice. The oldest daughter of the family has her visiting cards engraved simply "Miss Smith." Her younger sisters are "Miss Margaret," "Miss Rose" or "Miss Dorothy Smith." A lady sending out invitations for a large reception in which she and her daughters combine, may have her invitation read: "Mrs. Elliston Brown," on one line; below, "The Misses Brown," and following this, "At home to their friends" with the date and place.

Fashions in visiting cards are elastic and yield to convenience. In the large cities it is safe to accept the guidance of a well established stationer.

Good Friday

MORE and more as the swift centuries pass, the whole world stands at gaze at a single figure outlined against the blackness of the noonday sky on a mountain-top in Judea. Our Lord said: "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." When Good Friday comes to us year after year our thoughts and eyes turn to that

> Green hill far away,
> Without a city wall,
> Where the dear Lord was crucified,
> Who died to save us all.

In thought, during Passion Week, we are with Jesus in the Garden, with him at Herod's judgment seat, and in Pilate's hall; with him we climb the steep ascent up which he toiled, bearing his cross, and with the various groups who watched him as he hung upon the cross between two thieves, we are identified. The Good Friday of this year of grace has many features similar to that on which our Saviour gave his life for a thoughtless world. Even in our modern day he is crucified again between the thieves of sordid ambition on one side and selfish indifference on the other. The groups at the foot of the cross are forever the same. There are those whose hands have nailed him there, those who hate him with bitter and malignant malice; there are the cowardly disciples who still forsake him and flee in times of peril; there are the inconsistent, who wound him in the house of his friends, and there are the loyal and loving, who cling to him amid their tears, venture all things for his sake and listen to his last triumphant cry, "It is finished." This last representative group has the comfort of knowing that although the marred form shall be taken down from the cross and laid in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, death shall not hold him there. On the third day he will rise again and go forth victorious, "death of death and hell's destruction." The recent splendid demonstration, culminating in New York City with the final meetings of the Woman's Jubilee of Foreign Missions, is a portent of hope. Many of us are anticipating the evangelization of the world before the close of the present century. This does not mean that every hearth and home on the globe shall become truly a Christian hearth and home before the close of the year 2000. It does, however, mean that there shall not be a corner of the globe by that time over which the banner of the Cross shall not wave. In every country, every great city, every island, every little fishing hamlet, every village, where men and women live, whatever their race, creed or color, the Gospel of Christ shall be proclaimed, a Christian Church shall be organized, and people shall hear the good news from disciples who speak their own language and are of their own blood. Fifty years ago a few believing women began the Union Missionary Society in the city of New York. On this Good Friday the women who work for Foreign Missions are affiliated with forty women's boards. Shall we not thank God and take courage?

The Spring Housecleaning

MOTHER NATURE started in furious energy setting her old-fashioned vacuum cleaner at work in the windy days of March. Her annual housecleaning is radical and thorough, and unfortunately it entails a lot of inconvenience upon us if we are not inured to changes of atmosphere. Notwithstanding the occasional high winds and inclement frosts of March, by the time April comes Nature's world looks very much as our houses do when notable matrons have administered upon them with broom and scrubbing brush from top to bottom. We have all heard the story of the little girl who replied to a cheery visitor when he remarked that the world looked bright to-day, "Yes, sir, it does. Mother has just washed all the windows."

Sensible women do not clean house with such uncompromising speed and force of arm and will that they conclude operations by grippe or pleurisy. The spring housecleaning may be comfortably carried forward if a room or a floor be taken at a time, while the whole house is not upset at once. The attic, if you have one, and the cellar invariably, must be rigidly inspected, and if you live in a mosquito-haunted region you must begin the campaign against the tormentors by fumigating the cellar when you do the spring housecleaning.

LITTLE PLAYMATES

HOW child nature responds and expands under the silent influence of "a live plaything"! No home is complete without its pets. Gentleness and kindness developed in childhood will follow all life through.

> "He prayeth best who loveth best
> All things both great and small;
> For the dear God who loveth us,
> He made and loveth all."

Union for World Peace

By Edwin D. Mead

THE present hour is one of the most pregnant and critical in human history. In the long struggle for the fraternity of nations, there has never been a time so big with opportunity and promise. The President of the United States has taken the most advanced position ever taken by the responsible head of a great nation in the effort to supplant the war system of nations by the system of reason and law. He has declared his belief that in the dealings of great civilized powers with each other, there is no reason why every dispute arising between them not settled by regular diplomatic negotiation, should not be settled by arbitration or referred to an international court. He would have nations cordially agree to act concerning their differences precisely as individual citizens in individual States are compelled to act.

There should be no reservation in this policy of international justice. The reservations from arbitration in existing treaties of so-called "questions of honor" and "vital interest," Mr. Taft rightly sees to be unnecessary, unreasonable and mischievous. Everything whatever, he declares—questions of honor, of territory, of money—is under any possible circumstance better settled in the courts than on the battlefield; and he calls upon the United States to lead the world in this high policy. Let two great nations, he says, act together upon this basis; and faithful to his principle he has at once proceeded to the negotiation of such an unlimited arbitration treaty with Great Britain.

Great Britain's response to the inspiring American proposal is itself inspiring. The recent speech of Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign minister, in the House of Commons, has profoundly stirred Great Britain and stirred Europe. It has especially stirred the religious public. In England itself the foremost men in the Established Church and in the free churches are uniting for a universal demonstration in behalf of a policy which simply means the translation into politics of the first principles of our religion; and this demonstration will be made when the message comes that the religious leaders of America are ready for simultaneous demonstration. That message will certainly be prompt. With it will go similar assurance of co-operation from the great commercial and industrial bodies of America to those in England. Never have the great labor organizations of England declared themselves so strongly against the wasteful and wicked war system altogether, and the hardly less burdensome system of armed peace, as in this latest time; and their strong protest finds response in the hearts of our American workingmen.

If the United States and Great Britain adopt the treaty upon which our hopes are now centred, and it is settled that never again shall war be possible between these two great nations, then we are assured France stands ready for a similar treaty; and there is every ground for hope that before the third Hague Conference meets in 1915 a veritable league of peace may exist between half a dozen of the world's great powers.

The responsibility of this nation to the family of nations is therefore at this moment critical and solemn. The Olney-Pauncefote treaty between the United States and Great Britain in 1897 was defeated in the Senate by less than half a dozen votes, the votes of a few far Western States with a combined population less than the population of Chicago. That lamentable miscarriage, which delayed the progress of arbitration for years, was due to the fact that the good men of the United States were not awake. Let that never again be true in an exigency so great, and especially in to-day's great crisis.

There is a thing of moment for

This beautiful poem, which appeared some time ago in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is here printed in its new musical setting for the first time.

The Call of Easter

THERE is nothing in this world that exercises a more delightful spell over humanity than the coming of Easter, the day on which our Lord raised himself to life again, and the memory of which great event the churches celebrate with such joy and praise. The supreme feeling of reverence that attends this day is beyond expression. With the tender budding and flowering age of this early Easter spring, comes the call of awakening for happiness to all things that live. What soul can remain insensible to that never-failing message?

As we look up to the heavenly blue and its cloudy magnificence, the heart fills with mute but exquisite delight; the spirit must yield to these influences and respond to the gentle caroling of the birds and to the flowers breathing forth their fragrance. The world has changed. We live over once more the spring of life; everything is young! The peal of the organ by some master-hand lends its holy music to charm our ears. Again we think how grand is life!

There is an endless chain of beauty in this world to strengthen our faith in God and to awaken our adoration. We should feast the eye and ear upon all the grandeur that nature provides. Faith is the only strong foundation on which we may safely build all hopes and plans—faith in all things real, given by the hand of God; faith in the resurrection of his Son, and in his finished work as the Saviour of men. We know that the frozen waters will flow again, that the sun will shine after the storm has ceased. Easter comes and earth and heaven are in unison once more. As we pass on to the next day, with the beautiful emerald hues of nature everywhere, we offer up our hearts' prayer. We think how good is the hand of God, who gives the sun its beaming warmth and gladness, and to every heart the heavenly light.

THE KINGDOM

I SAY to thee, do thou repeat
To the first man that thou mayest meet
In lane, highway, or open street,

That he, and we, and all men, move
Under a canopy of love,
As broad as is the sky above;

That doubt and trouble, fear and pain,
And anguish, all are shadows vain;
That death itself shall not remain;

That weary deserts we may tread,
A dreary labyrinth may thread,
Through dark ways underground be led;

Yet, if we will one Guide obey,
The dreariest path, the darkest way,
Shall issue out in heavenly day;

And we, on divers shores now cast,
Shall meet, our perilous voyage past,
All in our Father's house at last.

And ere thou leave him, say thou this,
Yet one word more: They only miss
The winning of that final bliss

Who will not count it true that love,
Blessing, not cursing, rules above,
And that in it we live and move.

And one thing further make him know:
That to believe these things are so,
This firm faith never to forego,

Despite of all which seems at strife
With blessing, all with curses rife,
That this is blessing, this is life.

Union for World Peace

Americans to remember besides the epoch-making act of their President. The Congress of the United States, by unanimous resolution, has authorized the President to create a commission upon the limitation of the burdensome armaments of the nations, and as a step to the limitation of armaments urged the transformation of the present rival national navies into one co-operative international force to maintain the world's peace. It would be impossible to over-state the significance of this action of our national legislature, in the same spirit as that of the effort of our national executive which has commanded the attention of the world. It points the way to the international organization which alone can make military power a real police power instead of as to-day the chief menace to peace. But we must never forget that the gradual disappearance of the menacing machinery of war depends strictly upon the adequate development of the system of international law and its efficient and reliable administration. It is this which makes President Taft's treaty so significant and commands for it the earnest support of every patriotic American and every lover of humanity.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST ROBERT L. LAYFIELD recently held a four weeks' union meeting with the Congregational, Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal churches at Highland, Kan., which resulted in one hundred and twenty professed conversions. Since the close of these meetings more than one hundred new members have been received into these three churches.

—FANNY J. CROSBY, the blind hymn writer, celebrated her ninety-first birthday on March 24. She is a wonderful woman. Despite her great age she is active, physically and mentally, and takes as much pleasure in hymn writing as ever. She has lately added several new chapters to her well-known book, the Memories of Eighty Years. The volume, which is a wonderfully interesting one, can be had from the aged Christian poetess direct by addressing her at Post Office Box 840, Bridgeport, Conn. The price is $1.25.

—SIMON SMITH, cousin to the noted Gipsy evangelist, intends to visit the United States on an evangelistic tour. For six years he has been engaged in and around London, conducting special services, and his efforts have been very successful. He is thirty-five years of age, and has had a wide experience. He was brought up in a caravan. Eventually he was converted, and giving himself to study, passed the London City Missionary examinations. He is well recommended by leading ministers of every denomination.

—A GRATIFYINGLY successful revival has recently taken place in Ashland, N. J. All the evangelical churches united for a series of services and meetings, led by Rev. Lewis Shelhorn. Noon meetings were held in factories and moving picture places. In the afternoon services took place in the churches and each evening a mass meeting was held in the church having the largest seating capacity. The merchants have co-operated by closing their business places early, in some cases even the saloons closed up. —H. M. S.

—MR. AND MRS. BRYCE W. RANKEN, of Brazil, are visiting the United States on a tour of several months' duration for deputation work on behalf of the great mission field of South America. The South American Evangelical Mission, of which Mr. Ranken is director, carries on work in Brazil and Argentina, two of the largest and most advanced republics of our sister continent. A staff of thirty-five workers, including colporteurs, are engaged at ten stations and eleven out-stations, and hundreds of converts have been won for God. Sunday Schools are in operation at most of the stations, and an orphanage for Protestant children, an entirely new development in Brazilian missionary work, has been opened at Sao Paulo. The mission is interdenominational in character and depends upon freewill offerings. Mr. and Mrs. Ranken will be glad of opportunities of addressing meetings, either public or private, in the interests of this work, or will give talks on Brazil, illustrated with lantern views if preferred. Any one desiring to communicate with them may address letters to care of E. D. Sniffen, 150 Broadway, New York.

Literally Read to Pieces

We, of my home, think THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is the greatest publication in the world, and look forward for it anxiously each week. It is literally "read to pieces."

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

AN EASTER SONG

SING, little children, sing.
And lily censers swing!
ing that life and joy are waking and that death no more is king.
ing the happy, happy tumult of the slowly brightening spring;
Sing, little children, sing!

Sing, children, sing!
Winter wild has taken wing.
And the crocus in the garden lifts its bright face to the sun,
And in the meadows softly the brooks begin to run;
And the golden catkins swing
In the warm airs of the spring;
Sing, little children, sing!

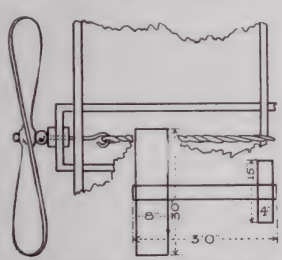
Sing, sing in happy chorus, with joyful voices tell
That death is life, and God is good, and all things shall be well;
That bitter days shall cease
And warmth and light and peace,
That winter yields to spring,
Sing, little children, sing. —CELIA THAXTER.

INSTALLING THE MOTOR

hird of a Series of Articles on Miniature Air Craft, Written Especially for Cozy Corner Boys and Girls by Francis Arnold Collins, Author of "The Boy's Book of Model Aeroplanes"

THE actual conquest of the air was not won until the aeroplane flew by its own motive power. Many ears were spent by aviators in prac- sing with gliders before engines were nstalled in air craft. The builder of nodel aeroplanes cannot do better nan follow their example. Once he as succeeded in constructing a well- alanced model which will sail through ne air on an even keel, it becomes a ery simple matter to add a motor hich will drive the toy aeroplane wiftly and steadily for surprising dis- nces. It was in this way the Wright rothers attained success.

The Best Motor for Models



THE best motor for models is made of many strands of rubber bands hich are wound up by simply turning ound and round.

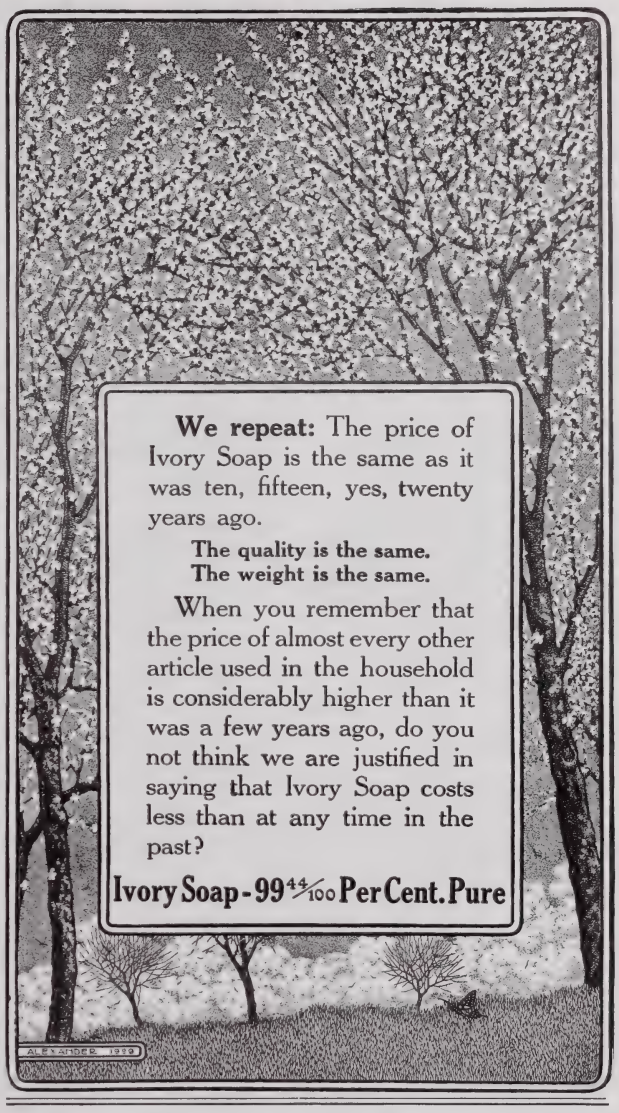
o build the frame or supporting such motor, cut two locks of some soft ood, which will ot split easily, ne inch square. hrough the centre f each of these, nd with the grain, ore a hole with a ne gimlet, not ore than one six- enth of an inch in iameter. You will ow need two pieces f stout wire. A icycle spoke is just he thing, but a at pin or hair pin will answer. Cut he pieces of wire three inches long. low pass one of them through the hole one of the blocks and bend down the nd so that it will be held rigidly. Fill he hole with glue, bend the other end nto a broad hook.

Now fasten the two blocks to the nder side of the main frame or motor ase of your aeroplane. There are everal ways of doing this. They may e nailed, glued or tied fast. By cut- ing the under side of the round dowel tick so that two flat surfaces will come gether, you may simplify the work. he block with the hook should be fas- ened near the extreme end of the main notor base near the edge of the smaller lane. The second block should be astened at the front of the aeroplane ush with the front or entering edge of he forward plane.

The Propeller

THE most interesting detail of the aeroplane is the propeller. This consists of two fan-shaped blades much like those of a steamboat propeller or an electric fan. These may be carved from wood or cut out of metal and bent to the right shape. The best plan is to prepare five strips of thin wood (a cigar box will answer), cutting them half an inch wide and ten inches in length. Cover with a thin glue and lay them one on top of another. Now drive a long, thin nail through the centre of this pile, and before the glue hardens, turn them on the axis formed by the nail to a fan shape, with the edges one quarter of an inch apart at the outer ends. Bring the pieces together by driving the nail through again, and lay away to dry. When dry, whittle off the edges with a knife or chisel until the blades are smooth, then sandpaper and varnish.

Detail of Propeller—and Model



Very Important

It is very important that the outlines of the curve should be right. If the blades are very flat they will not take hold of the air, and their propelling power will be slight. On the other hand, if the curves are too sharp, the propeller will merely whirl around and give a little forward thrust. Follow the directions carefully, and the propeller will come out about right. Be careful to have the blades on either side balance exactly, or the flight will not be straight.

A second piece of wire should now be imbedded in the centre of the propeller. The best plan is to run it through the middle and bend over the end as you have done with the first hook. Now string on this wire or shaft a smooth glass bead and pass it through the hole in the block at the forward end of your model. The end inside the block should then be turned in the shape of a hook. The two hooks should come exactly on a line with one another, and the propeller should turn easily without striking against the frame of the front plane.

You will need several yards of rubber band for your motor. If you cannot procure the regular rubber, loop together a number of rubber bands to form a long rope. The rubber should then be wound from one hook to another just as you would wind a skein of zephyr, taking care to fasten the ends securely. The size of the rubber motor must be determined by experiment. A series of strands forming a rope one inch in diameter will give you plenty of power. To wind up your motor, turn the propeller away from you about one hundred and fifty revolutions, or until the rubber is tightly knotted, and release. As the rubber unwinds, the propeller will spin about and drive your aeroplane upward and onward.

NOTE.—Articles 1 and 2 of this series, "How To Build Paper Gliders" and "Model Aeroplane Building," appeared in the Cozy Corners of February 1 and March 15.

ARRIL PRIZES

Five Kodaks—Souvenirs for All

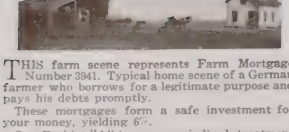
HERE is a short sketch of a famous man; but the writer has been careless, and has made several mistakes. The boy and girl readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are asked to correct these mistakes.

All who enter the Cozy Corner Contest this week for the first time will receive a special Cozy Corner greeting. The five boys and girls sending in the best answers, whether they have ever entered the Cozy Corner Contests or not, shall each receive a Brownie Eastman Kodak, loaded with six films, ready to take snap-shot pictures.

The Careless Biographer

"_____, born in Westmoreland County, W. Va., February, 1733. Assumed command of the American Army July 3, 1774. On the 9th of July, 1776, he wrote to the President of Congress: 'I caused the Declaration to be proclaimed before all the army under my immediate command,' etc. Was elected President in 1789. Died at Mount Vernon, December 14, 1799."

Correct the mistakes, put your name and address clearly on your paper, and send before April 19 to the Aunt in the Cozy Corner, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York City.



Good Things for All

I have Cozy Corner Souvenirs and Good-time Plans for you all. You have only to write and ask for them. I especially want to hear this week from every boy and girl reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and from all your friends too.

The New Postal Banks

THERE is no executive department of the government that comes into more frequent or more familiar touch with the whole people than the post office; and there is no department that has been more progressive. It is right and proper to love one's country, and if need be to die for it, but while glorying in its freedom, we should not foolishly close our eyes to its defects. It may shock some of our fellow-citizens to know that excellent though our post office system is, it is far behind that of Great Britain and her colonies, and cannot be compared in efficiency with most of the European governments that we are apt to sneer at because they are under hereditary rulers. One of the crying needs of the people all over our wide domain has been for a Parcels Post. This great boon, denied to us, is one that the German, the French, and the English farmer and business man have enjoyed for years.

Helping All to Save

We have long demanded Postal Savings Banks, and at last they have come; but we are not leading the world in this, as we should like to believe, for they have been in successful operation in the leading European countries for more than a generation. The people of Japan know them, and our antipodean cousins in Australia and New Zealand have had them for many years.

In our cities and large towns the savings bank has been a most familiar and valuable institution since a time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, but the farm and village dwellers, who still constitute a majority of our population, have been denied this privilege.

The Congress just closed authorized, at its second session, the establishment of postal savings banks throughout the country. As this was a new venture, it was decided to begin with one such bank in every State and Territory, making forty-eight in all. These forty-eight postal savings banks were opened on January 1 of this year. As the early work is regarded as experimental, the banks were established in small towns, and the working up to this time is regarded by the authorities as an unqualified success. On the first of next July, which will be the beginning of a new fiscal year, postal savings banks will be established in tens of thousands of towns and villages throughout the land, and even the carriers of the rural free delivery will be authorized agents for the collection of small savings.

We have received from the Post Office Department at Washington the rules that will govern in the new bureau, and these are condensed for the benefit of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, all of whom, as good citizens, must be interested in this subject:

Rules to Be Observed

The total of all deposits by one person must not exceed $500.

It will take one dollar to open an account with a bank, but postal savings stamps and postal savings cards can be bought for ten cents each—carriers will be provided with these. When nine stamps at ten cents each are pasted on one card, thus with the card making one dollar, the card may be exchanged at the bank for a certificate of deposit, a form filled, and an account opened.

The interest paid on deposits is two per cent. Money must be on deposit for one year before any interest is paid. After that time interest is due at the end of each month. Compound interest is not allowed, but there is no law against reinvesting the interest in the same way, as is so often done with the ordinary savings bank.

Unlike the city savings bank, no book of deposits and payments is issued to the depositor; instead he receives a certificate, a duplicate of which is retained by the postmaster. On the envelope, in which the certificate of deposit is placed, there are ruled lines on which the depositor may enter all subsequent sums paid in, and so be enabled to keep track of his account.

Another good feature of the law, and one from which much is expected, is that any child over the age of ten may become a depositor, and shall have sole control over the account. In this way the child will be taught self-denial and thrift, which is a different thing from miserliness.

In order to withdraw money, the depositor must appear in person, and must turn in certificates to the amount he wishes to take out.

When a depositor has accumulated twenty dollars in certificates, he is permitted to exchange them for a twenty-year gold bond of the United States, paying two and a half per cent. per annum.

As there is no limit to the amount of such exchange, the postal savings, we may be sure, will never be permitted to reach $500 bearing two per cent. when it may be exchanged from time to time into $20 United States gold bonds paying a half per cent. more. This facility to change will soon convert the small depositor into a bond-holder, and so make him a creditor of the government.

Deposits will not be taken from strangers at the post offices that are also postal savings banks. Only those known to be regular patrons of such offices are entitled to use them. The postmaster, being responsible, must himself be the judge of the depositor.

The first account must be opened by the depositor in person; after that money may be sent and deposited by mail.

Real Significance

In the aggregate, there are millions of dollars hidden away in thousands of homes. These sums will be brought into circulation and will be earning something for their owners. More than this, the deposit in the postal savings bank—no matter how small—will bring the owner into closer touch with the government of which he is a part. In this way he will gain a larger, fuller outlook on the life about him, and so become a more useful citizen, if not a better man.

But the real significance of this movement for the universal establishing of Postal Savings Banks lies in the general incentive which it is sure to give to the thrift of the whole people. People who have never saved a cent in their lives will be impelled to save money which otherwise would not have been saved; and the natural accretion of interest will in its turn impress them with the power of money to make money.

Saving is after all largely a habit, and most people need merely a start in order to acquire it. Naturally, as their little hoards increase, they will desire to accumulate more and more, and they will be casting around for means to have their money earn more and more interest with safety. Thus will a knowledge of the first principles of investment become inculcated in the minds of the people, who may then be enabled safely to reach out toward those methods of money accumulation which provide a greater return than it is possible for the government to allow through its Postal Savings Banks.

THE DRAGON

By Mrs. R. L. WEATHERLOW

ANNIE RAIMOND, as she came in from school, tossed her books down upon the table. "Do you now, mother," she began, "our entire ass is going to take part in the Eas- r exercises at church? What am I o do? We are all expected to wear hite, and my white dress is not fit to e seen, and, besides, they have re- uested me to recite that Easter poem. very one says I speak it so well, and surely needs a suitable dress to fit ie theme." And she paused out of reath.

"Well, dear," replied her mother, have you given me the whole list of our troubles? It certainly appears ather formidable to look at. We rely have a problem before us to pply that much-needed dress. You now that there is very little money, nd my sewing pays poorly."

"I know," and Annie came and put her arms around her mother's neck, at the same time giving her a good hug. "That's what is worrying me. Oh dear!" she exclaimed; "all the girls have such a plenty they little know how hard it is for us to live and appear respectable."

Mrs. Raimond, a widow, had a hard struggle to support her two children. Annie, the eldest, was straining every nerve to fit herself for a teacher, so that she might lighten her mother's burdens. She had a remarkable talent for reciting, and was often called upon to use it.

"Well, we will have to study ways and means. I am doing work for Professor Jones' wife, and if she would only pay me when I send it we could manage the dress."

"Oh, mamma! she is such a cross-grained old miser, she will try to lower the price, and likely ask you to come another time for the money."

"That may be, Annie; but we can only try."

"When will you have the work done?" asked Annie.

"This evening, and you can take it to her on your way to school in the morning; if she puts you off about the pay, tell her that you can call on your return from school."

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Annie, "I always feel a propensity to scratch, when I take work to her, she has such a suspicious, sneering way of examining everything, and grumbling, no matter how well the work is done; many times I have bit my tongue to keep back a sharp retort."

"Well, I know it is very unpleasant for you, but you must have charity; we do not know what tragedy may have happened in her life to have caused that soured disposition. I have heard she had a son who ran away, and no one knows what became of him. She also lost a daughter who was about your age, in a terrible railroad accident, so it is not to be wondered that the poor woman is what she is."

"I did not know this before," said Annie. "I am glad I never lost my temper when she has been disagreeable. I shall take the work to her, feeling that I can pity more than blame, if she is cross and snappy with me."

The next morning Annie started out to face the Dragon, as she sometimes styled Mrs. Jones. She rang the bell and was ushered into the sitting-room.

"Good-morning, Mrs. Jones," said the girl, in a bright, cheerful tone.

"I wonder if you have brought my dress at last," was the woman's acknowledgment to Annie's greeting. "It seems as though your mother might get my work done quicker than she does; I don't suppose you help her any, only hinder."

"Please, Mrs. Jones, I do all I can to help mother when I am not in school. I do not like to see her work so hard, but I am trying to study every minute of time I have, in order to fit myself for a teacher, to enable me to earn enough to relieve mother of some of the burdens of caring for Louis and myself."

"Humph! I suppose, now that Easter is almost here, you will be wanting a new Easter suit; that will mean a lot of self-denial and hard work for your mother."

"Why, Mrs. Jones," said Annie, with surprise in her tone, "I do not expect, nor can we afford, anything more than to keep myself respectably clothed."

But Mrs. Jones continued: "I hear they are to have a grand Easter service at the church, and, of course, you will be in it?"

"Yes, I expect to take part, as I have been requested to recite an Easter poem," replied Annie.

The Business Man's Ideal Lunch

Brain workers know that a hearty lunch lessens one's powers. For a couple of hours one is not at his best.

And we all know why. The blood is drawn to the stomach to supply digestive fluid. One's energy is consumed in digestion.

The ideal solution is Puffed Wheat or Puffed Rice, served in a bowl of milk. Here are whole-grain foods with all the food granules literally blasted to pieces. By no other process are cereal foods made even half so digestible.

And men like them. For months we conducted a lunch room in the heart of New York City to find out men's tastes in cereals. With all the ready-cooked cereals to choose from, four out of five chose Puffed Wheat or Puffed Rice.

Between-Meal Foods Bedtime Foods

For the same reason Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are ideal for children. Not only at mealtime but between meals. One can eat at any hour foods which don't tax the stomach.

And children delight in them. The grains are like nuts—so much like nuts that countless children use them in candy making.

Many able physicians, when the stomach needs rest, are advising Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice. When ease of digestion is of any importance, the best possible foods are these crisp, puffed grains.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c

Except in Extreme West

These foods are prepared by Prof. Anderson's process, by which all the food granules are exploded by steam. The raw grains are sealed up in great steel guns. Then the guns are revolved for sixty minutes in a heat of 550 degrees. Thus the moisture in the grain is turned to steam and brought to tremendous pressure.

Suddenly the guns are unsealed and the steam explodes. The grains are puffed to eight times normal size—made four times as porous as bread. Every food granule is blasted to pieces, so the digestive juices can instantly act. Yet the coats of the grain are unbroken.

The result is these delicious, digestible grains—porous, crisp, nut-like and brown.

Serving With Fruit

One capital way to serve these puffed grains is to mix them with sliced bananas or berries. The blended flavors make an enticing dish.

The common way is to serve with cream or milk, like any breakfast cereal. Or serve them in milk, like crackers or bread. People are now eating 18,000,000 dishes a month. Isn't it your turn to begin?

THE DRAGON

"I have heard about that poem. I should like to hear you recite it," she said in a sort of mollified tone.

Annie told her she hoped to see her at the service, but wondering much at the unusual interest manifested by the crabbed old woman, and hoping she would pay her for the work, she arose to leave.

"Tell your mother I will see her in a day or two about some more work and will settle the bill then."

Poor Annie could not keep the tremble out of her voice as she bade her good-morning, and tears of vexation and disappointment sprang to her eyes as she left the house. But after entering the schoolroom she would not let the thought of it interfere with her studies; still she would often find herself wondering at the strange and unusual interest Mrs. Jones had evinced in their affairs.

Upon reaching home Annie told her mother how fruitless her errand had proved.

"I can see no way but to make the best of it," said her mother. "I think you had better go and bring down your old white dress, and I will see what can be done with it."

Annie went wearily after the dress. "Oh, mamma," she exclaimed with tears in her eyes, as she came bringing the forlorn-looking dress with her, "we can never make anything decent out of this."

"Don't be so sure, Annie; let us try," said her mother.

"But, mamma, I never can get up before all the nicely dressed girls and do justice to that poem."

"Pride, Annie, false pride; do not let it get away with you," advised her mother.

"I can put down a lot of pride sometimes, mamma, but this is one of the times when I want to be clothed in a proper setting for my piece."

"Well, Annie dear," said her mother cheerfully, "we will do just the best we can, and, darling," patting her on the cheek, "you will have to put all thought of how you are dressed out of your mind, and speak your piece so well that the people will only think of what you are saying."

"I know that is good advice, mamma, but hard to follow," replied Annie.

"Well, we must get to work," said her mother. So they commenced ripping, basting and fitting, and at length a presentable dress was produced.

"Now, Annie, I think with a few fresh ribbon bows here and there, when this is done up nicely, it will make a dress that you will not feel so shabby in after all."

"Oh, you dear, tired mother! now go straight to bed and get some rest. And don't hurry in the morning, for I am going to get breakfast, and Louis and I will have everything cleaned up bright and early, and after I have washed my dress and hung it out to dry, I will run down to the store and buy the ribbon for it," said Annie, so cheerfully that her mother blessed her patient, thoughtful girl, and felt that nothing could be too nice for her to wear if it were only possible to obtain it.

The next morning, Mrs. Raimond saw Professor Jones' carriage drive to the door. Mrs. Jones alighted and came in followed by the coachman with a bundle and a large, square box.

"Good-morning, Mrs. Jones; will you be seated?" said Mrs. Raimond. Mrs. Jones took the proffered seat.

"Mrs. Raimond," she began, "I came to see you, not about work, as you would naturally suppose, but on an errand at which you will wonder, and I know you will be very much surprised that so grouchy an old woman as I am can show a little appreciation for you and your daughter's patience in bearing with one who has never spared your feelings. I know how hard it must be, placed as you are, to make a living; and I also know that many, many times, I, in my ugly moods, have not helped to lighten my neighbors' burdens, but instead have found fault where there was no fault, and grumbled, keeping back the much-needed pay, when there was no cause for it but my ill-temper. I have felt ashamed many times at the way I have treated your daughter. She has never once departed from her ladylike politeness when I have tried to call forth an indignant retort, and I knew it hurt her; but, Mrs. Raimond, I will tell you that it has made me love her as I loved the daughter I lost." Her voice trembled as she continued, "Oh, Mrs. Raimond, pity me; for I am a wretched old woman, bereft of my children, and you are richer by far, for you have what is more precious than gold, the love of your gifted daughter. She is what I would have wished mine to be had she lived. Oh! I sometimes think I shall go mad. And now you may wonder that I have come to you with all this trouble of my own making; but I felt that I must tell you my story and crave your sympathy."

"You poor, distracted woman!" said Mrs. Raimond, with tears of pity in her eyes; "you have always had that ever since I have known you, and Annie feels the same."

"Well, she is a lovely girl, and deserves more than she gets. I did not pay her the other day, for I did not want you to pay out any more for her, as I have brought her an Easter suit." And, undoing the package, she held up to the mother's astonished eyes a beautiful simple white dress, with everything complete; even hat, gloves and shoes. While Mrs. Raimond was admiring the gift Annie came in; she said "good morning" to Mrs. Jones,

REASONED IT OUT

And Found a Change in Food Put Him Right

A man does not count as wasted the time he spends in thinking over his business, but he seems loth to give the same sort of careful attention to himself and to his health. And yet his business would be worth little without good health to care for it. A business man tells how he did himself good by carefully thinking over his physical condition, investigating to find out what was needed, and then changing to the right food.

"For some years I had been bothered a great deal after meals. My food seemed to lay like lead in my stomach, producing heaviness and dullness and sometimes positive pain. Of course this rendered me more or less unfit for business, and I made up my mind that something would have to be done.

"Reflection led me to the conclusion that over-eating, filling the stomach with indigestible food, was responsible for many of the ills that human flesh endures, and that I was punishing myself in that way—that was what was making me so dull, heavy and uncomfortable, and unfit for business after meals. I concluded to try Grape-Nuts food to see what it could do for me.

"I have been using it for some months now, and am glad to say that I do not suffer any longer after meals; my food seems to assimilate easily and perfectly, and to do the work for which it was intended.

"I have regained my normal weight, and find that business is a pleasure once more—can take more interest in it, and my mind is clearer and more alert."

LIVING TEMPLES*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

The Temple of Character

THREE kinds of temples are mentioned in the Bible. Our lesson story is about the first kind, a temple of stone, but it will illustrate the second kind, the temple of individual character, which it is more important to discuss, except where repairing of the church is the duty of the hour.

The temple Joash repaired was the beautiful temple that Solomon had built. Under Queen Athaliah, who preceded Joash, many stones had been taken out of God's temple to build a temple to Baal close at hand, in which the people worshiped. On the coronation day of King Joash, the temple of Baal had been demolished, but God's temple was not at once restored. That was ordered later by King Joash. The priests, however, paid no heed to the order. Years afterward, it was repeated, and this time king and priest and carpenters and stone-cutters and the people generally each did his part in giving and working till the repairs were fully made, and the temple stood complete and beautiful. The chief feature of the restoration, more beautiful than marble and cedar and gold, was the cheerful and generous giving of the people. That reminds us that one of the most beautiful things in the temple of a Christlike character is generous helpfulness "In His Name." Let us recall how Jesus introduced the idea of character building.

One day when he was in the temple, he said, "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up" (John 2: 19). The Jews thought he referred to the temple of stone, and they said, with a sneer, "Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou restore it from ruins in three days?" "But he spake of the temple of his body" (John 2: 15-21). And at another time, when in a wheatfield talking informally of great truths to twelve workingmen who were his helpers, he said: "In this place is one greater than the temple" (Matt. 12: 6).

This, then, is the second kind of temple, a Christlike character (I. Cor. 3: 16-17; 6: 19; II. Cor. 6: 16).

Laying the Foundation

As the altar, with its bleeding sacrifices, was the first thing to be met in the tabernacle and in the temple, so self-sacrifice for the good of others is the keynote of Christ's and of Christian character. Then comes the laver of clean habits, and the incense altar of prayer. The table of shew-bread pictures the word of God as the food of the soul; and the golden candlestick, the gladdening influence and helpfulness of a true Christian. And the most holy place stands for direct communion with God.

It was of wise character-building that Jesus spoke the warning parable of the two houses, one built on the sand and the other on the rock (Matt. 7: 26, 27). The man who builds on the sand is the man who has right intellectual ideas and even right emotions, sentiments and desires, but does not by an act of will consolidate them into rock-firm resolves and decisions and vows and a life of prayer, that will hold him firm when floods and torrents of passion sweep down upon him. In spite of momentary desire to do wrong many a man has stood in such an hour because he has pledged his word to his wife, to the church, to the temperance society, and especially because he has built up by many right decisions a tendency, a habit, a character, hostile to evil, friendly to the good.

Pledge in thy noblest moods against thy worst.
Pray then for strength to keep the sacred trust.

That is the rock foundation that withstands the storm of temptation.

Building Wisely

We should not only build strong but build high, out of reach of temptation, so far as possible. That is the point of a story told by Rev. J. M. Farrar, that the youngest can understand, and the older ones need yet more, of two little birds that foolishly selected a low bush for a nesting place, when they could just as well have built in some high tree. An invalid girl, who saw them from her window, exclaimed: "O you foolish birds!" But they could not understand. The eggs were laid and hatched out in tiny nestlings; and then the invalid girl's anxiety increased. One morning she saw only a demolished nest and a few feathers to tell of the destruction some cat had easily wrought. Alas, boys and girls, and even parents, though they have higher powers of reasoning than the birds, are often quite as foolish in exposing themselves to needless temptation. If a hundred parents would serve notice on the business men of the town where saloons are open and gambling slot machines are on every side: "If you don't make this town a safer place for little feet by moral street-cleaning, by no-license votes, and enforcement of neglected laws, we will all move to some place of a higher moral standard," sleeping consciences in "leading citizens" who do not lead would be re-enforced by fear of lost patronage, and many an endangered home would be saved from heart-breaks and soul-wrecks. Build strong, build high, build safe, build for eternity.

The two breaches in Christian character-building needing repair, which the lesson story logically suggests, are: an excessive devotion to selfish pleasure, and a covetous use of the property we hold as trustees for God and man. Those who give themselves to selfish pleasures beyond the need of recreation when they should work for God and man are carrying stones from the temple of God to that of Baal, and in these days much of the carrying is done in automobiles. And many of those who cannot afford such vehicles to carry them to Baal's temple, are walking there every day in their excessive patronage of moving picture shows, which, even if they were once generally wholesome, ought to be frequented only so far as recreation is needed to increase our efficiency in the glad service of God and man.

Giving to God

While the prodigal greed for pleasure carries many a stone from God's temple to Baal's, the ugly breach in God's temple made by miserly greed is in equal need of attention. And this greed is found in poor as well as rich, as is shown by the following story of a poor man who was very generous in saying what he would do were he wealthy. A friend said to him: "If you had a hundred sheep, would you give fifty of them for God's work?" "Yes, I would." "Would you do the same if you had a hundred cows?" "Yes, I would." "Would you do the same if you had a hundred horses?" "Yes, I would." "If you had two pigs, would you give one of them to God's cause?" "No, I wouldn't; and you have no right to ask me when you know I have two pigs."

It is not alone those who withhold, but those who wish to, that come under

Sunday School Lesson

Christ's woe against covetousness, which is what we now call commercialism, which Jesus condemned more than any sin except hypocrisy, with which it is often carried. Many men lack the courage of their covetousness, and so give with the hand when the heart does not go with it, for fear of what Mr. and Mrs. Grundy will say or do. In contrast with such a spirit, the following missionary story pictures such generous giving as the lesson described—only more so:

Carefully and lovingly a little band of Christians, in a country district in Korea, were building a church. The logs and plaster were all in place, but they found that to buy materials for the completion of the roof and floor they lacked three guineas, which, in their poverty, was a large sum. A young man, named Pai Ni Il, grieved much over the unfinished building. Months passed, and he became greatly burdened about it. But what could he do? His sole possessions were a small piece of land, a bullock, and the mud hut in which he lived. One morning, after a time of special prayer, Pai Ni Il went to call on a neighbor, then came back, and led his bullock to his friend's house. He returned without the ox, but with three guineas in his pocket. He said nothing, but quickly the church was finished, and villagers from far and near came to hear of the living God. The Holy Spirit was present at the meeting, and there was great blessing through the winter. Springtime came, and the farmers began to plow their fields. How fared Pai Ni Il without his bullock? He and his younger brother got into the traces of the plow and drew it along, their old father holding the handles! Patiently and cheerfully they toiled, Pai Ni Il always taking a double share all through the long season of seedtime and harvest, doing all by their own manual labor. And God blessed their hard work with abundant crops.

The Spiritual Temple

And now we come to another kind of Bible temples, of which the temple of the lesson was but a pictured prophecy. This kind of temple is the spiritual church, made up of "living stones," "fitly framed together," Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone (Ps. 118: 22; Isa. 28: 16; Matt. 21: 42; Acts 4: 11; Eph. 2: 19-22; I. Pet. 2: 4-7.) This is a bold and beautiful picture, that no artist has dared to put on canvas; a temple in which great and good men are living "pillars"; believing children, the lily work; spiritual church members the "living stones"; and Christ, the living corner stone, the living door, the living priest and prophet.

There is sometimes, even in good men, too much devotion to merely individual upbuilding. We should not leave undone our share in the social upbuilding of the whole church, the whole city, the whole nation, the whole world, in which each of us is but one living stone, in duty bound to fill our own chink, uphold our own share of the common burden and do our own part toward the common good. One who thought himself too feeble to be of any real service, and so failed to do his little part in world uplift, had a dream in which he saw a temple, beautiful and glorious, save that one stone was missing, which seriously marred the effect. He awoke to realize it was himself that was missing, and that God's plan included his work, and would be imperfect without it. That points out the way by which you, who are studying this lesson, and thinking it deals with matters far away, may right now repair one breach in God's spiritual temple, the breach where you should be as a living stone.

Makes The Phonograph Sound Life-Like

THE Morse Clarifier is a remarkable little device made to fit in tube between reproducer and horn of phonographs. It renders the sound loud, clear and life-like and eliminates that unpleasant metallic effect which is more or less common to all phonographs, regardless of price. Can be attached in a minute by anyone, and lasts as long as the machine. Thoroughly tested and proven successful. Pat. Appl'd For Mailed Prepaid upon Receipt of Price, $1.00. Guaranteed Absolutely Satisfactory or Money Refunded.

In ordering please state whether for Victor, Victor Victrola, Edison with metal or rubber connection, Columbia Disc with new or old style tone arm or Columbia Cylinder. Information and circular matter free.

THE DEAF CAN HEAR

If you are deaf or hard of hearing, do not fail to send your name and address today and get our Electrophone on 30 DAYS HOME TRIAL

It is a tiny but powerful electrical device, a truly wonderful little instrument, perfect to such a degree that many deaf people can now hear the faintest sound and enjoy all the pleasures of church, public speaking or ordinary conversation. It magnifies sound—restores added hearing power, renders makeshift drums, etc., useless, makes you hear and gradually restores your hearing. Almost invisible—carries in the clothing and leaves both hands free. Over 10,000 in use. Enthusiastic testimonials from responsible people.

The Electrophone in use—almost invisible.

What They Say About It

"I think the Electrophone is the best device for people that are hard of hearing that there is on the market, as I have tried everything that I ever saw advertised."
W. A. HAGGIN, Union, Iowa.

"If it could not be replaced, nothing short of a load of hay would compel me to part with it. Enclose self addressed envelope and stamp and I will cheerfully give anyone information within my knowledge." R. T. Roberts, Sidnaw, Mich. Roycroft Farm.

Get an Electrophone on 30 days' home trial and experience for yourself how easily it will make you hear—anywhere—without strain or effort. Send coupon now for our offer and long list of satisfied users.

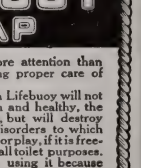
Little Scalps Kept Clean with LIFEBUOY SOAP



CHILDREN need more attention than grown-ups in taking proper care of the hair and scalp.

A frequent shampoo with Lifebuoy will not only keep the scalp clean and healthy, the hair vigorous and glossy, but will destroy the germs of infectious disorders to which they are exposed at school or play, if it is freely used for the Bath and all toilet purposes.

They like it and enjoy using it because it "feels so good."

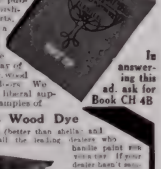
Be Proud of Your LAWN

Home owners everywhere are happy over the remarkable grass-growing efficiency of

KALAKA
The Wizard Lawn Producer

You sow Kalaka just like any grass seed; water it and it springs into life.



It is seed and fertilizer combined. Choicest seeds scientifically mixed with a powerful concentrate of dried cattle manure, from which all dirt, dust, chaff and foreign matter are eliminated. Kalaka is even like any grass seed but goes further than same quantity of ordinary seed.
